13. Inoculation is not recommended by the Department of Agriculture, and it is believed that its adoption with animals that are to be afterwards sold to go into other herds would counteract the good results which would otherwise follow from the slaughter of diseased animals. It may, however, be practiced by State authorities under the following rules:

14. No herds but those in which pleuro-pneumonia has appeared are to be inoculated.

15. Inoculated herds are to be quarantined with lock and chain on each animal, the quarantine restrictions are to remain in force as long as any inoculated cattle survive, and these animals are to leave the premises only for immediate slaughter.

16. Fresh animals are to be taken into inoculated herds only at the risk of the owner, and shall be subject to the same rules as the other cattle of the inoculated herd.

17. The chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry is to be promptly notified by the State authorities of each herd inoculated, of the final disposition of each member of the herd, of the post mortem appearances, and of any other facts in the history of the herd which may prove of value.

The co-operation of governors, of State live-stock commissions, and of other officers who may be in charge of the branch of the service provided for the control of the contagious diseases of animals in the States where pleuro-pneumonia exists, is earnestly requested under these rules and regulations, which have been framed with a view of securing uniform and efficient action throughout the whole infected district. It is hoped that with a vigorous enforcement of such regulations, the disease may be prevented from extending beyond its present limits, and may be in time entirely eradicated.

NORMAN J. COLMAN,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 2, 1886.

The State of New York was not represented at the conference, as the State Veterinarian, Professor James Law, was then attending to some business in the Western States. After returning, however, he gave it as his opinion that with a large number of infected herds known to exist on Long Island and in the city of New York and vicinity, it would be unwise to attempt to control the plague with the present small appropriation.

The governor of New Jersey has not accepted the rules, and I learn from the chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry that in his correspondence with the secretary of the State board of health, which board has charge of the diseases of animals in this State, the obstacles to co-operation were rules 8 and 15. The objection to rule 8 was removed by an offer from this Department to change the reading from "without the consent of the proper officers of the Department of Agriculture" to "without due notice to the proper officers of the Department of Agriculture."

This concession was also made to the State of Illinois, but the experience of the last four months leads me to the opinion that it would be wiser for this Department to adhere to the original reading. State authorities sometimes have very different ideas as to the time when it is safe to remove quarantine restrictions from those entertained by the officers of this Department. They consequently object to restrictions which they can not remove at will. On the other hand, if the National Government appropriates money to pay the expenses of this work there certainly should be some guarantee that the proper regulations are enforced.

The objection to rule 15 still stands in the way of co-operation with New Jersey. The State authorities have adopted the practice of inoculation and release the inoculated herds from quarantine after a short period of isolation. After carefully considering the question and all the scientific evidence bearing upon it, I am of the opinion that it is useless to attempt to eradicate pleuro-pneumonia in States where inoculation is practiced and where inoculated animals are afterward allowed to mingle with the cattle and other herds. The money expended in purchasing diseased animals for slaughter under such conditions is consequently largely wasted, and for this reason I have decided not to expend any part of the appropriation for this purpose in States where inoculation is practiced.

I have, however, assisted the State authorities of New Jersey by employing one or more veterinarians nearly the whole time, whose duty it has been to investigate reported outbreaks of disease and give such aid as was needed in inspection and in forcing the State quarantine regulations. Thirty-one infected herds have been reported from this State, containing 530 animals, of which 42 were diseased.

The Governor of Pennsylvania has also failed to accept these rules and regulations. His reasons for not acting upon them are unknown to me. The Governor's agent in charge of the pleuro-pneumonia work raised some objections to rule 15, but admitted that its enforcement would make no great difference to the State. Inoculation is, also, practiced by the Pennsylvania authorities, but with the small number of outbreaks reported it would certainly be advisable to slaughter all diseased and exposed animals, and thus rid the State of the plague at once.

Virginia is the only remaining State infected with pleuro-pneumonia where the authorities have not accepted the rules and regulations. I have called the attention of the Governor to the desirability of eradicating the disease from this State, but up to the present he has taken no action.

The Governors of Delaware and Maryland have accepted the rules and regulations as issued, and without modification of any kind. No cases of pleuro-pneumonia have been reported from Delaware since such acceptance.

Co-operation with the authorities of Maryland has been more satisfactory than with those with any other State. The local laws are good, and the work has been very largely in the hands of the inspectors of this department. The number of infected herds reported from this State is 196, containing 2,277 animals, of which 705 were diseased. Dr. Wray, the inspector who has been in charge of the work in Maryland since September 20, reported under date of December 7 that since the former date 122 herds, containing 1,354 animals, had been put in quarantine; and that 92 herds containing 1,089 animals were still held under such restrictions. Since July 1, this Department has purchased and slaughtered in Maryland 308 diseased cattle for which $7,069 was paid, being an average of about $23 per head.

I inclose with this communication tables giving the name and address of the owners of infected herds in New Jersey and Maryland, together with the number of animals and other information reported to this Department, as it appears on the books of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

In Maryland the quarantine has been made very efficient by placing a chain fastened with a numbered lock around the horns, or, with hornless cattle, around the neck of every exposed animal. This has prevented the substitution of one animal for another, and it has also led to the prompt detection of any quarantined cattle which have been allowed to stray beyond the boundaries of the infected premises. The sick animals have been promptly slaughtered, and it is believed that the good effects of this work are already seen in the decreased number of new herds infected.

In a number of cases where infected herds have been of unusual danger to surrounding cattle this Department has purchased and destroyed the sick animals, and the State has then condemned and slaughtered the remainder of the herd, thus entirely eradicating the disease at once. Unfortunately the State appropriation has not been large enough to do this in as many cases as deemed desirable.

I have made no recent investigations, in Pennsylvania, and have no official information as to the status of the plague there. I learn, however, that the governor's agent, Mr. T. J. Edge, reports that during the year ending November 30, 1886, one hundred and twenty-eight diseased animals were condemned and slaughtered.

In closing I desire to urge upon the committee the necessity of legislation granting to this Department power to carry out the measures required for extirpating pleuro-pneumonia untrammeled by State laws or State authorities, if it is expected to promptly suppress this disease. The task is a difficult one at best, and I fear that under any plan of co-operation our history will be that of England, where for years the failure of local authorities to enforce the required regulations has not only perpetuated the contagion, but allows such frequent and alarming extensions as have lately occurred.

Trusting that the information given above will be found satisfactory, I am, very respectfully,

NORMAN J. COLMAN,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

Hon. W. H. HATCH,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE] yield the floor?

Mr. SWINBURNE. I reserve the residue of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7208) to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, and for other purposes," approved May 29, 1884, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its Clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 6313) to release unto the city of San Antonio, Tex., for its use as a public thoroughfare certain portions of the military reservation near said city.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 1201) granting a pension to Louise Ambrecht;

A bill (S. 1481) granting an increase of pension to Col. Charles E. Capehart;

A bill (S. 1844) granting a pension to Orrin P. Cooley;

A bill (S. 2334) granting a pension to Isaac Ransom;

A bill (S. 2587) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ward;

A bill (S. 1213) to regulate insurance in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 1212) for the further protection of property from fire and safety of lives in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of land on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas; also, that the Senate requested a conference with the House on the said bill and amendments, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PLUMB, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. BERRY.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House now adjourn

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rules, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 12, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CAMDEN, N. J.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 228) for the erection of a public building at Camden, N. J., returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment, and calls the attention of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] to it. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment of the House of Representatives is after the word "therein," at the end of the bill, to add:

Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $100,000 for site and building.

Mr. SEWELL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendment was concurred in.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, recommending that permission be granted Rear-Admiral Ralph Chandler to accept a vase presented to him by the Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions of the Illinois State Board of Agriculture, calling attention to the necessity of speedily enacting a law for the suppression of all contagious diseases among cattle; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the editor of the Lake Borgne Outlet (newspaper) in reference to improving all the water-courses of the country; which was referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of citizens of Gardiner, Me., praying that the name of Robert Foss, formerly a member of Company A, First Battalion Maine Volunteers, be placed on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Frances A. Andrews, of Eden, Me., praying that her name may be placed on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of I. Painter & Sons, and others, iron-workers, of Pittsburgh, Pa.; the petition of Emile Scheppers and others, citizens of Philadelphia; the petitions of the Van Stans Stratena Company, by R. S. Pettet, manager, of Philadelphia; the petition of Hastings & Co., of Philadelphia; and the petition of J. Hambleton &

Sons, druggists, of Philadelphia, praying for a reduction of internal-revenue taxes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented the petition of P. F. Milligan, of Washington, D. C., praying that an appropriation be made to enable him to demonstrate the practicability of preventing accidents on railroads; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. STANFORD presented the petition of W. W. Bowers, of San Diego, Cal., with statement of leading citizens, praying legislation in reference to the ejectment of Charles Hensley and others from the Capitan Grande reservation in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. EUSTIS presented a petition of merchants, planters, steamboatmen, officers of the General Government, and others, in the State of Louisiana, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of Bayou La Fourche; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a petition of the New Hampshire survivors of rebel prisons, praying the delegation from the State of New Hampshire to use their influence and vote for the so-called Morrill bill, being the bill (H. R. 8098) as being in their opinion of much value to the interests of the ex-prisoners of war. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented the petition of Dr. William Kenney, of Paris, Ky., praying compensation for medicines, medical appliances, and professional services furnished the Eighteenth Kentucky Volunteers during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by the Illinois State Board of Agriculture, urging the immediate enactment of legislation for the suppression of contagious diseases among cattle; which were rereferred to the Committee on Agriculture.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STANFORD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., in reference to naval fortifications, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses; which was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9644) for the erection of a public building at Jefferson, Tex., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1974) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Hastings, Nebr., reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1794) for the relief of Samuel A. B. Woodford, of Clark County, Kentucky, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. 3118) for the relief of Samuel A. B. Woodford; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Coast Defenses, I present an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 662) to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern army ordnance, armor, and other army purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern army warfare.

It will be remembered that the bill referred to is a bill on the Calendar to provide a plant for the manufacture of heavy ordnance and armament. The amendment proposes that an appropriation of $5,000,000 be made, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the purpose of the construction of fortifications and other works of coast defense, in accordance with the recommendation of the board on fortifications and other defenses appointed by the President of the United States under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and laid on the table.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of a letter of the Secretary of State addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, with reference to the desire of the Government of Spain that currants and raisins should pay the same duty in the United States, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance; which was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 707) for the relief of J. R. Martin;

A bill (H. R. 2086) for the relief of Francis M. Bell;

A bill (H. R. 5652) for the relief of James W. Goodrich;

A bill (H. R. 5651) for the relief of David W. Low;

A bill (H. R. 1455) for the relief of Lysander H. Carroll; and

A bill (H. R. 8297) for the relief of Frank Shutt.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10397) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10242) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I give notice that to-morrow, if it be convenient, I shall call up these bills.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to Josiah Mahoney, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Claims to report favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 3052) to extend the time for filing claims in the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to July 31, 1801."

I ask for the present consideration of the bill. It is important that it should go down to the other House and become a law before the 20th of January.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Claims was, in line 9, before the word "months," to strike out "six" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

That the time for filing claims in the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801," approved January 20, 1885, be, and the same is hereby, extended for an additional period of twelve months.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 3119) to facilitate promotion and retire from active service, upon their own application, officers of the Army who served during the war of the rebellion three years as officers or enlisted men of the volunteer or regular Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3120) for the relief of Daniel B. Washburn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (S. 3121) for the erection of a public building at Hanover, N. H.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BLAIR. I introduce a bill to provide for the erection of a public building in the town of Hanover, in the State of New Hampshire. The president of Dartmouth College has written me in reference to the matter. The bill has been drawn with a preamble setting forth the circumstances, as follows:

Whereas a large part of the town of Hanover, in the county of Grafton and State of New Hampshire, including the building for many years used and occupied as a post-office by the United States, with the hotel, boarding places, and most of the business portion of said town, has lately been destroyed by fire; and

Whereas Dartmouth College, an ancient and honorable seat of learning in this country, whose influence has conferred innumerable and inestimable benefits upon the nation and upon mankind, is located in the town of Hanover, creating most of the business thereof, and is the chief sufferer by the aforesaid calamity, being seriously crippled thereby in its charitable and educational work; and

Whereas the postal facilities and convenience of said town were never adequate or appropriate to the just demands of an institution of such dignity, importance, and wide usefulness, and in the rebuilding of the part of the town destroyed by fire this deficiency should be supplied by the erection of a proper building for the accommodation of said institution and the surrounding community: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c.

A bill in the ordinary form making an appropriation of $30,000 for that purpose.

I ask the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 3122) to provide for the erection of a public building in the town of Hanover, in the State of New Hampshire, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. EUSTIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3123) for the relief of Fanny B. Randolph and Dora L. Stark, sisters, of Avoyelles Parish, State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 3124) granting a pension to Daniel W. Demarest; which, with the accompanying papers, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CALL, it was Ordered by the Senate, That the papers and exhibits accompanying the amendment to the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, &c., proposed June 25, 1886, providing for payment of the claim of Charles F. Hopkins and William C. Sollee, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

INDEXES TO REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed the indexes to the compilation of House and Senate reports of committees provided for in Public Resolution 24, first session, Forty-ninth Congress.

CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS BY FEDERAL OFFICIALS.

Mr. VEST. I offer a resolution, and ask for its consideration at this time.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of the Treasury furnish to this body a full and complete statement, by itemized account, of all money paid out for or on account, directly or indirectly, of prosecutions of criminal causes in State courts by Federal officials of the Department of Justice, Department of the Interior, and the Secret Service Bureau of the Treasury Department, from the 1st day of July, 1879, to the 1st day of December, 1886, together with a list of all such officials or agents or employés engaged in such prosecutions, and the amount each received and for what specific services it was paid, and to state by what authority of law such proceedings have been carried on and payments made, and what pecuniary interest or vested rights the United States had connected with such prosecutions in said State courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. INGALLS. Let it go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

POTOMAC RIVER NAVIGATION.

Mr. MAHONE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce inquire what legislation by Congress is necessary to provide the means for keeping open the navigation of the Potomac River when obstructed by ice, and to report by bill or otherwise.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department, to be known as the department of agriculture and labor; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

STEAMER NUEVO MOCTEZUMA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions the Calendar is in order under the eighth rule.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate take up for consideration Order of Business 1768, being the bill (S. 2791) to provide for an American register for the steamer Nuevo Moctezuma, of Philadelphia, Pa.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CAMERON. I move to amend the bill, in line 4, by changing the letter "n" in Montezuma to the letter "c," making it read "Moctezuma" instead of "Montezuma."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that amendment will be made.

Mr. FRYE. Did that bill receive the approval of our committee?

Mr. CAMERON. Yes, it was reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for an American register for the steamer Nuevo Moctezuma, of Philadelphia, Pa."

HIRAM BERDAN.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1467, being the bill (S. 2619). I will make a little statement in regard to it at this time, if I may be permitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PLATT. The bill was reached at the last session and objected to by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. The bill as originally reported by the Committee on Patents was very much more sweeping in its character than the amendment which I have offered. The amendment has been prepared to meet the objection made by the Senator from Vermont, and is entirely satisfactory to him. I hope the Senate will consider it at this time.

Mr. VEST. It is a very ungracious thing to object to the consideration of a bill or to oppose a motion of this sort, but I think we ought to take the Calendar up and dispose of it regularly. If we are going into a scramble for respective bills, let us understand it. I have sat here without objecting now for some four or five days, while one bill after another has been called up, and I have refrained from saying anything because I did not want to put myself in the attitude of being an objector or obstructionist; but I do insist that we take up the Calendar and dispose of the bills on it in their order, or else have no Calendar at all. Let us do one thing or the other.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Missouri reserve his objection till after this bill is disposed of? I think he ought not to make it on me when he has sat still and let other Senators call up bills.

Mr. VEST. Objection has to be made somewhere, and I know nobody whose equanimity of temper would submit to it more readily than my friend from Connecticut.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill is in order.

Mr. PLATT. It will only take a moment, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2619) authorizing a settlement of the claim of Hiram Berdan, assignee of the Berdan Fire-Arms Manufacturing Company.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. The bill has been read, and there is an amendment in the nature of a substitute, proposed by me, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator from Missouri will hear the amendment read I think he will have no objection to it whatever.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the claim of Hiram Berdan, as alleged assignee of the Berdan Fire-Arms Manufacturing Company of New York, for the alleged adoption and use by the Government of the United States of certain alleged inventions relating to improvements in breech-loading fire-arms alleged to have been made by the said Hiram Berdan, and for which it is alleged letters patent of the United States were issued to the Berdan Fire-Arms Manufacturing Company, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, which court is hereby invested with jurisdiction in the premises, and whose duty it shall be to hear, determine, and render judgment according to law, nothing whatever being conceded by this act further than the granting jurisdiction to the said court to hear, try, and determine upon said claim.

SEC. 2. That the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party is hereby granted, subject to the laws applicable to general appeals from said Court of Claims.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to make a short statement.

The bill as originally reported by the Committee on Patents was of much wider sweep than the pending bill introduced by way of amendment. The substitute which the committee now recommends has been framed to meet the objections of the Senator from Vermont, and gives to General Berdan nothing except the right to go to the Court of Claims and have his case determined upon the law as it stands. It does not remove the bar of the statute of limitations. It concedes nothing whatever to him except the right to try his case as assignee of the Berdan Fire-Arms Company.

The necessity for it is this: The contract originally made with the Government was made by the Berdan Fire-Arms Company, but that company was largely General Berdan himself, and he now desires to go to court as the assignee of the company and try his case. There is nothing conceded by the amendment whatever. He goes purely upon his legal rights, except so far as he is allowed to bring the case in his own name as assignee.

Mr. COCKRELL. As assignee of the company?

Mr. PLATT. As assignee of the company which furnished the arms to the Government, and, as I said, he was largely the company himself.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did the corporation make the invention?

Mr. PLATT. He made the invention. He is the inventor himself.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I thought. Then did he assign the patent to this company?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, of which he was the principal member. The company has now gone out of existence, and when it went out of existence re-assigned to him all claims that it had against the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. As this is one of the cases where compensation is being claimed for the use of patents relating to the changing of guns and so on, I desire simply to read a letter from a very intelligent gentleman from Springfield, Mass., dated January 9, 1887, to a Senator on this floor in regard to the bill that was up involving a similar point, the bill for the relief of Erskine S. Allin. We heard a great deal about the subject at that time, and I should like to put this letter on record:

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., January 9, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I wish to give you a bit of history concerning the bill for the relief of heirs of Erskine S. Allin, formerly master armorer of United States Armory in this city A few years since (before Allin's claim to a patent) all inventors of breech-loading fire-arms were invited to the Springfield Armory for a test in firing and examination of arms. Some twenty, more or less, were represented, which resulted in no choice of either arm represented; two or three being spoken of favorably.

After the trial of each arm they were taken to Allin's office, dissevered, and every part photographed. What for? Within a period of two years or thereabouts, Allin, with the assistance of the skilled artisans in the machine shop, where there were three or four his superiors in inventive genius and workmanship, assisted him with their own ideas and the photos alluded to, produced the famous "Allin breech-loading arm." Ask any of the representatives of arms at the trial aforesaid if they were treated fairly.

Mr. PLATT. Who is the author of the letter?

Mr. COCKRELL. A gentleman of responsibility, character, and standing; as honorable as Mr. Allin was in his position.

Mr. PLATT. That may all be——

Mr. COCKRELL. And this is only a sample of these patent claims; a sample of the one I gave the other day in the discussion of the Allin bill, of the poor widow woman who came down here and pleaded for an extension of a patent-right for the benefit of herself, and when she was brought under oath before the Committee on Patents it was disclosed that her tears and sympathy were all founded upon $20,000 to be given to her by the assignee in the event that the patent-right was extended.

Mr. PLATT. To whom does the Senator refer? What poor widow's case? When?

Mr. COCKRELL. I can get you a reference to the case. It was only a few years ago, and was a case well known here.

Mr. PLATT. I did not know but that it was something which had been before the committee, or ought to have been before the committee when I was chairman.

Mr. DAWES. I did not hear the first part of the Senator's letter read.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. COCKRELL. Of course. I am done.

Mr. HOAR. By the phrase used that that is "a sample of the patent claims," does the Senator mean to say that the inventors of this country are not as a class as honest, and that their claims are not as a class as honest, as those of any other class of persons, for instance, confederate sufferers by the late war?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Massachusetts knows just as well as he knows his existence that I think no such thing and made no such intimation, directly or indirectly. The patentees of this country are not coming to Congress. Not one out of ten thousand, not one out of fifteen thousand of them is bringing any claim against the Government. It is only a few, a precious few—"few and far between," like angels' visits, thank God!

Mr. HOAR. The Senator, after stating a case of apparently attempted imposition, said that that was only a specimen of these patent claims. Wherever there is a military or naval invention, or an invention of anything that is used in the administration of any of the Departments of the Government, the Government, as a rule, takes that invention, uses it, and leaves the party who has made it to come to Congress for relief. Having been a member of the Committee on Patents for a good many years, representing a community whose inventive faculty is conceded by all mankind to be certainly as great as that of any other in the country or in the world, I assert that the men who bring these claims for redress here come here as reluctantly, as honestly, as fairly, and as justly as any other class of citizens, and I do not mean in the least to convey any imputation against the constituents of the Senator when I say that they will compare in all those particulars at least on equal terms with the confederates who come with claims against the Government for losses sustained.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know what confederates have ever come here. I have never heard of any except those that the Senator from Massachusetts has reported in favor of. If there has ever been a confederate soldier who was a soldier and devoted to the confederate cause, who has come to Congress for any relief, I will guarantee that the Senator from Massachusetts was one of the men who favored his claim. I have never done it.

Mr. HOAR. Exactly, Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. One moment. There has been no such claim that I know of. I was casting no reflection upon patentees. I am in favor of preserving the rights of patentees to the fullest extent—as much so as the Senator from Massachusetts. We have a large number of patentees in my own State, and I am for the protection of their rights and their interests; but when a patentee, as this man Allin, who was in the employ of the United States Government, receiving a large salary, devotes his time, paid for by the Government, and uses the skilled labor in the armory in Massachusetts, and uses all the machinery and material which the Government can purchase and furnish, and then, as this letter shows, after all the skilled artisans and inventors of the United States have been invited there to test their arms, takes them and takes advantage of them, and takes them into a room and has them photographed, and then gets up a pretended patent, and then, conscious of all he has done, makes an absolute and unqualified conveyance of that patent to the United States in order that the United States might use it, and in his patent assignment gives the consideration, and then dies, and his heirs come in here and ask $30,000 for such a claim as that, I have a right to criticise that class of patent claimants. It is that class, and that class alone, that I am criticising.

Mr. President, I simply read this because that bill had been up and I have not had time to examine the report in this case. This may be a similar case or it may not be. I am not classing this with that particular case, but I want to put on record the truth of history in regard to the other claim; and it was that class of claims to which I referred. I do not know whether Mr. Allin was a citizen of Massachusetts or not. I was not casting any reflection upon Massachusetts or any patentee.

Mr. HOAR. If my friend will allow me to interrupt him one moment——

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri says that when a claim of a confederate soldier comes here I am as likely to be found in support of it as anybody; and that is true. I propose to meet that claim and all others with a discussion of the individual merit of the case, and I never have been and never expect to be, as the Senator I think well knows, but as what he said implies, frightened from my duty of doing justice to an individual by any of these general phrases that a certain class of claims or a certain class of citizens are not entitled to respect.

Now if the Senator confines himself to that method of dealing with this claim nobody can object.

Mr. COCKRELL. Am I not doing it?

Mr. HOAR. What I object to is that, when a particular claim which the Senator attacked without knowledge was pending, the Senator said—I do not know whether he was aware of the full force of his utterance—"that is a specimen of these patent claims." If I had got up when some claim from his State arose, and I had pointed out its invalidity, "that is a specimen of the claims that come from his State," or "a specimen of the claims that come from confederate soldiers," or anything of that sort, I should have been doing what seemed to me, with great respect to my honorable friend, an unworthy thing—unworthy of a Senator. Now, I do not mean to say that the Senator meant to do that after his disclaimer, which I accept cheerfully. I suppose all he meant to say was that there were certain claims for inventions that came here which were not proper; but certainly the Senator's phrase was one which I think if it had been applied to any class of his constituents he would have thought ought not to have been so applied.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I have been pursuing precisely the same course in regard to these patent claims that the Senator from Massachusetts speaks of. A number of them have been passed, one from the State of the Senator last session after I had objected to it. It passed, and I made a motion to reconsider it, and after I had examined it fully I withdrew that motion. There was also one from the State of the Senator from Iowa. There are certain cases against the Government which are brought by men in the employ of the Government, and they are attempting to mulct the Government in sums which are not just, and I honestly believe that the case which was passed the other day, of Allin, is a rich specimen of that particular class of claims that are urged against the Government by men who are in the employ of the Government and paid for their services, the assistance and material being furnished by the Government.

Mr. DAWES. I have appealed to the Senator several times to do me the favor to read again such portions of that letter as he has seen fit to read to the Senate, in order that I might hear them, I having some special relation to that case as a former Representative from the district. I should like very much to hear it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will read it.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., January 9, 1887.

DEAR SIR:—

This is not addressed to me, but addressed to Senator BECK—

I wish to give you a bit of history concerning the bill for the relief of heirs of Erskine S. Allin, formerly master armorer of United States Armory in this city. A few years since (before Allin's claim to a patent) all inventors of breech-loading fire-arms were invited to the Springfield Armory for a test in firing and examination of arms. Some twenty, more or less, were represented, which resulted in no choice of either arm represented; two or three being spoken of favorably.

After the trial of each arm, they were taken to Allin's office, dissevered, and every part photographed. What for? Within a period of two years or thereabouts, Allin, with the assistance of the skilled artisans in the machine shop, where there were three or four his superiors in inventive genius and workmanship, assisted him with their own ideas and the photos alluded to, produced the famous "Allin breech-loading arm." Ask any of the representatives of arms at the trial aforesaid if they were treated fairly.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I stated when the Allin bill was before the Senate that although Mr. Allin had been employed in the Springfield Armory fifty years, and I had represented the district in the other branch eighteen years and had been here for some years, I had never seen any member of his family; so I have no personal relation to this matter, but I knew him and the people of the vicinity knew him very thoroughly and quite as well, I am confident, as any man who after all this hearing writes a letter here giving views of the subject diametrically opposed to the facts found in the case, and withholds his name. I do not know who the gentleman is, and I shall indulge in no animadversions on the character of any such gentleman whom I do not know.

I mean to say that Mr. Allin and Mr. Allin's representatives are in character and in position, and in title to credit, above all reproach, and this gentleman coming here after the Department has investigated the whole subject and recommended the measure, after a committee of this Senate has investigated all the facts and recommended the bill, is too late in the field of controversy to be entitled to credit. The very statement which he makes is altogether and absolutely in the face of the record.

The patent bears date the 19th of December, 1865. The order calling together the board, to which he refers in his letter, bears date January 30, 1866, after the patent was granted and after Mr. Allin's invention was perfected.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is not the board to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. PLATT. Yes, it is.

Mr. DAWES. It had no possible chance to reflect upon the validity of his patent. Any gentleman, I say, who will come here after the Department has examined the subject, and after the facts found by this committee, and after the Senate has passed upon it, ought to furnish his name to the public and take the responsibility of his statement. I have nothing to say against him personally, for I do not know who he is, but I stand here responsible for the character of those who have presented this claim to Congress, and I assert that they are above any possible attempt at fraud, either in obtaining a patent or in presenting a claim for fair and equitable remuneration for the use of the patent, or in any other respect whatever.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I did not expect to do anything to provoke any such discussion as this. The letter read by the Senator from Missouri was written to me by a man whom I never saw, but he is a respectable man and is himself an ex-armorer and inspector. I have looked that up as a matter of history. The letter corroborates exactly what the man himself had said in his contract with the United States, which is dated in October, 1867, after the action of the board referred to. Mr. Allin said this:

Whereas Erskine S. Allin, in the county of Hampden and State of Massachusetts, has invented certain new and useful improvements in breech-loading firearms; and

Whereas the United States has aided in developing, perfecting, and applying to practical use the said improvement by furnishing to said Allin, at the United States Armory in Springfield, Mass., the labor, material, and other requisites to that end:

Now be it known that, for and in consideration of the aid aforesaid, and $1 received by me, the said Allin, I have granted, bargained, and sold, and by these presents do grant, bargain, and sell and assign to the United States of America, the right to manufacture the said improvement in all the armories and arsenals of the United States, and the right to use said improvement so manufactured every where, together with the right, title, and interest that I have, or may have, to said improvement under any letters patent dated December 19, 1865, or any renewal or extension thereof that have been or may be granted therefor to the extent of the grant and license aforesaid to manufacture and use said improvement.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 30th day of October, 1867.

[SEAL.] E. S. ALLIN.

Now, a gentleman who is himself an ex-armorer and inspector writes a letter to me in which he justifies the votes of twenty-one of us who on the yeas and nays refused to pay Allin any more money, though he had a claim of $100,000, and gentlemen on the other side cut it down to $30,000. He himself stated that he had the aid of the United States in developing, perfecting, and applying his invention to practical use, and that he had used the labor, the materials, and other requisites furnished by the United States. In this letter it is said he did, and I say he did.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWES. All that was stated frankly by him. The question now is whether he has committed a fraud.

Mr. BECK. This does not charge him with committing any fraud. The letter charges that the Senate of the United States, in the opinion of the writer, which opinion I agree with, had no right to give Mr. Allin any more than he had got by his contract. That is what this gentleman says, and if you will go to Springfield I have no doubt he will furnish you the proof.

Mr. DAWES. The position of the Senator was that he had committed a fraud in obtaining a patent by means of photographing other people's patents, and had then come here and set up a claim for pay.

Mr. BECK. This shows the reasons he had for making that contract. He knew that he had received that aid and all the materials and all the assistance from the United States, and from their officers and from their employés; and in consideration of all these things, while the matter was fresh and all the facts were known, he gave the United States the right to use his invention. The writer of the letter complains, and I complain, that the Senate has no business to give Allin or his representatives $30,000 more in the face of such a contract and in the face of the fact that he himself admitted in his contract with the United States the aid he had received; and the Senator from Missouri was right in saying that, after the man, at the time, had agreed that he had received full compensation for the conveyance he made, that class of claims coming twenty years afterward and brought by committees before the Senate on appeals to equity, or appeals to mercy, or because of poverty or anything else, are not claims which are meritorious or which the Senate ought to consider.

I do not propose to give the gentleman's name who writes this letter to me, though it is not marked personal. The facts are sustained by Allin's own conveyance.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, this discussion is all outside of the bill which is now before the Senate, and I do not propose to reply to the gentlemen who have discussed the matter which passed the Senate the other day. I simply wish to say with regard to this present bill that General Berdan asks nothing of Congress. He asks permission to go to the Court of Claims and stand there on his legal rights and make out a case if he can. I imagine there can be no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me ask the Senator from Connecticut one question. Was Mr. Berdan in the employ of the Government at the time the patent was granted?

Mr. PLATT. He was not. General Berdan, as the Senator will remember, was a distinguished officer of the volunteer force.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know that; but I am asking as to his position when this patent was issued.

Mr. PLATT. He never was in the employ of the Government, as I understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not an employé working for the Government at the time of the invention and issuance of the patent?

Mr. PLATT. No, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted on its amendments to the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SKINNER, Mr. PEEL, and Mr. PERKINS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8599) providing an additional circuit judge in the second judicial circuit, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY ACQUIRED BY THE UNITED STATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is now in order.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1884.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2920) amending section 3749 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. The interstate-commerce report was before the Senate yesterday, and it is the desire of the committee having it in charge that we vote on it to-day. There are several gentlemen who desire to speak, and I hope we shall proceed to the consideration of that report at once, so that all may have an opportunity who desire to be heard. I move, if it is in order——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the motion of the Senator from Kansas, the Chair is of opinion that a motion to proceed to the consideration of a conference report is a privileged motion.

Mr. CULLOM. I make that motion.

Mr. INGALLS. I presume that debate is not strictly in order, but I venture to express the hope that the Senator from Illinois will not feel it to be his duty to insist upon a final vote on the interstate-commerce bill to-day. I know that there are many Senators who desire to be heard upon various phases of the measure, and the debate already has developed in the press and in the other organs of public opinion a feeling of intense interest, and much has been expressed which I think has been profitable to those who are engaged in the consideration of this subject.

But I rose merely for the purpose at this time of asking the Senator if he would not consent at least to postpone his motion until the bill which I moved has been considered by the Senate. It is one reported by the Judiciary Committee at the instance of one of the Departments of the Government, and is for the convenience of administration. The bill is brief, and I am confident that no debate will ensue.

Mr. CULLOM. If there is to be no debate on the bill I shall, of course, yield until the Senator has an opportunity of having it considered.

Mr. INGALLS. I am sure there ought to be no debate. Of course I can not insure that there will be none.

Mr. CULLOM. With the understanding that I may be allowed, if the bill in the Senator's charge shall cause debate, to make the motion again to take up and consider the conference report, I will not object.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator will have the right to make his motion at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2920).

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2920) amending section 3749 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The amendments were: In line 6, after the word "the" where it first occurs, to strike out "solicitor" and insert "secretary;" in line 7, after the word "authorized," to strike out "with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury;" in line 9, after the word "sale," to insert "and convey;" in the same line, before the word "lands," to strike out "unproductive;" and in line 13, before the word "gift," to insert "private;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 3749 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3749. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to rent, for a period not exceeding three years, or to sell at public sale, and convey, any lands or other property of the United States acquired, under judicial process or otherwise in the collection of debts, or acquired absolutely and without any condition, use, or trust attaching thereto, by private gift, grant, or devise, after advertising the time, place, and conditions of such sale for three months preceding the same in some newspaper published in the vicinity thereof, in such manner and upon such terms as he, in his judgment, may deem to be most advantageous to the public interest."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury bearing on this subject may be printed in the RECORD in connection with the action upon the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 1, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that in or about the month of September, A. D. 1884, the United States became seized in fee of certain real estate under and by virtue of a devise contained in the will of Nancy J. Goold, late of Portland, Me., deceased. Administration upon her estate has now been closed, and it is deemed advisable and to the public interest that said real estate shall be disposed of.

The question of power under existing statutes of the Department to sell the land has been referred to the Solicitor of the Treasury for his opinion, which he gives, in substance, to the effect that further legislation will be required for that purpose.

I therefore have the honor to request your committee, if in their opinion compatible with the public interests, to prepare and report for passage a bill for an act containing suitable general provisions for this case, as well as all others of like character which may arise in the future.

In this connection I desire to call your attention to certain provisions contained in the act of August 7, 1882 (22 Statutes, 319), in the following words: "The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to sell such lands as have been acquired by the United States by devise upon such terms and after such public notice by advertisement as he may deem best for the public interest," which the Solicitor had under consideration in forming his opinion. He recommends that the phraseology of the new act be something as follows: The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to sell any real estate which has been or may hereafter be acquired by the United States by devise, &c.

Respectfully, yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, United States Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture and to create an executive department to be known as the department of agriculture and labor, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. I move to proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the interstate-commerce bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire to submit some observations to the Senate upon the pending report of the conference committee on the intrstate-commerce bill. I concur with Senators who have said that this bill is one of great importance in view of the interests to be affected by it. As I understand the function of the Senate and the duty of a Senator here, it is to consider and weigh with great care and deliberation the ideas connected with a measure, and to act according to his best judgment. The Senate under our organic law, with the House of Representatives, are required to judge for themselves, not to accept the opinions of others, but to formulate such laws as will carry into effect just and wise objects of public policy. In investigating carefully the conference report and the bill which is the result of the report, we must look, I think, somewhat to the grievances which are proposed to be remedied, their origin, and their present effect upon the people.

The origin of the great public grievances which this bill seeks to remedy and which the country at large demands should be remedied is to be found in the improvident legislation of the different States creating corporations and giving them all the rights possessed by a rational person, the right to make contracts and be contracted with; the right to hold real and personal estate; the right of perpetual succession; the right of exclusive transportation over designated lines and areas of country; the right to issue bonds and securities. These powers were conferred on these artificial persons for the public benefit, but under their exercise they have been used to issue securities that impose upon the people of this country burdens greater than the war debt, without reference to the money expended, the labor used, or the cost of construction. They carry with them a power of taxation greater than was reserved to the people in their governmental capacity as States or as a National Government. That is the fact. It can not be denied.

With the Government professedly based upon the theory of protection of persons and property, upon the idea that no property shall be taken from a man except by law, the law of a body in which he shall be represented and by consent of his representatives, the fact is that a power has been created with a greater right of taxation without representation of the people, without responsibility to them, a power which in fact takes from them a greater sum of money than that drawn by the National Government and the State governments for the public and authorized purposes of government.

How shall we deal with this question? Is it an important question? Is it the least important question connected with this subject? It is estimated, and reasonably and justly estimated, in the authorities which were read by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and others, that a mortgage of over three thousand million dollars has been imposed upon the labor of this country and an annual exaction of between two and three hundred million dollars forced under these powers granted by the States from the labor of the country, forced from the most necessitous classes of the country, for what? Without the expenditure of any effort, money, or capital, without any justification except that the power to enforce it and to extort it from the people has grown up under the forms of law with the sanction of the courts. Three hundred million dollars of annual taxation demanded, and in fact collected, from the laboring classes of this country, and without any consideration, for false and pretended uses of money, for that which would be a fraud in a private individual, with the sanction of corporate power for absolutely nothing in any just system of economy.

This vast sum of money, this annual tax of $300,000,000, must be subtracted from the necessities of the people; it must be taken from that which otherwise, being the proceeds of their labor, would be applied by the people to furnish them with the comforts of life, with houses for their shelter, with clothing and food for their families. Before any part of their labor can be paid, $300,000,000 must be taken from it to be applied for the use and benefit of those who have given nothing for it, on securities issued under the forms of law, placed upon lines of transportation which in fact, by a law more inevitable than human law, are an absolute necessity for the use of the people, and with the power to impose this tax upon them to pay the interest upon these securities. Can it be said that this great fact is not a pressing fact to be used as a motive for the government of Senators? Can it be that the people are to be thus oppressed by the use of the powers of Government, and no effort be made to relieve them?

Shall we ignore the fact in any legislation on this subject that the rates charged for transportation are to pay the interest upon fictitious and pretended capital, upon money pretended to be used but not used, and that to-day the labor of the country rests under a mortgage of $3,000,000,000 and an annual tax of between two and three hundred million dollars, levied upon the poorest class of the people, upon all the people, which must be paid before they can obtain anything from their own labor for the education, the clothing, the feeding, or the sheltering of their families?

Mr. President, this fact is stated in the work of Mr. Poor in regard to railroads. It is stated that the capitalization of the railroads of this country exceeds the actual cost three thousand million dollars. I will not delay the Senate by reading that which has been already read. I hold in my hand a speech of the Hon. Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois, which elaborately investigates these facts and proves conclusively from the record that this excessive capitalization has been made a capitalization which is in fact nothing but the use of the power conferred in these corporate franchises, to tax the people by rates of transportation which are inevitable to pay whatever amount shall be regarded by them as proper for the interests of these corporators, and for their personal wealth and aggrandizement.

It is therefore a most important fact for our consideration, as I have said, that the people of this country are to-day paying, according to the estimate of all the best authorities, an annual tax as great as that collected by the National Government, the gross amount of which is equal to and probably largely exceeds the entire taxation of the States, and the National Government paying the interest upon money never used but falsely pretended to have been used. How much that annual tax affects the labor of this country is a question for consideration.

How much that annual tax of three hundred million dollars, to be perpetuated under a mortgage of three thousand million dollars, is a burden of indebtedness imposed upon the country and upon every man, woman, and child is an object of public consideration which Senators must consider for themselves. For one I can see in it nothing but the ruin of the Republic. If it be permitted and is beyond the power of law, that a corporation or creature of the law, either State or National, can as a fact impose such a curse upon the industries of the country, I can see no object in government, I can feel no pride in the great system of government which we have. If its practical result is to impose on the labor of the people by the exercise of the powers of the governments, State and National, this vast annual tax without any consideration or return, but only for the personal luxury of a few persons, and there is no remedy for it, our efforts for the reduction of taxation, our declarations of equal rights, of the value of republican government, are false and mere pretenses.

I therefore assume as a fact that no legislation on interstate commerce should be made which perpetuates this annual tax of $300,000,000 upon the laboring people of this country in the shape of rates of transportation. The complaint to be remedied is an excessive imposition of taxes, of charges, of rates upon the industries of this country, and that is imposed and is legalized impliedly when we fail to require that there shall be no money paid, no charges collected, so far as we have authority in imposing or requiring reasonable rates except for moneys actually expended and not falsely pretended to have been used.

Mr. President, does this conference report propose to meet this difficulty? Does it propose to remedy it? Does it propose to touch the great fact that $3,000,000,000, a sum so vast that it is almost beyond our power to deal with, are now resting on the industries of this country and an annual tax of $300,000,000 for moneys falsely pretended to have been used, but which were never used in the construction of these highways? Is that the system of public policy which the people of this country expect the Congress of the United States to legalize, or to fail to remedy, for the one is equivalent to the other?

It is quite evident that we cannot afford relief to this country in reducing the rates of transportation so long as we permit rates to be charged upon the people to pay an interest of two or three hundred million dollars a year for moneys not used and not required to be used in the construction, operation, and maintenance of the great highways of transportation. If so, what do you mean by your law which prohibits discrimination? What is the evil of discrimination? It is that it extorts improper sums of money from particular individuals and benefits others by exempting them. It takes from the community at large and gives to the individual discriminated in favor of. The burden of the complaint is not that it enriches one, but that it deprives the other, the individual, the mass of the community, of that which they have a just right to, their earnings. The policy of the law would not object to a man's becoming rich by proper means, but the objection to the discrimination is that it impoverishes unjustly, by the exercise of a granted power, the great body of the people.

What, then, is this discrimination which has issued $3,000,000,000 of bogus bonds, of excessive capitalization, and imposes $300,000,000 of actual taxation annually?

These laws have granted a monopoly to tax the transportation, upon the entire production and consumption of the people of this country, all that is produced and all that is consumed except such small parts of the whole as find their way to the markets for sale and delivery by the great water-ways of the country. With that exception, which is of comparatively limited amount, the entire transportation of this country is subject to the taxation of these great lines of railway transportation. It is the greatest power ever bestowed upon any individuals. It is a power that is utterly inconsistent with republican government unless limited, regulated, and restrained by law. The question is, how shall we limit it, how shall we regulate it, how shall we restrain it?

The conference bill proposes to restrain it, not by requiring that rates shall be reasonable only when imposed to pay the actual cost and operation of these great highways and a reasonable interest upon the amount actually expended but by impliedly licensing the increase of these charges to meet any amount that may be demanded by the company. If in the course of these few years a mortgage of three thousand million dollars, nearly as great as the whole war debt in the great struggle between the States, has been created and an annual tax of $300,000,000 imposed upon the labor of this country without any consideration or value received, it is perfectly evident that you can have no reasonable rates unless you establish some principle by which the people shall not be taxed to pay money for nothing, but only to pay interest upon money honestly expended to pay for cost of construction and operation and a reasonable interest on the money used for these purposes, not for that falsely pretended to be used.

But this bill provides that there shall be no discrimination in the method by which this large sum of money shall be raised from the people. It does not say what shall be reasonable. It leaves it to the courts to say what are reasonable rates. The courts have already sanctioned this mortgage of three thousand million dollars upon the people of this country for nothing, for falsely pretended sums of money, issued in defiance of the purpose and spirit of the charters which never contemplated anything more than an obligation to pay for money honestly used and expended. This three thousand million dollars, this annual tax of $300,000,000, upon the industry and labor of this country, is licensed by judicial interpretation; is licensed by legislative sanction impliedly.

Now, I ask the question: Of what avail is it to say that there shall be no discrimination in the method in which this enormous and unjust exaction upon the industries of this country shall be obtained? Certainly it is an evil, and ought to be prohibited. But if it be true that $300,000,000 or $200,000,000 or $100,000,000 levied upon the great mass of the laboring people of this country—for it is they who pay it, it is the production of the country that can pay, and that alone can pay, this sum of money, for the consumption must be paid by the production. It is the manufacturer's production, the agricultural production, the locomotion of the country; it is a tax which, like the gabelle, the salt tax of France in the days of Richelieu and Mazarin, affects every human being, except those who are exempted by favoritism. It is a tax which comes upon the poor; it is a tax which is paid by the great body of the people per capita, and comes from their labor more inevitably than any human law, more certainly than any exaction made by public authority. Here is power to tax given to transportation companies over certain designated lines and areas of country. By necessary economies of business the whole production and consumption of the country must pass over them, and be subject to their demands. We have seen how it has been and is being used.

Mr. President, such a policy is impossible of continuance. No government, no people can stand a policy which accumulates the property of the country without consideration or effort or value of any kind into the hands of a few and impoverishes the many. It is not to the interest of capital, it is not to the interest of corporations, it is not to the interest of any one that this policy should be permitted to continue until it excites the indignation and resentment of the people and concentrates the whole public opinion of the country into a policy adverse to that enterprise and individual capacity, activity, and energy which have been the great factors in the success of our affairs heretofore; which have made us what we are.

But yet I venture to say that the Senate will not undertake to look into this question; I venture to say that this enormous sum of two or three hundred million dollars annual tax for nothing but the misuse of the powers granted, will be continued. The reasonable rates which this bill undertakes to require shall be imposed, will be considered only as reasonable to pay the interest upon such amounts as may be issued by corporate authority and demanded by them.

For myself, I am in favor of that bill and that policy which will bring cheap transportation to the people; that policy which will bring the cheapest transportation consistent with a proper remuneration for the money actually used, honestly and economically expended in the construction of these great highways.

I am aware that any legislation which will declare that reasonable rates must be accepted upon the basis of money actually invested and expended, and not upon the basis of that falsely pretended to be used, will not now be tolerated by this body. But I at the same time know that you will have no other legislation which will remedy this great evil. I know that it is not in the nature of things that you can create a power which may tax the people upon the transportation of all production and all consumption, upon very coat they wear, every barrel of flour and every pound of meat that are transported—you can not create such a power either directly or indirectly—and then allow it to be exercised to pay the interest upon vast sums of money—$3,000,000,000—which is falsely pretended to have been used and which has never been expended in the construction of these highways or the operation or maintenance of them, without gross injustice and oppression.

Mr. President, if we say there is no power in the two great legislative bodies of this country to regulate that, we shall confess, then, that so far as our interstate commerce is concerned we are without power and that the bill is a delusion.

Now let us look a little further into this matter. We propose to prohibit discrimination; we propose to declare in general terms that rates shall be reasonable. We are told that is the common law doctrine. Well, Mr. President, there is nothing in the common law or the civil law which ever enacted that transactions which were unreasonable were lawful. In every system of law there is a standard by which a transaction shall be judged, but that reasonable character depends upon the opinions of the people of the country, the customs and the status of right and wrong which prevail there.

In our country you have a power given to impose rates. You have an exclusive right of transportation over certain designated lines and areas of country. Whether it be a right thing by law or a practice which has grown out of some other right, you have the power. It has become the custom to consider that a reasonable rate is that which the railroads charge to pay interest on the mortgage issued in pursuance of law. It was issued by the authority conferred on the corporate body, but it was in violation of the original purpose for which it was granted. A debt was created without a consideration, issued for the purpose of accumulating values and imposing burdens upon the production of the country, in order that some persons might be enriched without any contribution of money, effort, time, or labor on their part.

There is, therefore, nothing in this bill to require the courts to say that in transportation from one State to another that shall be reasoable which shall be an honest return for money actually used and expended in the construction and maintenance of the road; that the rate shall be fixed to pay the cost of the operation of the road and the interest upon the money actually used and expended, and properly used and expended, in its construction. I maintain that there is no other rule; I maintain that no other rate can be a reasonable rate. There can be no reasonable rate requiring payment of money in consideration of money that was never expended. There can be no reasonable rate in charging the production, which means the labor of the land; which means the food and clothing of the people; which means to take from the production, whether it be mechanical labor, manufacturing labor, or agricultural labor, the cost of transportation before any part of it can go for their clothing, their food, and their subsistence. There can be nothing reasonable unless it be to pay the necessary, the economical, the proper cost of the construction of these highways, the cost of operating them, and the interest upon the money that was so properly invested and used.

Mr. President, we have another provision; we have a provision that there shall be no pools, no combinations, and we attach very great importance to that. What is a pool? It is simply an agreement that the earnings derived from certain sources shall be accumulated and shall be divided after they are earned. Those who own them agree to their disposal; they are their property under the authority of State laws, not by virtue of any act of Congress or any exercise of power here. They are, as well as land, as well as houses, authorized by the law of the State where the corporation is created; they become their private property; they are their earnings. Now we propose to do what? We propose to say that after these properties have been earned, after this money has been acquired in pursuance of law, under the authority of State law, guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, those who have earned them by virtue of the State law shall not be allowed to dispose of them, either by gift or otherwise, as they shall see fit.

Mr. HARRIS. Would a suggestion interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CALL. Not at all.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Florida that of the railroad pools which have from time to time existed in this country some, not many, have been of the character he has just described. The pool now in vogue, however, with railroads is not an agreement for the division of the proceeds, but it is a pool to divide freight between competing companies, which deprives the shipper of the right to control his own shipment. The pool says what road shall carry this thing or that thing, so that each carrier has his due proportion under the pooling contract of the freights that are to be carried between two competing points.

Mr. CALL. Well, Mr. President, let us take that view of the case; let us suppose an agreement on the part of the companies carried out in that way. When a man delivers a bale of cotton to a railroad company, and that railroad company has agreed with a certain other company that it shall ship that cotton, not by the line of road directed by the shipper, but by some other line, am I to be told that there is no law of the State which has created a common carrier within the limits of that State which will say to that common carrier, "You shall take one hundred bags of cotton on the line designated by the individual?" What need have we for that species of law? What act of Congress do we need to require a railroad company, a common carrier under public law, from carrying out the contract that it has made?

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to answer the question?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. The reason, or one of the reasons, is simply this: If you, Mr. President, have one hundred bales of cotton to ship, and desire to select the company that you will consign them to for shipment because of the fact that you know that company to be reliable and solid, and that it can respond in damages for the loss of that cotton if by the negligence of the agents of the carrier it shall be destroyed, I think you ought to have the right to determine as to what carrier shall carry it. But if the pool may assign it to whatever railroad company it chooses, it may assign it to a railroad company wholly insolvent and wholly unable to respond in damages for the damage that may result from the negligence of the agents of the carrier.

Mr. CALL. Well, Mr. President, I do not think it is difficult to answer that proposition of my learned friend. The man who delivers one hundred bags of cotton to any common carrier has a right to have it carried by that carrier, and the law of its creation obligates it to do it. If it is a responsible carrier, whether it carries it or not, it is responsible for any damages for not doing it. That is a subject of State law and State authority.

Now, you propose to say in regard to the interstate commerce of the country what? That the obligation created by the State law upon a common carrier shall be enforced and carried into effect by a law of the United States. The point of my remark in regard to that provision of the bill is that if it is designed only to prohibit railroad companies from diverting freight or agreeing to divert freight from other lines than those designated in the contract of the shipper or forwarder, it is a small object of public policy. If that is all that it does there is already an adequate remedy provided.

This great bill, demanded by the people to reduce rates and forbid discriminations, to make transportation equal, fair, and just, and furnish the cheapest transportation that is possible consistent with a proper compensation for money honestly used and really expended, is made small by the proposition that we propose to prevent railroad companies from directing freight from the line designated in the contract of the shipper, for which there is already an ample remedy by State law.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him at that point?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the Senator to say that now pools are prohibited by State law and that a United States law on the subject is not necessary. What I desire to call his attention to is that as to interstate commerce, over which, according to the Supreme Court of the United States, Congress has jurisdiction. Is it an objection to a law passed by Congress on the subject that it does really, as to that commerce over which alone it has jurisdiction, carry out and enforce the law of the States of the Union?

Mr. CALL. That is not the point of objection to the proposition as presented by the Senator from Tennessee. The point is that the State law is abundant. If it is simply a question of diverting freight from the line selected by the shipper there is no need for a national remedy. The remedy is already abundant; the State law has already provided it.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that the Senator from Tennessee says that notwithstanding the State laws these pool arrangements do exist now all over this country and that the railroads are being operated under them. Then it must be either that the State laws are unable to put down the pooling arrangement as to interstate commerce or that they are not honestly and properly administered.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Mississippi will allow me, I would suggest that State legislation is confined to State commerce. The States have no power and no means to regulate interstate commerce or to regulate any pooling contract affecting interstate commerce. Congress alone possesses the power to regulate interstate commerce or to regulate pools affecting interstate commerce, if they are to be regulated by law at all, being the only legislative body known to our institutions of government that has the power to regulate that class of commerce.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Tennessee may probably be right, but I was undertaking to answer the Senator from Florida on the basis on which he relied.

Mr. CALL. I am very glad to obtain information from the Senator from Mississippi or the Senator from Tennessee; but I apprehend that neither of them will maintain the proposition that a man who orders one hundred bags of cotton by one line of road from any city in the United States, and under any agreement with that road and some other road, instead of carrying out the contract which the law imposes on the common carrier, it is shipped by some other line—I apprehend that neither of them will say that the State law in the State where that contract was violated is not operative and a remedy provided for its enforcement because it is interstate commerce. That is a violation of contract local to the place which the State would have jurisdiction over.

But, Mr. President, that is not the ground—though my friends assume that—of this legislation against what? Against the right of a person, artificial or natural—for it is the same—to dispose of the earnings of his property with or without consideration. It is a singular contrast that while the bill by implication sanctions and licenses the extortion of $300,000,000 annually from the people of this country for money pretended and falsely pretended to have been used, it attacks the disposition of it, and the right of persons, natural or artificial, to dispose of their own property as they please.

Mr. President, I doubt the efficacy of that remedy. I ask my friends why they do not insert a provision in this bill, if it be a great public evil that railroad companies divert freights from the line indicated by the shipper to others, forbidding them from doing that? Why not forbid the pool from doing that if that is the great evil? Why not forbid and punish the abuse instead of the legitimate and proper use.

We are dealing with a vast subject; we are dealing with an actual present grievance; we are dealing with an extortion of money without consideration, without the sanction of any object of public policy, in such vast sums that it is robbing the industry and enterprise of the great mass of this people. It is accumulating the most magnificent fortunes the world has ever seen, without the use of capital, in the hands of a few persons. It is as much endowing them with wealth as if enactments were made by the several States and the National Government that the people should pay out of the fund derived from the ordinary and legitimate subjects of taxation these vast sums of two, five, ten, twenty, fifty million dollars to an individual. It is just as much a public act as if it was done by the direct enactment of the Legislatures and Congress.

We have had a great deal read from various books as to the evils of discrimination. I concur in all of them. It ought to be prohibited; it is properly the subject of Congressional enactment. The railroads should be forbidden to combine to discriminate unreasonably against persons or places. That would cure that evil.

Now the question is how far this general provision of the bill against all combinations, how far this general provision of the bill establishing an arbitrary rule of a long haul or a short haul, will answer the purpose. The evil, let us bear in mind, is an unjust discrimination between persons and places. The object sought to be obtained is the cheapest transportation, equal, impartial, and fair to all the productions of the country, to all the transportation of the country—the cheapest rate consistent with what? With the proper compensation of the men who have constructed and who operate these highways, including the cost of construction and maintenance. The evil we propose to remedy is excessive rates, unequal rates, unjust discrimination between persons and places.

I acquiesce with whatever there is in this bill or in this report that looks in this direction. I denounce so far as I am concerned this evil as strongly as any can possibly do it; first, the extortion from the people in rates of transportation of money before they have derived any interest from their industries or production, the extortion from them of money to pay for that which was never expended but falsely pretended to have been expended. Second, the discrimination between persons and places which has built up enormous fortunes in individuals, ruined others, destroyed cities, built towns, corrupted judges, influenced the politics of the country. All these evils I concur should be put an end to.

I desire that they shall be forbidden, but I do not see that that object will be attained by a general provision that there shall be no such thing as a combination or agreement between railroads to reduce rates, to protect one against extinction, to prevent a line of railroad from being deprived of such a portion of freights and such an amount of profit as will enable it to continue. It is asserted that this is in the interest of competition. Do you promote competition by destroying a line of transportation? These propositions I do not think can be sustained.

Then again in regard to the long haul and the short haul; take two lines of railroad having the same terminal points of arrival and departure, the one diverging from the other, traversing a different country, as most railroads do, traversing a country the productions of which are not accessible to both, but having the same terminal points of departure and arrival, the one longer than the other, more expensive in its construction than the other, necessarily more expensive in its operation. The long haul over the short line of road being the rule that no part of that line shall be used for a higher rate than that charged for a greater distance, that there shall not be a greater charge for the short distance than for the longer distance, the short line of road, the less expensive road, may, under that rule, be enabled to adjust its local freights, the changes upon its business in the country which is accessible to it and which is not accessible to the other, upon a profitable rate.

The other road may not. It may be ruined. Who shall assume that it will not be? Who shall say—by what argument will you elucidate the proposition—that in all cases two roads, differing in cost, differing in expense of operation, may be governed by this fixed rule with a fair profit, sufficient to pay interest on the money actually expended in its construction, its equipment, its operation? Who shall say that this arbitrary rule will fill the measure of the honest necessities of both?

Again, what necessity is there for such a rule if you provide that rates shall be reasonable, whether it be upon excessive capitalization or not. If the rates be reasonable, why define that a reasonable rate shall be that in which the charge for the short distance shall not exceed the rate for the long. I can not perceive by what argument this long and short haul idea can be maintained in that relation. I acquiesce in the fact, and I believe that in the majority of cases the margin allowed is amply sufficient.

I can not see that it will do any great harm. I appreciate the force of the fact, for facts are to be considered wherever they come from proper authority. Whatever may be the disposition of men, if we have a fact, and it comes from sources authorized to speak and well-informed, that fact should have its weight and significance. The Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD], familiar with this subject, the other day stated the fact that upon the line of road in California, before there were any other parallel lines, or lines having the same terminal points of departure and arrival, the freights were apportioned on a certain basis—the basis that 10 per cent. of the business could bear a high rate and 90 per cent. a very small rate.

There is a great outcry here about pools. I am perfectly willing to vote against pools, if necessary; but let us see what the facts are worth.

Because there are unjust discriminations, because pools or combinations or agreements have been used for improper purposes, why shall we say that no agreement shall be made, no combination shall be made? I undertake to say that the law here proposed in this aspect is an impossible one, and I will give my reasons for this opinion.

But I was adverting to what the Senator from California had said. He said that on the line of the road in California 90 per cent. of the freight was carried very low, being mining material and the agricultural products of the country which could pay only a very small and minimum rate, and that the great amount of the charge on that line of road was on the other 10 per cent., which bore a vast proportion of the charges in comparison with the 90 per cent. The 10 per cent. could properly bear this great proportion of charge whether for short or long distances, while the 90 per cent. of the freight could only bear the minimum charge whether for a shorter or a longer distance; a greater charge would destroy the profit to the owner and prevent its transportation altogether.

That was not interstate commerce, and this bill does not touch it; it touches no commerce that is entirely within a State line. The extent of its benefit, therefore, will depend entirely on the proportion of local consumption, of local production, of local transportation between the lines of a State and those that pass outside, that pass from one State into another, or two, or three. But that fact illustrates the proposition that a reasonable rate must be imposed in reference to the value of the thing transported, the value in the markets of sale and delivery. You can not reach it otherwise.

The bill concedes the power of Congress, and that, I think, is its great merit, for I maintain the power of Congress to regulate this question. I think that as the Republic has grown and these vast interests have developed, it is necessary for the protection of capital, for the protection of the vast interests which have passed into the hands of these corporations, for the protection of the people; it is in the interest of both that Congress should wisely exert the power of regulating the transportation and the rates of transportation, not in detail, but prescribing general principles. Shall Congress say, by exercising the power to regulate that transportation which passes from one State to another, that rates shall be imposed to pay two or three or four hundred millions of dollars a year for money falsely pretended to have been used? Shall Congress fail to provide that rates imposed for this purpose shall not be reasonable rates; and, instead, declare that no greater charge shall be imposed for a short distance than for a longer one over the same line, the shorter being included in the longer distance, and that agreements between railroad companies to divide their earnings or to ship freight on one or the other line shall be prohibited, and will this produce the cheapest transportation possible to the people?

Well then, I say, having digressed to indicate my opinion on that subject, that I maintain the power of Congress, which this bill declares, and I support it in that respect and also its provision that a reasonable rate shall be required. Now, how can we get that reasonable rate? What is a reasonable rate? Upon what principle shall we define it? As between the rates of freight—we will say from New York to Chicago or a rate of freight from Chicago to New York and local rates—what shall be the principles on which you will determine the reasonable rate as between the through and local freights along the line of transportation? We must ascertain that.

The bill proposes to do it by laying down a general provision prohibiting discriminations—prohibiting pools. Now, I take it, that may be approached in another way. The reasonable rate must, of course, provide for a return to those who have constructed the road with labor, with money, to the laborer you may say, or to the men who have combined to manage the labor, or to the capitalist. It must make a return to him for the labor which he has actually used. That certainly must be the first element; otherwise you can not have such organization, such construction, such line built and operated. In paying that road, therefore, the cost of transportation of everything carried upon it must be ascertained and paid by the thing that is carried.

The business must pay the actual cost; each article must pay its own actual cost. It is manifestly improper that one class of business should pay the expense of carrying another. It is manifestly impossible that a bushel of wheat raised 10 miles from the city of New York should pay the cost of transporting a bushel of wheat grown in Kansas. The New York man has no right to claim that he shall have a monopoly. The Kansas man has no right to claim that the interstate commerce of the country shall be so adjusted as to make another man pay the cost of transporting his bushel of wheat from Kansas to New York. It is, therefore, a first principle that there must be such equality of rates as is possible.

In the cost of transportation shall we assume always that the cost of transporting an article for a longer distance is as great or greater than the cost of transporting it a shorter distance? That is a question of practical detail. It may be, as I have stated, that a car having to travel a whole line, the cost being the same whether it is filled or unfilled, may make in that detail the one less costly than the other; but it is certainly true that in the adjustment of these rates they must not be so adjusted as to make one community, one locality, either the termial or the intermediate point, pay for the cost of transporting the productions of the other. It is our duty to consider and provide, if possible, some method, some principle by which this result shall be avoided and to be careful that we do not give the force of law to principles and methods which increase the rates of transportation; but, on the contrary, that we make them, by our action, as low as possible, and uniform and equal in all industries and places.

I take it that result would not be difficult to arrive at by apportioning the cost according to the value of the article at the market of delivery. Having first charged the actual cost upon every article transported over a line of road, which is the first principle of justice and the first necessary principle of economy, it would not be unfair nor impracticable to apportion the remainder, the remuneration of the carrier, according to the value of the thing delivered, the reasonable and just remuneration bearing equally upon the value of the thing delivered after paying the actual cost of transportation.

But it is very evident that the provisions of this bill in respect to pooling are very vague and general. I acquiesce in all that may be said in regard to unjust and unfair discriminations. There shall be no improper discrimination between the same classes of freight under like circumstances. That affords a wide margin of difference. However, I am anxious to arrive at something practical. I am anxious to have the Senate submit to the country the idea in the form of law that transportation must be made as cheap as is consistent with the proper remuneration of the honest capital honestly expended in the construction of these great highways.

In these days, when there is a spirit abroad in the country questioning the expediency of the systems of economy which permit and encourage accumulations, which reward individual activity and enterprise, when the power of combination is so great in all the elements of the country, when public opinion can so easily, in classes or sections of the people be concentrated, and there are so many and powerful incentives to a public opinion adverse to the policies which encourage individual activity and enterprise, which have been the great factors in our success heretofore, I am anxious that some rule shall be adopted which will be just to both, which will protect capital, which will protect individual enterprise and a reasonable accumulation, and at the same time bear upon the great mass of the community with great lightness, impose no additional burdens and make transportation, which is the great avenue for the return of compensation to the labor of the country, as cheap as is possible.

This can only be done, not by prohibiting any and all discriminations, but by severely prohibiting improper discriminations, discriminations which are not in the interest of reducing the total cost of transportation, and the terms in which this should be done will have to be very carefully considered. It will produce discrimination, unequal and oppressive discrimination, to say that all freights shall be carried alike. It will produce it to say that there shall be collected from the people of the country, as a reasonable rate, money to pay for that which has never been used. It may produce it by fixing one arbitrary rule alike for all roads that freights, whether of one value or another, shall not, when passed from one State to another, pay more for a shorter than a longer distance, however reasonable it may appear. If it were possible to apply and enforce a law that there should be no agreements between railway companies either to divide earnings or to divide business, it might increase discriminations, and at the same time impose greater burdens on the country.

You can not avoid discriminations in any other way than by prescribing a general principle, first, that no money shall be taken in rates or charges upon the interstate commerce of this country to pay for anything but the reasonable and proper cost of the operation of a road, for the cost of its construction, its equipment, and a just remuneration for the money actually expended. You can not reach the result in any other way; and when you come to apportion these elements between the local rate and the freight at the terminal points you must do it, first, upon the principle of compensation or payment of the actual cost of transportation of the thing transported, whatever it is, and, secondly, that it shall bear, according to its value in the markets of sale and delivery, its proportion of the compensation, of the interest, of the fixed charges, or whatever phrase you may choose to use in connection with it.

Living in a terminal State, while I am in favor of going much further than this bill goes, while I am willing to vote for a law which shall declare that the rate is only reasonable which shall be imposed to pay for money actually and not falsely pretended to be used, while I am willing to vote for a law which shall prohibit, under the penalties, unjust discriminations, which shall make all discriminations subject to the authority and supervision of the National Government or officers appointed by it, while I am willing to vote to define that discrimination in the clearest and most positive terms, while I am entirely opposed to making what is called local business, or short hauls, or the points which are intermediate between terminal points, or which are non-competitive pay the cost of transporting the products of the terminal countries—while in regard to all this class of business I am entirely opposed to any and every system which shall make them pay the cost of transporting through business, and am willing to vote for such provisions, I think they should be modified and clearly addressed to the question, and that in cases where it is the interest of the local business that through freights should be carried at smaller rates, it ought to be so allowed and so provided for.

I submit the question to Senators who have considered this great subject, what advantage is it to the men living along a line of road that there shall be no through business over it, although the through business carried over it should be done at smaller rates than the cost of transporting any part of its business over the shorter line? Of what advantage is it? Does not every pound of through business add that much to the profits of the road? Do not the greater profits of the road enable it always to decrease the rates on local business? We are not inquiring now what they do, or what their practice is, but what the necessary economy in the matter is; what the effect of additional business is; whether a railroad company will not be enabled to reduce local freights by having through businsss that will pay, although it does not pay as much for the longer distance as local freights do for a shorter distance. The only real object or benefit in such case is that both through business and local business shall, in the aggregate, pay their reasonable share of the expense and profit.

If that be so, it would be within the province of law, in imposing a reasonable rate, to say that the reasonable rate should be fixed according to the gross amount; that it should not exceed, but go down in a descending scale, according to the profits received. But it is not true as a proposition that the local business, the intermediate country, the short haul, is benefited by excluding, by any means whatever, the through business, no matter at what or how small a cost it may be carried over a road.

Mr. GEORGE. If carried at a loss?

Mr. CALL. The question whether it is carried at a loss will involve several different elements. The specific article may be carried at a loss in the individual cases. The bulk of the articles may not be carried at a loss. Of course, if in general terms all the through business is carried at a loss then unquestionably the local business has to pay it. But you provide a rule by which you say that in all cases this through business is carried at a loss to the injury of the intermediate shipper, the local man, because he has to pay more for carrying it 10 miles or a hundred miles than the through business pays for carrying it 500 miles or the whole distance.

I say there is no foundation for that proposition. It is unknown. It is one that can not be sustained. It rests upon quantities and elements which nobody can ascertain and nobody can determine, but it is peculiar to each particular case.

I desire to say that it is no remedy for these evils. I desire to say that it is no triumph to those who desire that the interstate commerce of this country shall be regulated and that transportation shall be made as cheap as possible, with a just system of economy in the operation, maintenance, and compensation for money actually and honestly used in the construction of these highways. For myself, I do not want any half-way or halting measures on this subject, nor to be drawn away by them from the great fact that we are only providing methods by which this vast amount of over three thousand millions of dollars, for which no consideration and no value has ever been given, shall be freed from the labor and products of the people with the least amount of inequality and oppression.

Now, Mr. President, we come to another proposition, which I think is the great crowning feature of this bill, and which receives my most hearty commendation. With so powerful an agency as this the abuses of power by which it has created all the great evils which the Senators from Kentucky and Texas [Mr. BECK and Mr. COKE] referred to in their speeches, with a power of collecting greater revenues than the Federal Government, with its nine hundred million or its one thousand million dollars of annual tax levied as its gross earnings upon the labor of this country, upon the food and clothing of this country, upon the comforts of the laborers of this country, with its vaster power of annual taxation than all the States possess, with its between three and four thousand million dollars of fraudulent debts, fraudulent not in the terms of the law, but in fact issued upon false pretenses, because it has the power to tax the people for it. With this vast power it is evident that no citizen can obtain any right by litigation. Assuming, which is not always the case, that the judge is incorruptible; assuming that he is not influenced by the political, the social, the professional considerations which those who represent this great power are able to cast around him; assuming that he is not mercenary and venal—and there are many cases, I am afraid, in which the facts would justify condemnation and conviction of persons occupying this high station in these relations; assuming all that to be true, supposing the judge to be honest, incorruptible, wise, and learned, our system of law, and any system of law, and every system of law belonging to modern times will enable natural or artificial persons of vast wealth to maintain an endless litigation.

What is the citizen to do when deprived of his right, when his property is taken from him, when excessive rates are imposed upon him, when an interest in his neighbor's business is taken by a great transportation company, his freights delivered at lower charges, when his town property is destroyed by the building of another town, by establishing a depot, because they have been paid to leave his place of business and the natural place of delivery of trade and build their depot elsewhere two or three or four miles from the town, as I have seen done, and as is frequently done? What is he to do? Sue in the courts? Such a suit is useless; it is beyond his means. He is entirely at their mercy; he has no rights. Very often the men who own the stock of these corporations, broad-minded, liberal-minded men, merchant princes of finance and commerce, have no knowledge of the manner in which these roads are operated. The shipper is completely at the mercy of the management of the road. How is he to be protected? The bill provides, I think, a great remedy. It provides that the power of this great Government, that the power of the people's President, their executive, their representative, directly responsible every four years to them and amenable to their servants in the Senate and in the House of Representatives for his official conduct, shall be charged with the duty of depending and prosecuting and protecting that right of the humblest citizen.

I regard this as the great and crowning feature of the bill, the appointment of these commissioners, themselves amenable to the President, the President amenable to the people for their official and personal responsibility in the administration of this great trust, the greatest and most important possessed by his office in time of peace. He is charged with the duty, under this bill, of protecting the humblest citizen, and I commend the bill in this respect; it excuses many defects and many shortcomings.

I am inclined to vote for the bill notwithstanding the objections I have pointed out, but I would prefer, if it were possible, that it should be further considered by the conference committee. I would prefer that these provisions should be modified. I believe that it is true of this long and short haul provision that it is useless, unnecessary, and perhaps injurious, and that it is a mere definition of what is a reasonable rate. I think that provision of the law (although the commission has the right to supersede it, to set it aside in cases where it presses hardly) might operate injuriously at times.

Take, for instance, the State I represent. There are many lines of road having the same terminal points of departure and arrival connected as lines with other lines, the Coast Line, the Kenesaw Line. I see the enterprising Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company have just opened a line now by the Kenesaw route into Florida and Louisiana.

Take these different lines of road diverging and traversing different distances, at a very great difference of cost of operation, and very great difference of cost of construction, some going by Pensacola, some going by Macon, Ga., others going by Charleston, Savannah, Richmond, Washington, and following the coast line, others going by Cincinnati, the Pennsylvania Central, and the Baltimore and Ohio. These different lines of road are all used by our people. They make their rates of freight, in one sense of the word, under a certain degree of competition; that is, they know that if they do not agree upon some basis which is reasonable to the people, one or the cheapest line will be preferred. But this provision of the law in regard to long and short hauls may place the whole traffic in the power of the shortest line.

So far as pools operate to prevent a reasonable rate on either or all of these several lines they are very objectionable. I am willing to legislate that they shall not combine for any unreasonable rate that would be wrong, but what do we do when we say now that none of these lines of roads shall impose on this interstate commerce from the State of Florida coming along any part of that line a higher rate for the short distance than for the long one? I do not know, you do not know, whether that specific sum will be the sum that will enable some of those lines to do any part of the business. You do not know but that the shortest line may be enabled to do the carriage profitably under this rule and that the longer lines can not.

Therefore you destroy the possibility of competition in that respect. While I do not think that result would occur, because the margin between the difference between the charge for the longer distance and the charge for the shorter is so great that you could probably find no short-haul freight that would come within it that would not pay a compensatory amount, I think it is uncertain, and therefore an unwise provision.

Representing a terminal State, approving the policy of the bill, the spirit of the bill, objecting most earnestly as I do to the implied legalization of the bill of $3,000,000,000 of fraudulent debt upon the people of this country and $300,000,000 of annual taxation for nothing, objecting to legalizing this enormous and oppressive taxation upon the people, I still approve the policy, the great features of the measure, and expressing my dissent upon these subjects I now expect to give the bill ultimately my support; but I should prefer and I should vote for its further consideration upon these points by the committee of conference if there was or shall appear to be any reasonable probability of a modification of its provisions, and of action at this session; but I am satisfied that every interest of the people and of the railway corporations themselves demand that the power of Congress should be asserted and exercised over them in respect to the interstate commerce of the country.

I have omitted some quotations which I have here, and I simply ask the privilege of inserting them.

FROM "THE RAILWAYS AND THE REPUBLIC," BY J. F. HUDSON.

The effect of stock inflation upon the financial interests of investors is more direct and vast than its bearing upon the shipping interests of manufacturers, merchants, and producers. Although the latter is our special subject in this work the importance of the former question warrants this sketch of the financial evils of fictitious values. In fine, this practice of creating securities in excess of actual values has, by one method or another, imposed upon investors a volume of fictitious stocks and bonds more than double the amount of the national debt. According to the estimate of the most widely acknowledged statistical authority upon railways, through the methods of sale or hypothecation, $3,700,000,000 of purely paper values have been sold to the public.

The creation of these fictitious securities has sometimes been so open and notorious that the successful sale of them seems to indicate eagerness to be cheated on the part of the public. In other cases the methods used have been so secret and so plausible that it has been almost impossible for the legitimate investor to detect them. In the end the false values have been so mingled with the real, and the fraudulent investments made to bear so close a resemblance to the honest ones, that at the present time the greater part of the railway securities of this country are clouded by the suspicion of illegitimacy. In the presence of this mass of falsehoods and pretenses, imitating real investments, it is not strange that a period of public credulity should be followed by a period of general suspicion, when none of these doubtful investments are trusted; but it is strange that another period of credulity should come, allowing new inflations and fresh issues of fictitious capitalization. Suspicion is the natural and legitimate condition while such practices are possible.

The gigantic wrong upon investors, perpetrated in the creation of this $3,700,000,000 of fictitious railway investments, is one of the most serious and unanswerable counts in the indictment against the railway kings. Besides this imposition on the confidence of the public, the practice of stock inflation reacts disastrously upon legitimate railway interests. The loss which this wanton violation of public confidence inflicts upon the railways themselves, is apparent in the rate of interest which they must pay on their bonded debt. If the bonds of the railways were confined to one-half the actual and honest cost of construction, they would be eagerly sought for at 4 per cent.; and in that case $72,000,000 would have sufficed to pay the interest charges in 1884. This would have left from the net earnings of that year $196,000,000 as net profits instead of the $91,000,000 realized under the rule of inflation; so that the second count in the indictment against stock inflation is that it has for several years inflicted an annual loss upon the honest share-holders of the railways exceeding a hundred millions a year.

Although the charge was made against the Reagan bill that this section requires rates to be strictly in proportion to distance, every leading advocate of railway reform recognized the folly and uselessness of such requirement. The provision as to long and short hauls in the Reagan bill is the best that can be done by that kind of regulation; but its failure to afford any remedy for a vast multitude of discriminations shows the weakness of the scheme. These inequalities must be left unchecked until legislation finds a way to give free play to the laws of trade, which will determine rates with unerring justice.

To show how easily an arrangement with much more than the power of an agreement or pool may be made, I read from a speech of Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER a statement of what was actually done:

THE PENNSYLVANIA COMPANY.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company owns a majority of the stock of what is called the "Pennsylvania Company," an organization chartered by the State of Pennsylvania, April 7, 1870, for the purpose of managing, in the interest of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, the railroads running west from Pittsburgh, and the connecting lines thereof, extending west and south, lately owned, leased, and operated by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The capital stock of this railroad ring monopoly is $12,000,000, of which $8,000,000 is owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Of course, Col. Thomas A. Scott is president. This Pennsylvania Company owns, leases, and operates, in the aggregate, 2,512 miles of railroad, including the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago, 468 miles; Erie and Pittsburgh, 100 miles; Cleveland and Pittsburgh, 228 miles; Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Saint Louis, 201 miles; Little Miami, Columbus and Xenia, 197 miles; Columbus, Chicago and Indiana Central, 587 miles; Jeffersonville, Madison and Indianapolis, 210 miles; Cincinnati and Muskingum Valley, 194 miles; Indianapolis and Vincennes, 117 miles, and Saint Louis, Vandalia and Terre Haute, 165 miles.

The same company also owns a half interest in the Indianapolis and Saint Louis Railroad Company, 261 miles. Here is presented an interesting question for statesmen and courts to consider, namely: What right has the Legislature of Pennsylvania to incorporate a company for the purpose of operating railroads in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and other States of the Union? We have heard the right of Congress to do such a thing seriously questioned. But what shall be said of the assumptions of one State to control the railroads of all the other States? The Pennsylvania Company is the newest evolution of railroad monopoly. Its assumptions of power should have alarmed the whole country. It is the beginning of a system of national railroad consolidation, under the pretended power of a State incorporation. There is nothing to hinder the Pennsylvania Company from controlling all the railroads in the Union if it may do lawfully what it now assumes to do, and is doing. The receipts of this giant corporation for the year 1872 were $31,000,000, the operating expenses were nineteen millions, and the net earnings were eleven millions. The capital stock of this company is only twelve millions, and the net earnings for one year are eleven millions! Oh! for a power in Legislatures, in Congress, in any place, that can regulate this corporate monstrosity! It doth bestride the middle continent like a Colossus, having one foot on the upper Ohio at Pittsburgh, the other on the banks of the Mississippi at Saint Louis, while its huge arms embrace the great lakes of the North—verily, a modern Colossus of Rhodes.

The Pennsylvania Railroad, from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, 355 miles, and the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad, 468 miles, together, form one of the through trunk lines from Chicago to the East, a distance of 823 miles. The Pittsburgh and Fort Wayne road and equipments are reported to have cost, January 1, 1873, $35,835,285.71, or at the rate of $76,571 per mile. The aggregate liabilities on the whole line, between Chicago and Philadelphia, amount to $152,494,109.79, or at the of $185,292.96 per mile. It needs no argument to show the vast amount of financial water in this exhibit. Fifty thousand dollars per mile, or $41,000,000 ought, if honestly expended, to have been sufficient to have built and equipped the whole line. This shows that there are $111,000,000 of watered stock and fictitious values to be supported on this trunk-line from Chicago to Philadelphia, or at the rate of $135,000 per mile. If it is alleged that this is not watered stock, I would ask, "What is it?"

I care nothing about names. I am dealing with facts. The fact I desire to make known is this: That the railroad from Chicago to Philadelphia via Fort Wayne and Pittsburgh, is loaded down with liabilities to the amount of $152,494,109.79, or $185,292.96 per mile; when an honest expenditure of $41,000,000, or $50,000 per mile, would build and equip the road. The difference, one hundred and eleven millions, is a charge upon the products of the West. Every bushel of grain that is raised in the West and Northwest is lessened in value by reason of this mountain of watered stock and inflated bonds.

If the railroad companies would relinquish their demands for remuneration upon their fictitious values, and manage their roads with economy, we would have no further complaints about unreasonable rates or unjust discriminations. Railroad tariffs that would pay reasonable running expenses, and 7 per cent. upon actual cost of road and equipment, would be cheerfully paid by all the people. Therefore the present war upon the railroads is a war upon watered stock, bogus bonds, and extravagant management. The issue must not be mistaken for opposition to railroads generally. We are ready to concede all that is claimed in reference to the thousand and one benefits railroads have been to the country. We need more roads than we have, and more will be built. All new enterprises will receive the support and encouragement of the people. They do not oppose the building of new roads, or the honest management of existing lines.

WHAT THE PEOPLE DEMAND.

But the people do insist, and will continue to insist—

1. That no tolls shall be exacted to pay dividends upon watered stock, or interest upon fictitious bonds.

2. That railroad management shall be economical.
3. That exorbitant salaries shall be cut down.
4. That the tariffs shall be reasonable.
5. That there shall be no unjust discriminations.
6. That passengers and property shall be carried as safely and expeditiously as possible.
7. That railroads shall contribute their just portion of taxes.
8. That there shall be no more Credit Mobilier rings or bogus construction companies.
9. That there shall be no more land grants or bond subsidies to railroads; and
10. That corporations, as well as the people, shall obey the laws of the land.

This is the decalogue of the people!

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILWAY.

The Illinois Central Railroad has been peculiarly successful as an investment to its owners. There have been several "distributions of stock" pro rata among the stockholders, and, in addition to this the land grant, amounting to 2,595,000 acres, the company had realized on the 1st of January, 1873, in sales and advance interest, the munificent sum of $24,824,333.33, or for the whole length of the road (705 miles) an average of $35,211 per mile. In October, 1858, and January, 1862, dividends were paid in scrip, since converted into stock, to the amount of $1,772,270. And in August, 1865, there was a "distribution of stock" to the amount of 10 per centum, amounting to $2,119,931. And in August, 1868, there was an 8 per cent. distribution, amounting to $1,881,100. To recapitulate, the stock waterings and land subsidy were as follows:

Total waterings (as above)	$5,773,301 00
Sales of land, including advance interest	24,824,333 33
Total waterings and subsidy	30,597,634 33
Total waterings and subsidy, per mile	43,400 89

The total cost of construction, as reported by the company, January 1, 1873, amounted to $34,061,196.56, being an average cost per mile of $48,331.75. If we deduct from this latter sum the amount of stock waterings and subsidies per mile, it will leave but $4,930.86 as the actual sum per mile that the owners of the Illinois Central Railroad have expended over and above their receipts in the building and equipment of their road! These estimates do not include the value of the unsold lands of the company. On the 1st of January, 1873, there remained of the land grant, not sold, 344,368 acres, worth perhaps $15 per acre, or the sum of $5,165,520. This amount should be added to the sum already realized for the sales of land, including advance interest. The total watered stock and land grant would then aggregate the enormous sum of $35,763,154.33! This sum exceeds the whole cost of construction, as reported by the company, by the sum of $1,701,957.77. Virtually, then, the State of Illinois and the General Government have given the Illinois Central Railroad Company a line of road 705 miles in length, and a bonus of nearly $2,000,000.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, on two former occasions I have discussed the questions involved in the present controversy at very considerable length, and I do not desire to reproduce all that I said on those occasions, or to take up any considerable part of the time of the Senate in this discussion. The two most objectionable portions of the report of the committee on conference are found in what is known as the long and short haul and the provision against pooling.

The discussion upon the long and short haul provision of the report has already demonstrated that the friends of the bill differ among themselves as to its true meaning, and the opponents of the bill are at a loss to give it the correct interpretation. It is uncertain, indefinite, and doubtful in its meaning.

I do not propose to attempt to interpret it, nor does any living man, I presume, know what the interpretation will be. I think, however, that the practical result will not be doubtful. From the very necessity of the case the railroads will be compelled to retain their present rates on local freights, or on the short haul, as they can not relinquish them and keep out of bankruptcy, and as goods must not be transported over the long haul for less money than the railroads demand for the short haul, the result will be an increase of the freights upon the long haul, which will very seriously cripple the interchange of commodities between distant sections of our common country.

After this act goes into operation corn will not, in future, be carried from Kansas City to Atlanta at the low rate heretofore prevailing, nor will bacon, or beef, or pork be carried from Chicago to Charleston at the rates heretofore adopted. The increase in rates on the long haul will necessarily, to that extent, cripple the business of the country and diminish its volume and it will leave less of profit to the Western producer. Goods will not be shipped from Boston, or New York, or Philadelphia, to the Southern cities at as low a rate as has heretofore prevailed, and to that extent the business of the country must be crippled.

So far as the South, whose mineral development is now remarkable, is concerned, we shall be badly crippled by the increase of the freight for the transportation of our productions, from the mines of Georgia, Tennessee, and Alabama to the Western and Northern cities.

I do not desire to predict evil, but I feel that I can not be mistaken when I state that this bill when put into operation will derange both the internal and foreign commerce of this country to an extent heretofore unparalleled. It will greatly cripple our foreign trade by denying to the railroad companies, the long transportation lines, the right to carry the productions of the West, for instance, to New York at a lower rate when intended for exportation to Europe or other foreign country than the rate charged for like freights for consumption in New York. If the railroad companies are compelled to carry all the produce moved by them at the rate charged for that which is carried for exportation abroad, they can not live at it.

By retaining the higher prices for what is carried for home consumption, they can carry at a very small profit that which is intended to be sent abroad and still not lose money. Indeed, they can make something and do it, as the fixed expense of the company is first paid; and the company, if it continues to do business, is obliged to put the rates high enough to pay the fixed expense; but after that is done it can carry additional freights at a lower rate and still make money, and it is their ability to do this which has built up so rapidly our foreign trade.

But I may be told that the fourth section of the proposed act provides that, on application, the commission, in special cases, after investigation, is authorized to permit a railroad company to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property.

This provision, it is true, gives the commission power to discriminate between the different railroad companies, and to relieve one from the provisions of the law denying to it the right to carry freights a longer distance for less money, while it refuses to relieve another which may chance to be the competitor of the company which is relieved by the favor of the commission. In other words, the proviso in the fourth section of this act arms the commission appointed by the President, under the authority conferred by the act of Congress, with a greater power than that which is wielded by any sovereign in Europe where anything like constitutional government prevails. Indeed, the Czar of Russia could not have a more arbitrary power.

The commission in its discretion has the power to suspend the law in case of one railroad company and to refuse to suspend it in case of another railroad company located by the side of the one relieved if it chooses to do so, and there is no appeal from its decision. As the other provisions of the bill arm the commission with unusual powers, probably it is not inconsistent that its powers should culminate in discrimination made absolutely dictatorial between the different companies at its own good pleasure. This provision looks like the committee in draughting the bill had laid down a rule so arbitrary and so dangerous to the commerce of the country that it was necessary to give some tribunal the power to suspend the law and thus prevent the ruinous consequences resulting from its enactment and enforcement, and in doing so they confer upon the commission the absolute power of discrimination between companies by relieving one from a portion of the law and leaving another to its rigid enforcement.

Now, Mr. President, a few words on the subject of pooling.

Practical experience has demonstrated to those who have been charged with the management of long railroad lines that unbridled competition always results in ruin to the railroad company and in the absolute loss of the money invested by the stockholders of the company, while it results in no good to the public or to those who temporarily receive the benefits of the ruinously low rates. What the mercantile community wants more than anything else is reasonable rates on goods shipped, which are uniform, equal, and just. Rates that are stable, so that each merchant who goes to purchase his stock of goods knows in advance the rates he must pay, and knows that his competitor in business will pay exactly the same rate charged upon his goods.

Take two large mercantile houses in Atlanta, one conducted by John Jones and the other by John Smith; each purchases largely in New York, and each sells a large amount of goods per annum. The profits of these houses are made up of a very small per cent. upon the large amount of goods sold. The advantage of 50 cents a hundred pounds on the freight from New York to Atlanta given to one and denied to the other would be an almost ruinous discrimination. If railroad companies are not permitted to pool their business they will every now and then patch up a truce and agree each to maintain the same rates between given points. This agreement is not apt to last long until one thinks the other has violated it, and both cut loose. They then bid against each other, and the freight goes down, down to a ruinous rate.

Say that Jones goes to New York to purchase a stock of goods; he finds the railroads maintaining rates, and $1 per 100 pounds from New York to Atlanta is the best he can get. He pays it, and ships his goods. Ten days afterward the railroads have gone into a war, and they are cutting rates.

At this period, Smith goes to New York and buys a large stock. He goes to the general freight agent of one of the lines, and asks for a reduction of rates. The agent says, we are cutting rates; I will give you a rate of 75 cents a hundred on your goods to Atlanta. Smith goes over to the general freight agent of a competing line, and makes the contract for 50 cents per 100 pounds. He ships a large stock. Jones also shipped a large stock. Smith paid 50 cents per hundred; Jones paid $1 a hundred. This makes the profits uncertain. It makes the competition between merchants unfair; it unsettles values, destroys business, and does infinite harm to business men and other shippers.

Now if the railroad companies between New York and Atlanta had been pooling their freights at the time, they would probably have maintained a rate say of 75 cents a hundred, and it would have been uniform over all the lines as between all the customers of the different lines.

Which would be best for the commerce of the country, this fitful fighting, and now and then patching up a truce, or the steady regular rates adopted under the pooling system?

Pooling has been found the best means of maintaining reasonable rates and making them steady and uniform, while the pooling injures no shipper, unless it may be the one who hopes by making his purchases in the midst of a railroad war when rates are at the bottom, to get the advantage over his neighbor. Other portions of your bill make it highly penal for railroad companies to charge an unreasonably high rate, or an extortionate rate. When you require all railroads to carry at a reasonable rate then how does it interest the public whether the freights be divided among them under the pooling principle, or whether the goods be carried at that rate without a pool?

The object of the authors of this provision, I presume, is to turn loose all the railroads in fierce competition with each other, with a view of getting freights down at a lower rate. In that the friends of the bill will be greatly mistaken. Pooling prevents consolidation and monopoly. Unbridled competition produces absolute consolidation and monopoly, and in railroading there is no escape from it. You may ask me how it produces this result. Experience answers. Say there are three competing lines between two given points or cities. If these lines carry at reasonable rates and pool the business, the rates will be steady and uniform. If they are not permitted to pool, and are thrown loose for unbridled competition, they will soon run to the point where the weakest one of the three will be unable to sustain itself, and not being able to meet its engagements it will go into the hands of a receiver, and will finally be sold under the marshal's hammer, and is likely to be purchased by the strongest of the three.

Then, as unbridled competition rages between the two remaining companies, the stronger finally predominates over the weaker, and the weaker one breaks down, and goes through the same process of liquidation, and is disposed of under the marshal's hammer and bought in by the stronger competitor. The three are then placed under one management, that management applying alike to all three of them, and there is no more war of rates. There is no more need of a pool; the very fact that one of the companies now owns the railroads formerly owned by three companies, dispenses with the necessity for a pool, and at once puts a period to all competition, and the three lines run in perfect harmony. The result therefore of denying to the railroads the right to pool their freights is the consolidation of all the lines of each section of the country under one management, which is an absolute monopoly of the business of the section.

The Southern railroad companies cannot maintain themselves if they must go into a perpetual war of rate cutting. Experience having taught them this, they have formed an association known as the Southern Railway and Steamship Association, which embraces the territory from the Potomac to the Mississippi River, and from the Atlantic and the Gulf to the Ohio River, including the steamships doing the coastwise trade between the Southern and Eastern cities. Since the pool has been established, rates have gone steadily down. They have been generally maintained, and the companies have been able to get along by uniformity and maintenance of rates, and they have given the section of country covered by them good railroad service. Pass your bill denying to them the right to pool their business, and what will be the result. It will be consolidation and absolute monopoly.

There are six leading companies which now cover and do the business of nearly all the territory mentioned. What is known as the Coast Line runs from Virginia down the coast into Florida. The Richmond and Danville from Washington to Birmingham, Ala., with branches. The Central of Georgia, covering the greater part of that State, and a large part of South Carolina and Alabama. The East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia, with some 2,000 miles of railroad, covering the territory from Bristol, on the line of Virginia and Tennessee, to the Mississippi River, and a line through Georgia from Chattanooga to Brunswick. The Queen and Crescent Line from Cincinnati, Ohio, to New Orleans, with branches. The Louisville and Nashville, from Saint Louis, Mo., covering a good part of Kentucky and Tennessee, and down through Alabama into Florida.

I have not the figures before me, but taking the Central as an illustration, and it is one of the largest combinations of the six; and its capital stock is, in round numbers, $7,500,000. The purchase of a little over three and three-quarter millions of dollars, gives the party purchasing control of the entire line and its branches.

The stock of some of the other combinations is a long way below par, and I presume I might safely say that five millions of dollars each would buy a controlling interest in the stock of each company. So that thirty millions of dollars in round numbers would purchase the controlling interest in the stock of the six companies covering the whole territory above mentioned, or a little larger sum would buy them under the marshal's hammer. One single man in the State of New York is able to pay thirty millions for the stock, and control the whole of this vast combination, including the lines with all their branches, which would leave but a few short railroads in all that vast territory which would not be embraced in the purchase. And this would end the necessity of pooling. Say, for instance, that Jay Gould becomes the purchaser of the controlling interest in the six great companies. What is the result? No pooling is necessary from the Potomac to the Mississippi, and from the coast to the Ohio. As one man controls the railroads in the whole territory there would be perfect harmony in the management. In other words, the silence of despotism reigns, and the monopoly by consolidation and combination is complete; and you have driven the different companies which were able to sustain themselves under the pooling principle, into bankruptcy, by forcing upon them a ruinous competition, and the result has been the grasping of the power of the whole combination into the hands of one man or one company, and thus obviating the necessity of a pool.

What law will you then enact to put these lines in ruinous competition with each other? The stock is the legitimate subject of purchase in the market. One company in New York, or, as I have shown, one single man there is able to own the whole of it and defeat your cherished object, and you have no power to divest him of his title, or to take from him the management. Bear in mind the prediction that the enforcement of a provision denying to the railroad companies the right to pool their business will result in the consolidation and monopoly which I here predict, and a like consolidation and monopoly in each section of the United States. There is no escape from it in the very nature of things.

Mr. Adams, in his book on railroads, tells us that the Northeastern Railway of England is composed of thirty-seven lines, several of which formerly competed with each other. Before their amalgamation they had generally charged high rates and paid low dividends. They were consolidated under one management, and the system is now the most complete monopoly in the United Kingdom. From the Tyne to the Humber, with one local exception, it has the country to itself, and it has the lowest fares and the highest dividends of any large English railway. It has had little or no litigation with other companies. While complaints have been made from Lancashire and Yorkshire, where there are so-called competing lines, no witnesses appear to complain of the Northeastern, and the general feeling in the district it serves appears favorable to its management. Unbridled competition drove thirty-seven companies in England under one management. What do you suppose will be the result of unbridled competition in the United States forced upon the companies by act of Congress?

But it seems there is no sympathy for men who have been foolish enough to put their money into railroads. A few bold speculators, and in some instances bad men, have gotten control of long railroad lines, and have watered the stock and issued more bonds than the circumstances justified, and have made large speculations, and even fortunes, by that sort of illegal traffic.

These instances are constantly cited to show that railroad men are entitled to no sympathy, and to but little consideration in the courts or the halls of legislation. I admit that unscrupulous men have sometimes controlled railroad companies, and that there have been iniquitous speculations made, and much injustice has been done, but that is no reason why Congress, by its legislation, should destroy the value of a large proportion of the railroad property of the United States.

Men who have labored honestly for their money, have in thousands of instances put it into railroad stock. When the road was being constructed everybody praised them for doing so, for everybody along the line wanted the benefit of the road, and they preferred that others should furnish the money to build and give them the advantages. But as soon as a road is completed then the clamor is raised that the rates are too high, or something is irregular, or something is wrong, and the popular cry is, in effect, "confiscate it."

This act will do more, probably, if rigidly enforced, than any that has ever been passed by the Congress of the United States for the destruction of railroad property. Thousands of widows and orphans whose all of earthly goods is invested in railroads will be deprived of their property and reduced to beggary. Any amount of injustice will be done. The suffering that will grow out of it will probably be much greater than any that has ever grown out of the rascality or illegal conduct of bad railroad men, who have abused their trust. Do the people who have built the railroads and who own them deserve this? I think not.

The honorable Senator from Kentucky, Mr. BECK, in his able speech a day or two ago in favor of this bill, and against the railroad management, was just enough to make the following statement:

> They [the railroads] have done more than all other agencies to develop the resources of this continent; they have enabled us to control and almost settle the Indian problem. Without them nine-tenths of the country west of the Mississippi would be a wilderness to-day. But for the cheap transportation they furnish our exports would be a mere bagatelle, and the comforts of every man's home would be immeasurably lessened.

The honorable Senator might have added that the railroads have built like magic our great interior cities and our towns and villages; that they have increased five-fold, and sometimes more than that, the value of the real estate of the country; that they have enabled the States of the Union to develop their vast mineral resources, adding hundreds of millions to the wealth of the country; that they have not only built up and cherished an immense internal commerce, but they have doubled ten times over our foreign trade; that they have brought the different sections of the Union into close intercourse and fraternity, annihilating distance and making us one people; that they have been the greatest instruments of civilization ever devised, and that without them our country, not only west of the Mississippi, but much of that east of it, would be uncultivated, and almost a waste.

The fact that a few bad men have had the management and control of certain great lines of railroads, and have used them for unjustifiable speculation, is no reason why Congress should seriously cripple all the great railroad interests of the country and destroy the property invested by hundreds of thousands of our people, many of them of the most helpless class. And it is no reason why we should enact laws that will greatly cripple the commerce of the country, both internal and foreign, and prevent the rapid and cheap transportation of the commodities of one section of the United States to the markets of another, and thereby retard the growth of our cities and do immeasurable damage to our productive resources. Mr. President, I believe the authors and advocates of this bill, if it passes in the shape in which it came from the committee of conference, before they have seen six months of the workings of the system will have abundant reason to regret it.

The commerce of this country can not be bound by iron chains or restrained by iron fetters; no unbending rule in its transportation can promote its prosperity. When the machine which is to bind it is put into operation, and the clasps are put on, you will hear a terrible clatter and creaking, and it will soon be discovered that it can not work practically without more elasticity.

Why not commence by enacting laws of less dubious propriety, allowing the proper elasticity and room for expansion in the workings of the system? If it is found that you have not gone far enough, you can then, at a future session of Congress, put on another screw, and no serious injury will in the mean time have been done to the commerce or the prosperity of the country. It is true you can, at a future session, repeal, as the people will, no doubt, as in case of the granger laws, require you to do, part of what is now in this bill if it should become a law; but you can not repeal it in time to prevent great mischief by the workings of the system while it is in operation. The West and the South and the foreign commerce of the country will suffer most, but the whole country will suffer under the inharmonious workings of an impractical and unwise system.

Modify the provision in reference to the long and short haul and the provision in reference to pooling, and try it a year and see how it works, and if you have not gone far enough it will then be easy to take the next step.

If you have halted too soon you can advance the next Congress without deranging the business of the country. If you have gone too far you can not recede without having done great injustice, deranged the commerce and transportation of the country, and caused great destruction of property and great reduction in values.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, the question as to the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, whether conducted by rail on land or boat on water, so long as such power is not exercised in a manner that will invade the domain of vested rights of property, is no longer an open one. If any doubt as to the power ever could have had any reasonable support in the judicial mind of this country, that support has long since been completely swept away by repeated decisions of the SupremeCourt of the United States. The power, therefore, to so legislate, within the scope and limits of other provisions of the Constitution, is no longer a subject for disputation, but is conceded to exist by virtue of the specific grant contained in the eighth section of Article I of the Constitution, wherein it is declared that "the Congress shall," among other things, "have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes."

Nor can it be for one moment maintained that there is not in this country, at this time, an almost universal demand upon the part of the people for the exercise of this power on the part of Congress in some such proper, vigorous, and emphatic manner as will, while doing no violence or injustice to capital employed in the business of transportation, protect the people, the producer, the shipper, and the consumer from unreasonable charges and unjust discriminations to which, in too many instances, they are now subjected by the transportation companies of the country. And while it is not, in my judgment, by any means certain that the character of the proposed legislation in some of its prominent features, which more than others have been discussed by the people and urged upon the attention of Congress, will, if enacted, have either the desired or intended effect, it is safe to say it is quite certain that the great body of the national commonwealth from whom this demand for legislation comes do not desire to be invited to a feast of legislative legerdemain, nor will they be either satisfied with or deceived by any legislative jugglery which is open to as many different constructions in its vital parts as there were honorable members of the joint committee of five of the two Houses who have prepared this pending measure and placed it before the other three hundred and ninety-eight members of the two Houses of Congress and demand of them that they take this or nothing.

It will be conceded by all that whatever legislation upon this important subject may be enacted, whatever may be the dominant and salient points and controlling features in such legislation, whether any of these be of doubtful propriety or disputed efficiency as a means toward the accomplishment of a great end, or whether of such a nature, so characterized by justice and equity and right, as to command by their very statement the universal assent, including that of the common carrier as well as all others, that such legislation shall be in its nature and purposes, in whole and in part, as a unit and in detail, certain, specific, definite, unambiguous, and free in its construction from all reasonable doubt; and that as to the vital points involved too much should not be left either to the construction of courts or the discretion of subordinate boards, whose judgments, to say nothing else, are constantly subjected to powerful ulterior influences. Legislation on this important subject affecting such vast interests should be unambiguous and free from every reasonable doubt. The evil consequences that will inevitably flow from provisions susceptible of various constructions, leading to diverse and perhaps absolutely contradictory results, can not be overestimated.

The confusion that would necessarily arise from different constructions from time to time by different federal courts in different sections of the country on the various provisions left unwisely so widely open to construction, as are many of those of this bill, until all these vital questions could be brought before and passed upon by the court of final resort would be "confusion worse confounded;" and in the meanwhile the commercial interests of this country would stagger amid the conflicting gales of the advancing storm. But not only so. Such an act would be regarded by the people of this country, who are not in these later days very readily deceived, as in the nature of the "make-believe order," and it would in the end fail either to satisfy the enlightened, intelligent public judgment, or to correct the evils aimed at.

With these preliminary remarks, therefore, I come to consider the report of the conference committee. And while there is much in the bill reported for our consideration that is wise and reasonable and just, and not in any proper sense open to the criticism hinted at, I feel warranted in saying that I have never in all my experience heard so many different and strangely contradictory constructions placed upon, or claimed for, the material provisions of any piece of legislation, or proposed legislation, as have been placed upon and claimed for the material and arterial provisions of this bill by able constitutional and statutory lawyers, both in and out of the Senate, friends and foes, since it was reported to this body on the 15th of December last. Nor do these various constructions of material parts of the pending measure come by any means merely from those who are opposed to the bill; if this were so it might, perhaps, with some degree of propriety and reason, be claimed that it is the result of some ulterior purpose and simply the execution of a carefully prepared plan, concocted by the transportation companies to bring the measure into radical disrepute, and thus encompass its defeat; but that this is not so the Senate and the country will, in view of the discussion that has already taken place in the Senate and out of the Senate in reference to the material provisions of this bill, and of the strangely contradictory constructions given, bear me witness.

Honorable Senators on this floor who announce their adherence to each and every section of the bill, and who propose to vote for it as a whole as it stands, without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t," and who do not desire its amendment in any particular, differ widely, and radically, and irreconcilably as to the proper construction to be placed on some of its most important provisions. That the bill is therefore in its most salient features ambiguous in its phraseology, uncertain in its purpose, and vague and misleading in its structure, if not indeed absolutely inefficient as a means of meeting and overcoming the evil against which it is ostensibly directed, is a fact patent to all.

Let us examine a little more minutely in reference to this matter; and in this connection I desire more particularly to discuss the provisions of this bill relating to the subject of long and short hauls as contained in its fourth section. And in this connection I desire to say that I have very serious doubts, and always have had, whether an act of Congress prohibiting the common-carrier from charging more for a short haul than for a long haul, the short haul being over the same line and included within the long haul, will have the good effect on the transportation business of the country that those interested in cheap transportation rates on the short hauls hope and expect it to have.

I say there may be very grave doubts whether those shippers interested in cheap short hauls will in the end be benefited by such legislation. Whether they will or not may depend on a very great many circumstances and conditions which may exist in certain sections of the country and which do not exist in other sections. Such legislation in certain localities may possibly have the effect to cheapen local rates, or reduce charges on short hauls and still maintain low rates on the long hauls, while in other localities the effect may and most likely will be just the reverse. It may, in the latter class of cases, have the effect to increase the charge on the long haul, and I believe this will be found to be the case in a great majority of cases, and thus instead of reducing the charge on the short haul may maintain it at present rates or even actually increase it.

Then, again, in many localities, that is, on many lines of transportation, the local business may be of such a nature, character and amount, the through business being subject to such a degree of competition from other lines of rail or water transportation as to make an increase of through rates impossible, as to make it to the interest of the transportation company to absolutely abandon all through business and permit it to go over competing lines by water—or over railroads on foreign soil—rather than reduce its rates on the shorter hauls where the income of the carrier is enormous, and in such an event most calamitous results would follow.

First, no relief in such a case could possibly come to those interested in short hauls, and second, a fatal blow, it seems to me, would be struck at our transcontinental or through commerce as also our foreign commerce; and a great blow would thus be struck, not alone at our great commercial cities, but at the general development and industrial prosperity of our whole country.

And in viewing this question in this aspect, and in speculating upon the probable effect of this character of legislation on our commercial and transportation interests, local and general, and upon the development of our country, in reference to which, it must be conceded by all, railroads perform a most important function, especially those commercial and transportation interests of the Pacific Northwest in which I feel a peculiarly especial interest, it must not be forgotten that two material elements enter as important factors into this consideration:

First. That, as a rule, the great bulk of profits realized by railroad transportation companies come not from their long hauls, where freight charges are held, as a general rule, at the minimum by competitive lines of both rail and water, but from local business, or from short hauls, where these companies are not restricted by competition; and,

Second. That it is safe to assume that the transportation company will always look primarily to their own interest and not those of the general public, and if that interest should, by any possiblity, dictate the abandonment of through freights for the sake of the golden harvest they might expect to reap by the transportation of great volumes of local business at high rates, then all will agree that there would be no hesitation whatever upon the part of the transportation company to abandon their through freight business. For one I do not look for that result. I do believe, however, on the contrary, that there will be in such an event such secret combination between these powerful transcontinental companies, including water lines, as will increase the through freights over present rates, and thus enable them, notwithstanding the provisions of the pending bill, to maintain their present exorbitant charges on short hauls. Of course other provisions of this bill are intended to prevent such combination; namely, the declaration that all charges shall be reasonable, and the prohibition of pooling; but will they do it?

Therefore, I am by no means clear that any act, iron-clad, plain, direct, unequivocal, positive, unambiguous, and unyielding in its terms—and the present bill lacks all these essentials—prohibiting a greater charge for a short haul than for a long haul would have the effect of reducing existing freight charges on short hauls; for instance, on short hauls between Saint Paul and Portland, Oreg., and Puget Sound, or between Omaha and Portland and Puget Sound, or between San Francisco and Portland, Oreg., and Puget Sound, or between Chicago or New York and either of these far western points on the waters of the Columbia River and Puget Sound; and while I believe that no speculation or divination upon the part of any person, however well informed upon this intricate subject, can in advance determine these important questions, and that nothing short of actual experiment can determine them; if, however, the experiment is to be tried, in deference to what I believe is an almost universal demand upon the part of the people, as I concede it should be, then I am unwilling, for one, at least until I have aided in exhausting every fair and honorable legislative expedient to procure a proper provision on this subject, to insult that portion of my constituency who are demanding this character of legislation (I refer now solely to the long and short haul clause) by presenting them with a piece of legislation professedly as a short-haul protection, which in reality, in my judgment, although of course not so intended by the honorable conference committee, is a cheat, a deception, and a fraud; having within its provisions ample room through which either an interstate-commerce commission or any judicial tribunal in the land, not only could drive a coach and four without any trouble whatever, but in reference to which they would feel compelled by its very terms to declare its provisions absolutely harmless.

That I may not be misunderstood, I must be permitted to state in this connection that perhaps no other people within the limits of the United States are to-day subjected to such unreasonable and unjust transportation charges and flagrant discriminations as are those residing and doing business in Eastern Oregon and Washington Territory. None more than they can possibly be interested in a greater degree in some effective legislation that will reduce the transportation charges to which they are subjected to reasonable figures, and abrogate and prohibit these grievous discriminations. The occupants of that empire, believing that legislation prohibiting a greater charge for a short haul than a long haul will inure to their benefit, are desirous of obtaining legislation to that effect. When they ask, therefore, for what they believe to be bread, whether acting advisedly or under a misapprehension as to the probable effects of such legislation, let us not, if we attempt to legislate on this subject at all, under any misguided supposition or false idea that we are drawing the wool over their eyes, or deceiving them, give them what in reality we know to be a stone.

Let us inquire, then, as to their situation in reference to the business of transportation, the evils to which they are subjected, the hardships which they are called upon to endure by reason of their peculiar situation in reference to the transportation lines of the country, and then, as to the legislation proposed by the pending bill, the construction it must, when its provisions are applied to their particular case, undoubtedly receive, and we will at once realize the absolute poverty of this bill, so far as the long and short haul clause is concerned, as a measure of relief to that people—conceding for the present that such a measure, free from loop-holes and the absolute certainty of being entirely swept away in its practical operation by construction, would bring the relief desired.

First, then, as to the situation of the people of what is known as the inland empire—Eastern Oregon and Washington and Western Idaho and Montana—as to transportation charges, and for my present purpose I can not do better than to read a communication received by me recently from a committee of the Board of Trade of Dalles City, Oreg. Dalles City is located on the south side of the Columbia, in the State of Oregon, on the line of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, and distant 88 miles east from the city of Portland.

The communication is as follows:

THE DALLES, OREGON, December 29, 1886.

SIR: On behalf of the Board of Trade of Dalles City we desire to call your attention to the situation of the merchants of this city and other cities in Eastern Oregon and Washington on the line of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company's railway respecting freight rates to and from Eastern points.

The schedule of rates to these way points upon all classes of freights from the East is made up by adding to the through rate to Portland the local rate back from Portland to the way point. This additional local back charge is an arbitrary charge, and is in no way connected with the through rate.

For example: A car-load of merchandise to any of these way points from Chicago is delivered at the way point without going through to Portland, and the freight charges thereon consist of the full through rate to Portland plus the local rate on merchandise from Portland to the way point. In the case of our own city this local rate from Portland is, on the average, from 70 per cent. to 80 per cent. of what is charged for hauling the same merchandise from Chicago to Portland. The distance from Portland to this city is 88 miles. The local rate from Portland to this point, on the average, is 45 cents per 100 pounds. The through rate from Chicago to Portland on the same class of freight is 65 cents per 100 pounds, making the actual charge from Chicago to this point $1.10 per 100 pounds; and yet we are 88 miles nearer Chicago than is Portland, and are on the direct line between those two points.

In the case of merchants east of us the situation is worse. Thus at Arlington, a point 141 miles east of Portland, the local back rate is, on the average, 70 cents per 100 pounds; that is, 5 cents more than the through rate from Chicago to Portland; making the actual charge to that point from Chicago $1.35 per 100 pounds. In the case of Walla Walla, Wash., Baker City and Huntington, Oreg., the local back rate is double the through rate to Portland. Yet the actual haul in each of the cases referred to falls considerably short of the haul for which is paid the through rate alone. Concerning this through rate no complaint is made, and merchants at the way points are entirely willing to pay the same rates as are charged for the haul to Portland. But the arbitrary local back-rate charge is deemed a most unjust and burdensome exaction, falling little short of systematic robbery.

In like manner merchants at these way points are compelled to pay on shipments to Chicago, in addition to the through rate from Portland to Chicago, the local rate from the way point to Portland. Thus the railway company exact from dealers at these way points on all shipments to and from all eastern points a charge equal to what they would be entitled to charge if they were compelled to haul the freight first to Portland. But no such necessity exists, and for this excessive arbitrary charge no service whatever is rendered.

If the bill now pending before Congress known as the interstate-commerce bill gives us relief from this unjust and burdensome discrimination we would respectfully request you to co-operate with our other Representatives in Congress in securing its passage. If not, we earnestly hope you will endeavor to procure such other legislation as will relieve us.

We call the attention of Hons. J. N. DOLPH and BINGER HERMANN to the same matter by similar communications.

Yours, very respectfully,

E. B. MCFARLAND,
A. S. MACALLISTER,
B. S. HUNTINGTON,
Committee for Board of Trade of Dalles City, Oreg.

Hon. J. H. MITCHELL,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

The communication, I doubt not, correctly recites the facts in so far as it undertakes to state them in reference to the transportation situation of the people of that country, and in its conclusion doubtless voices the sentiment of nine-tenths of the people of Eastern Oregon and Washington Territory.

Recognizing, then, for the present in this discussion, this communication as an instruction to me, and leaving out of consideration every other consideration as to the probable effect of legislation of this character, my first inquiry should be, does the pending bill as it stands, without change or amendment, give those people relief from these unjust and burdensome discriminations, even admitting that an entirely effective provision on the subject of long and short hauls would have the effect to relieve them? I answer without hesitation, most emphatically in my judgment it does not, and for these very cogent reasons. And, as I have said, in considering this branch of the case I concede for the argument that a properly drawn long and short haul clause, free from loop-holes—not so framed as to be easily, and as in this case necessarily, construed away and rendered inoperative, and not subjected to the discretion of courts or interstate-commerce boards—would afford specific and ample relief.

The provision on this subject of long and short hauls is contained in the fourth section of the bill, and is as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act.

It will be observed by the most casual observer that this section contains in its first paragraph six words, which are of rather ominous import, to say the least; and which it would seem to the ordinary observer, whether lawyer or layman, are by no means necessary, but, on the contrary, absolutely unnecessary in a clause prohibiting a greater charge for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance. These words are the following:

Under substantially similar circumstances and conditions.

But these words being in the bill, they must mean something. It is to be presumed that they are there for a purpose, and they must be construed. Suppose this bill became a law, and the Oregon Steam Navigation Company or the Northern Pacific Railroad Company should still persist in charging the same rates from Chicago or Saint Paul to Dalles City or Arlington or Umatilla, in Oregon, they do now, and the people of Dalles City or Arlington or Umatilla should object to this as being in violation of this law, what, manifestly, in view of this provision—these six words above quoted—would be the answer of the railroad company? Undoubtedly it would be that "the circumstances and conditions" under which they are transporting this freight on this shorter distance are not "substantially similar," in fact, not similar at all, to those under which they are transporting "like kind of property" from Saint Paul to Portland, the longer distance; and therefore the provisions of this bill prohibiting the greater charge for a short distance than a long one does not apply. And why would not such an argument under the provisions of this bill, with these ominous words "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions" inserted in them, be valid? Could an argument like that be successfully combatted for one moment before any honest, intelligent judicial tribunal in the land? The very argument upon this floor of the author of this bill would sustain the plea.

What would be the character of the argument of the attorneys of the railroad company to sustain their position? Simply and clearly and beyond all question that because in the one case, that of the long haul from Saint Paul, or from Chicago to Portland, or from New York, if you please, to Portland, they are subjected in their business of transportation to the "circumstance" and "conditions" of competing lines of transportation via various railroad lines from Saint Paul and Chicago via Omaha, the Union Pacific, Oregon Short Line, and Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, to say nothing of the Canadian Pacific, running over foreign territory, and from New York to Portland, if that may be considered one of the long hauls in this bill to the "circumstance" and "conditions," not only of competition from the transcontinental lines, but the water transportation lines by the Isthmus and around Cape Horn; and further, that these circumstances and conditions are not circumstances and conditions substantially similar, or at all similar, to those that attach to or apply to the transportation of property over the short hauls? But not only so. The argument would further go that the circumstances and conditions of volume and character of business, terminal expenses, and cost of service in the one case are essentially dissimilar to those in the other, and, therefore, the long and short haul inhibition could not apply in such a case.

That I am not mistaken in the construction I have given to this provision of section 4 of the bill relating to the question of long and short hauls, I beg to quote from the remarks of the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], the chairman of the conference committee upon the part of the Senate, and who reports this bill for our consideration from the conference committee. In order to obtain from him his construction of the words—as they appear in the 4th section of the bill, I, on Monday last, during the speech of the honorable Senator submitted to him an interrogatory. I quote from the RECORD of January 11, the colloquy that then took place between the honorable Senator and myself, and also between the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and the honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], bearing directly upon the very question I am now considering, as follows:

Under substantially similar circumstances and conditions—

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Section 4 reads:

"That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, &c."

What I want to get at is the meaning of these words, "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions for a shorter than for a longer distance on the same line, * * * the shorter being included within the longer distance." To explain what I desire to get at, I will make this inquiry of the chairman of the committee: Take a long haul, from San Francisco to Portland, Oreg., over a railroad running from San Francisco to Portland. Transportation by rail over a route like that, of course, is affected to a certain extent by steamship competition, by steamers running between the terminal points. Now suppose a short haul, between points intermediate of those two terminal points, say from Stockton to Roseburgh, would that come within the provisions of the section? Would that short haul, included in this long haul, be subject to the influence of steamboat competition? Is that a haul "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions" as the haul over the whole line of road?

Mr. CULLOM. I will touch upon that subject briefly in what I have to say, and shall answer the Senator from Oregon in the course of my remarks.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am inquiring for information. I have not yet made up my mind as to the construction of this bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not objecting to the Senator's inquiry. I was going to say that I shall discuss that point briefly in what I say; but in answer to the Senator I have this to say now: that the words "substantially similar circumstances any conditions" are words of very great importance, and words which may be taken for what they say by a court or by a commission who may have something to do with the construction of the law. Whether the section should be construed so as to give relief as to the water point of competition that the Senator refers to, or not, the section itself does provide that at such a competing point, if the point does exist, the interstate commission shall have the power to give relief upon a showing of the proper state of facts.

Further on in the Senator's remarks he said, in further reply to my interrogatory:

The limitations placed upon the prohibition that is made are very significant, and they must not be overlooked. They require that in determining the sum that may be charged for a shorter as compared with a longer distance, the comparison must be made—

1. Between shipments "of like kind of property."
2. "Under substantially similar circumstances and conditions."
3. "Over the same line."
4. "In the same direction."
5. When the shorter is "included within the longer distance."

When the act is to be applied in any given case to measure the charge that may be made for any distance, as compared with a longer distance, all of these limitations must be taken into account, and they must all apply to the case—not three or four of them, but all of them. The first, fourth, and fifth of these limitations do not appear to call for any explanation, but the meaning of the second and third may need some explanation.

As I understand them, the words "circumstances and conditions" mean the conditions that govern railway traffic, and the circumstances under which it is transported. To my mind these words are full of meaning. They comprehend all the circumstances and conditions that may justify differences in rates, such as competition with other railroads and with water routes, the volume and character of business at different points, the difference in terminal expenses, and the cost of service in each case.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask the Senator a question, if he will allow me.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator wish to be understood as saying that it is the meaning of this bill that the long and short haul provision does not apply; that is, that the circumstances are not substantially similar where one of the points is a competing point and where one is not?

Mr. CULLOM. I mean to say simply this: You take one railroad, if you please, between the city of Washington and the city of New York; that railroad makes its schedule of rates and it publishes, under this bill, that schedule of rates, and so far as its operation on its own road, not in connection with other lines or roads, but on its own road, it is not at liberty to charge more for a shorter distance on that road between here and New York under like circumstances and conditions than it charges from here to New York.

Mr. GEORGE. But the point is this: I understood the Senator to say—and that is what I want to have settled—that if one point from which the shipment is made is a competitive point, either by having a competing railroad or by having water transportation, and the other point from which the shipment is made is not a competitive point, then the circumstances are not substantially similar.

Mr. CULLOM. I do say the facts should be considered.

Mr. GEORGE. Then let me say, that if I believed that that was the meaning of the bill and the courts would assent to it, I would vote against it, because with that construction upon those words the whole provision in the bill in reference to the long and short haul amounts to nothing

Mr. CULLOM. If it does not amount to anything, it will not hurt anybody.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not want to hurt anybody, but to save somebody by a substantial provision on that subject.

Mr. CULLOM. So do I; but I do not want to humbug anybody either. The Senate, however, by a deliberate vote placed in the bill which was passed by the Senate during last session these words, "under like circumstances and conditions," and did it, the select committee not having reported those words to the Senate in the original bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not object to the words. I object to the interpretation which you put upon them. I do not believe that is the true and legal interpretation, and I protest that this bill shall go through here with an authoritative exposition or interpretation of the meaning of these words given them by the Senator. If that be the meaning I am against it.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Mississippi has a right to put whatever construction on those words he chooses, and of course he will do so; but I say, not as the chairman of the committee, but simply as a Senator upon this floor, that those words were put in there by this Senate after the select committee had failed to report them, and they were put there because the original section reported by the committee was too rigid and it was feared that it would interfere with the general commerce of the country, and when they were put there they were put there to mean something, and they do mean something.

They mean just what they say, that you shall not charge more for the shorter than for the longer distance on the same line in the same direction under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, and those conditions and circumstances may be, if you please, the fact that one place is a competing point and that another place is not, the fact that one place furnishes a large amount of business and the way station does not furnish perhaps more than a car-load, and that it incurs additional expense and all that sort of thing. No court, no commission, and no lawyer can afford to say that those words do not mean anything when they are put in there.

Mr. GEORGE. With that construction of it, I think the Senator gives away all the beneficial part of the bill.

I think that by the construction put upon the clause as to the long and short haul the Senator has destroyed the benefit of that provision.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the author of this bill [Mr. CULLOM] and its able manager and principal defender on this floor, acknowledges in unequivocal terms that in determining the sum that may be charged for a shorter as compared with a longer distance, the comparison must be made: 1. Between shipments "of like kind of property;" 2. Shipments "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions;" 3. "Over the same line;" 4. "In the same direction;" 5. "When the shorter is included within the longer distance;" and that when the act is to be applied in any given case to measure the charge that may be made for any distance as compared with a longer distance, all of these limitations must be taken into account and they must all apply to the case. Not three or four of them, as so well stated by the Senator, but all of them. And what do we find transpiring on this very floor in reference to the meaning of these specific words and to the construction that must be placed upon them? We find the honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] rising in his place and declaring that if this clause is to receive the construction placed upon it by its author, that then, to use his own language—

The whole provision in the bill in reference to the long and short haul amounts to nothing.

And further, that—

If that is the meaning of your bill I will vote against it.

It is due, however, to the Senator from Mississippi that it should be stated that he favors the bill as I understand, but differs with the honorable Senator from Illinois, its author, as to the construction these words must receive. That the construction, however, placed upon them by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], its author, is the correct one, and that which will be given it by the courts in the event of this bill becoming a law without amendment of this provision, I do not doubt for a single moment. That is the construction which the conference committee evidently, yes avowedly, intended the section should receive.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. Unless I was unfortunate in expressing myself, the Senator from Oregon has attributed to me as attaching too much importance to the construction placed on that clause of the bill by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. Of course I disagree with him and very radically; but still, even if he were correct in his construction of the bill, though I would be opposed to that provision of the bill, yet I regard that there is enough merit in other parts of the bill for it to receive my support, even with the construction put upon that clause of it by the Senator from Illinois.

I mean to say, that the bill is not satisfactory to me; it does not go as far as I would like to go in the direction of restraining the power of the railroads; but I shall not stand still and refuse to take one step in the direction of correcting abuses because I can not take all the steps that I desire to take.

Mr. HOAR. I am tempted to ask the courtesy of my honorable friend from Oregon to allow me to read, in precise connection with the point he is now making, a letter from a conferee on the part of the House.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will yield to my friend from Massachusetts as soon as I say a word in answer to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I have already stated that I simply quoted what the Senator from Mississippi had said to the Senator from Illinois in the debate on Monday. I stated in the same connection that I understood the Senator from Mississippi favored this bill because he thought there was much merit in the bill outside of this provision.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not want to be misunderstood.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I said I understood that he differed from the construction placed on the bill by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not want it to be understood that even with these difficulties in the bill, if the long and short haul provision is as imperfect as the Senator from Oregon seems to think it is, for that reason alone I should vote against the bill, because there are other very valuable provisions in the bill which would induce me to give it my support notwithstanding the imperfection of that clause, even if it were as imperfect as the Senator from Oregon thinks. I do not think it is that imperfect.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I yield now to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I think it may be quite interesting to the Senate to have an authoritative statement of the interpretation put upon this clause by the Representatives of the other House. I have taken pains to obtain one which is very brief and which I should like to read in connection with the point my friend is making:

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of January 4 only reached me last evening. You propound three interrogatories, which for convenience are repeated and answered. Judge REAGAN and Mr. WEAVER, the other House conferees, being absent, of course I cannot authoritatively speak for them, but I believe that their views coincide with those herein expressed by me.

First—

This is the first question—

Do you understand that the prohibition in the fourth section of the bill, as amended in conference, will prevent the common carrier from receiving a larger sum in proportion for a shorter than for a longer distance, or only that the amount of the entire freight for the less distance shall not exceed the amount of the entire freight for the greater distance on a similar article, under similar circumstances?

This is the answer:

I understand that the fourth section will prevent a common carrier within the meaning of the act from receiving a larger sum in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property for a shorter than for a longer distance, over the same line in the same direction; in other words, "the amount of the entire freight for the less distance (included in the greater distance) shall not exceed the amount of the entire freight for the greater distance, on a similar article, under similar circumstances."

Second. Suppose a thousand barrels of flour be taken from Chicago to Boston, and be thence conveyed to Europe, and another thousand barrels of flour be taken from Chicago to Boston or Worcester, a point nearer Chicago, on the same line, destined for home consumption, are these substantially similar circumstances within the meaning of the bill? In other words, does a mere difference in the destination of property create the dissimilar circumstances and conditions contemplated in section four?

In my judgment, the difference in the case cited by you would not create dissimilar circumstances.

Third. Does the existence of competition at the end of the longer distance which does not exist at the end of the shorter on the same line, make a difference of circumstances and conditions within the intention of the framers of the bill?

In my opinion it does not.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

CHARLES F. CRISP.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR, United States Senate.

Mr. CRISP is one of the conferees on the part of the other House. The conferees on the part of the House of Representatives disclaim, as far as this gentleman can speak for them, the interpretation of the bill put on it by the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. May I say a word?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I hardly think it is fair to ask of any one of the conferees what his interpretation of the clause would be upon certain general propositions for this reason, which is manifest, that no man in the Senate or upon the conference committee can determine in advance what the construction of the courts will be on those words, "similar conditions and circumstances," until all the facts of the particular case are made out.

Every shipment, whether there be competition or not, would be surrounded by its own set of facts. Competition might be one of the facts which would enter into the question of determining whether the conditions were substantially similar; but I think no man can say that competition existing at a certain point would determine that question. It seems to me that all anybody on the conference committee or otherwise can say is this: If you will present to me all the facts and all the circumstances which attend a particular shipment of goods as compared with another shipment of goods, then I can say for myself what I think the true construction of the statutes would be as to that particular matter; but none of us can say more than that.

Mr. HOAR. But when we have a question pending involving whether great, vast commercial transactions in this country can continue, we are entitled, as it seems to me, to know whether the persons who propose a measure upon which that depends understand their measure one way or the other, or whether they propose that the continuance of that great commerce shall be referred to four or five commissioners to be appointed by the President of the United States and to depend upon their interpretation of a bill.

Of course, in every case that can possibly be conceived, it would not be fair to these conferees to ask them to determine the particular case in advance; but when a great, general rule is affirmed by this bill, prohibiting the making of a rebate on hundreds of millions of dollars of commerce on which the prosperity of great sections of this country depends, whether the gentlemen who drew this language consider that that is stricken down by the bill or that it is not stricken down by the bill, or that the question whether it is stricken down by the bill or not depends on what five men appointed by the President of the United States may happen to think of it, is a fair question to put to these conferees. And when we find that the conferees differ, I think we are entitled to have it made plain to persons who think that there should not be a 5 per cent. rebate for the foreign commerce of Boston, or that it is unjust, to have the bill so drawn that the gentlemen who differ from them shall not claim that it does not mean what they want it to mean, as the Senator from Mississippi says he wants it to mean, and the Senator from Tennessee. The gentlemen who think that it ought not to be done are entitled, in my judgment, to have it put into the bill, so that he who runs may read that it shall not be done.

That is my point, and I think it is fair to ask the gentlemen who wrote this language what they mean by it. If we find that they do not agree we ought to pause and have language on which they will agree.

Mr. PLATT. But this question manifestly can not be settled in advance. Take the law as it stands without any such bill, the question as to whether the 5 per cent. rebate constitutes a reasonable rate under the circumstances is a question which now, if anybody contests it or claims otherwise, must go to the courts and must be determined by the courts.

Mr. HOAR. My friend will pardon me for saying that the question does not go to the courts whether a road is charging too little to anybody.

Mr. PLATT. It goes to the courts whether they are charging the other parties too much.

Mr. HOAR. That is another thing.

Mr. PLATT. When they allow the 5 per cent. rebate to Boston the parties who claim that they are charged too much can go to the courts and have them say what rates are reasonable. So with all railroad rates, they must be reasonable; and you can not imagine any case in which that question may not be taken, and must not be taken, if there is a controversy about it, to the courts. Now, is it any worse to take it to the commission in the first place than to the courts?

Mr. TELLER. Under the bill they can take it to the courts in the first place.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly. Let me say one thing more with regard to the question which the Senator from Massachusetts proposes because it so much affects the port of Boston. I would say that the question of export trade was one of the elements to be considered and to exercise its influence in determining the question of similar conditions and circumstances; but that it determined it of itself, I would not be prepared to say.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Oregon will pardon me once more I shall not interrupt him any further. The Senator from Connecticut, a member of this conference, says that that is one of the circumstances on which the unlikeness of conditions and circumstances is to depend.

Mr. PLATT. One of the facts.

Mr. HOAR. The three House conferees, as far as this gentleman understands their opinion, say it is not, that that is absolutely fixed by the bill, which prohibits rebates.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am glad to have so clear and emphatic an illustration injected into the belly of my speech by this controversy between different Senators and the expression of these differences of opinion as to what this section means, of the position I have been trying to enforce on the Senate, that the provisions of the bill in reference to the question of long and short hauls are vague, uncertain, and no two lawyers place the same construction upon them. Therefore it is left to each individual Senator to read and examine the bill for himself and arrive at his own conclusion as to what the bill means, taking into consideration all the while the fact, which has been developed here and now, that the very men who framed this bill, the conferees of the Senate and the House, disagree radically and emphatically as to the meaning of the fourth section.

Mr. PLATT. May I interrupt the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I refer more particularly now to the chairman of the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and the House conferees.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator pardon me if I interrupt him just once more?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me hardly to be fair to ask of the conferees an interpretation of that clause, when it is a clause which was put in by the Senate itself, and was not in the original bill as reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It was somewhat different in the bill as passed by the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. Those precise words were put in by an amendment in the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Oregon indulge me in an observation or two?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to say this upon the difference of construction as to the meaning of the bill: In the first place the true meaning of this measure, as of every other law, is bound to be settled by the courts, and in arriving at the true meaning of the act it is a fundamental canon of statutory construction that the court will not look at the opinions expressed by the members of the legislature who voted for and against it as to its meaning. The meaning of the act will be determined by a consideration alone of its language.

That is the first observation I desire to make; and the next is that there never was an important statute from the earliest history down to the present time which was ever passed by any legislative body that did not give rise to disputes as to the meaning of the act itself. Our Constitution is subject to these criticisms all the time, and the most important and beneficial acts, for instance, the Statute of Frauds, passed as early as Charles II, have been the fruitful source of disputes and contrary decisions by the courts as to their meaning.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not wish to yield for a general dissertation on the Constitution.

Mr. GEORGE. That is as far as I want to go.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will say in answer to the Senator from Mississippi that he on Monday last in responding to the construction placed on the fourth section of the bill by its author, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], stated distinctly and emphatically that if that were the construction of the section, then it amounted to nothing as a regulation of the long and short haul business, and that if that were the construction he would not vote for that provision at least as a separate proposition, while he thought there were some other good things in the bill which would justify him in voting for it.

Now, my friend on the left, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], representing the great commercial city of Boston and certain other commercial cities I presume in the State of Massachusetts, evidently from the position he takes, is opposed teeth and toe-nails to the provision relating to long and short hauls. He thinks that it materially and adversely affects certain people whom he deems it to be his duty to represent on this floor, and therefore he gives a certain construction to the fourth section which is directly the opposite construction to that placed upon it by the Senator who wrote it and who reported it, the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

To fortify his position the Senator from Massachusetts brings in a letter from one member of the conference committee on the part of the House disputing the construction placed upon this section by the chairman of the conference committee on the part of the Senate; and therefore you have it just as I stated in the beginning of my speech, that a bill is presented here in reference to which, so far as I am advised at present, no two of the honorable members of the conference committee can agree as to the proper construction to be placed upon it. Therefore I, as an humble member of the Senate, am called upon in my place to examine this bill for myself and to place upon it the construction that I think the courts will inevitably be called upon to place upon it when it is brought before them.

Now, I will proceed to consider the provisions of this section and see what it does mean if we can get at it.

But let us inquire further as to the real meaning of this fourth section. It will not do in discussing this phase of this report to confuse the rights, powers, and duties of the interstate-commerce commission provided for in this bill in respect of special cases, which I think the honorable Senator from Illinois inadvertently did the other day, with the plain meaning and interpretation of the bill as to what is and what is not declared to be unlawful by the express terms of this fourth section in reference to the long and short haul business.

Mr. CULLOM. As I understand the Senator, he says that I, as chairman of the committee, have undertaken to confuse the public mind upon the question of the meaning of that section.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Not at all, Mr. President.

Mr. CULLOM. If he makes any such insinuation as that, I desire to have the gentleman distinctly understand that I gave my construction of that section plainly, honestly, and in good faith to myself and to the country, and I will not allow any man to insinuate to the contrary.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from Illinois entirely and absolutely misunderstands me, as he will find before I have finished what I am about to say. I do not think the Senator is justified in manifesting the feeling he does in reference to any language I have used. If I have been unguarded I wish to declare now and here that I have no intention whatever, as the chairman will see before I finish my remarks, of imputing to the chairman of the committee anything else but an industrious, able, and unwearied effort to secure the passage of the very best bill he can get on this great subject. What I mean to say is that in discussing this phase of the report we should be careful not to confuse the rights, powers, and duties of the interstate-commerce commission provided for in this bill in respect of special cases, as I think the Senator from Illinois did the other day, not of course intending to mislead, with the plain meaning and interpretation of the bill as to what is and what is not declared to be unlawful by the express terms of the fourth section in reference to the long and short haul business.

The commission has no jurisdiction or power whatever to hear or determine anything in any special case unless such special case arises in a case where the long and short haul provision applies. It is only in case of a charge that is prohibited by law, that is by the first paragraph of such section, that can be made a special case; and in no instance can a special case arise under the provisions of this fourth section, or any other provision of the bill, that can be considered by the commission whereby the terms of the section the long and short haul provision does not apply. When, then, in what case or cases does the long and short haul inhibition operate? When can it possibly attach under the provisions of this section? In what instance or instances, when and where, and under what circumstances is it by the specific terms of this fourth section made unlawful to receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of property for a shorter than for a longer distance? Clearly only in the single instance where all the following conditions combine and exist, that is to say—

1. Where the property transported over the long and short hauls is "of like kind;"

2. Where it is transported in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; and, lastly,

3. Where the transportation over the two hauls, the long and the short distance, is, to quote the language of the section—

Under substantially similar circumstances and conditions.

It is only therefore, it must be observed, in the solitary case where all these conditions combine and actually exist that the inhibition against receiving more for a short than for a long haul attaches by virtue of the fourth section of the proposed bill. It is only when all these "conditions" exist that it is declared by this proposed bill that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to its provisions to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property for a shorter than for a longer distance. Therefore, if any one of any of these three essential conditions is lacking in any given case, then as to such case the prohibition does not apply, and in such an instance it is not, and can not be under the express terms of this proposed legislation, unlawful in any common carrier to charge or receive more for a short haul than a long haul. If, therefore, in any given case the transportation of persons or property over the long and the short haul is not "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions," then in that case it is not unlawful under the express provisions of this proposed bill for any common carrier to charge or receive more for transporting persons or property over a short than a long distance, and in such a case the railroad commission provided for in this bill has no jurisdiction whatever.

I understood the other day in the argument of the Senator from Illinois—I may have misunderstood him—that he did claim that the commission provided for in this bill would in a case of that kind have jurisdiction; in other words, that the interstate-commerce commission provided for by a certain section of this bill would have the jurisdiction and the power to determine whether in two given cases the freight or persons were transported under substantially similar circumstances and conditions. If I understood the Senator from Illinois aright in regard to that, then I differ, and I insist that the true construction of this section precludes and excludes the commission from any say whatever in the matter, unless it be in a case arising where the law has declared it unlawful to receive a larger sum for a short haul than a long haul, and that the question as to whether the thing is done under the same circumstances and conditions is not a matter to be considered by them at all under the provisions of the bill.

In such a case the bill itself, by express terms, excludes it from the operation of the mala prohibita declared by its provisions in certain cases. In other words, it is only in a case where all the three several conditions hereinbefore specified exist; and hence it is only a case wherein, by the terms of this bill, it is declared to be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive more for a short than a long distance, that there is by the provisions of this bill any jurisdiction whatever in the commission to consider a special case by reason of the hardship of such case. As equity is the correction of that wherein the law by reason of its universality is deficient, so here, this commission has authority to act, in-so-far as the fourth section is concerned, only in such special cases wherein a strict enforcement of the prohibition would work a hardship.

This being the condition and status, therefore, of this proposed bill as now presented to us, can it for one moment be insisted with any kind of propriety by those favoring an effective long and short haul clause that this bill meets the case? Can any member of this Senate point to a single instance in connection with transportation over any one of the great transcontinental routes of this country wherein the transportation over such line or lines is performed "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions" to those of the transportation on such lines, or any of them, on any one of the shorter hauls on the same line between the terminal points of the long haul?

I undertake to say that not a single instance can be suggested, either by the Senator from Illinois, who has reported this bill, and in whose ability, earnestness, and zeal, and entire good faith in his unwearied efforts to secure some good legislation on this great subject I have the utmost confidence, or any other member of the Senate, wherein the transportation on any short haul included in any one of the long hauls on any one of the transcontinental roads of these United States is performed, or regulated, or controlled, or the rates of transportation fixed by or "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions" to those under which transportation is performed, or regulated, controlled, or carried on, or rates of transportation fixed over any of the shorter or intermediate hauls within the terminal limits of the long haul on any such line.

Unquestionably the competition by both rail and water—rail on our own soil and over and through foreign territory as well, which our legislation can not reach—and also the volume and character of business at extreme terminal points, and over long hauls, the difference in terminal expenses, and the cost of service on such hauls as compared with all these conditions on short hauls, must, of necessity, make the "circumstances" and "conditions" under which transportation is carried on by our transcontinental roads over their long or through hauls entirely dissimilar in every essential particular from that carried on in any portion of any of these transcontinental lines on any of the shorter hauls between their extreme terminal limits, and which in no single instance, perhaps, is subject to the "circumstance" or "condition" of competition, or, to say the least, subject substantially to that character and degree of competition which attaches to, controls, regulates, and fixes the charge on the long hauls.

Therefore, I conclude, without hesitation, that the pending bill, in-so-far as it professes to establish a rule that will prevent common carriers from charging or receiving a greater price for transporting persons or property over a short than over a long haul is an absolutely harmless piece of legislation in-so-far as the interests of the common carrier are concerned, and wholly and absolutely impotent and inefficient in-so-far as giving protection to the shipper is concerned. In a word, the fourth section relating to long and short hauls undertakes to declare certain things unlawful, and then in the same breath declares that the thing sought to be prohibited in order to be unlawful must combine three or more certain specific conditions, which, in not one case in a thousand, are found to exist in the same particular case. In short, it professes to meet a popular demand, while in fact it does not meet it at all. It is worse than the tub to the whale business. It pretends to make it unlawful to charge or receive a greater amount for a short haul than for a long one, and yet it prescribes such conditions, on the existence and unity of which alone the inhibition can attach and operate, as necessarily throw each and every case beyond the reach of the prohibitory provisions of the bill.

The same paralyzing clause is found in section 2 of the bill, which declares unjust discrimination to be unlawful by prohibiting special rates, rebates, drawbacks, and all other devices by which a greater or less compensation for any service rendered or to be rendered, in the matter of transportation, is charged or received from one person than from another for a like and contemporaneous service. No person, either shipper or common carrier, can present any valid objection to this.

No one will contend that unjust discriminations of this character should be permitted. And yet this conference committee, who must be supposed to represent the true interests of the people, of the producer, the consumer, the shipper, and not the interests of the common carrier, except to see that no injustice is done, have inserted in this section these same cabalistic words, "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions."

So that in every case arising under that section, before the act can be considered unlawful, the question must be investigated and determined by some tribunal as to whether what has been done in the two cases—the one of which it is claimed is unlawful—was done "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions." Without these six words the section against unjust discriminations amounts to something; with them in, it is, in my judgment, practically useless. So, also, as to section four.

Believing that this bill as reported will become a law without amendment in respect to the provisions I have discussed, and inasmuch as it is doubtless generally believed by people throughout this country interested in cheap service for short hauls that this bill contains an effective provision on that subject, and being firmly of the conviction that the provision as it stands is absolutely valueless, and will prove in practical operation to be so, I have felt it a duty I owed my constituents to submit these observations as to my understanding of the measure; and whatever may be the result of this measure finally, or the character of my votes in disposing of it, I should reserve the right to change both my judgment and my vote, on any future occasion, in reference to this whole business of long and short hauls, should the practical workings of this bill, in the event it becomes a law, demonstrate that the true interests of all the people of the great Pacific Northwest, her producers, her varied industries, her commerce, and her commercial cities demand such change.

The mighty and complex problem of constructing empire in the great Pacific Northwest, of developing her unparalleled and diverse resources, of building up her commerce, is now undergoing solution. And it is of the utmost importance that whatever may be done here shall not complicate but rather tend to expedite such solution in a manner that will promote the true interests of all concerned.

In conclusion, I submit the following proposed amendments for the consideration of the conference committee, in the event that by the action of the Senate this report shall be recommitted to that committee for further consideration:

1. Amend section 2 by striking out the following words:

Under substantially similar circumstances and conditions.

2. Amend section 4 by striking from such section the following words:

Under substantially similar circumstances and conditions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. SEWELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from New Jersey will yield a moment, I desire to make a statement.

Mr. SEWELL. I withdraw my motion temporarily.

Mr. CULLOM. I gave notice yesterday, as I had done before, that I should ask the Senate to remain in session to-day until this subject was disposed of. There are, however, three or four Senators who have expressed a desire to speak, and who have engagements this evening which they would not be able to fill if they were detained here for the consideration of this bill after the usual hour of adjournment.

The bill is a very important one. It is not suffering by discussion or by a little delay, as I find that the Legislatures of the different States are beginning to consider the same subject and act upon it, as well as the boards of trade in different sections of the country.

I have thought it proper, therefore, to make this statement, saying that I am willing the bill shall go over to-day, so that the gentlemen who desire to speak may have an opportunity to do so to-morrow. I trust that there will not be any further delay after to-morrow, but that the bill will be disposed of then.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to suggest that I believe there are no executive messages on the table. I am inclined, therefore, to move an adjournment, in lieu of the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SEWELL. I understand that there are several reports ready for consideration in executive session.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say that, having been absent from the Senate for some time, until to-day, and not having heard the discussion of this question on the part of the Senate, and being desirous, perhaps, of presenting some views of my own, I hope very much that the subject may be postponed until to-morrow, that I may have an opportunity to make some remarks myself if I shall then desire to do so.

Mr. COLQUITT. In this connection, I beg to present a petition of citizens of Georgia, concerning the interstate-commerce bill. I do not ask for the reading of it, but that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks that the communication referred to by him be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection. It will be so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

PETITION TO CONGRESS BY PEOPLE OF GEORGIA.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, most respectfully petition your honorable bodies to pass the anti-discrimination or interstate-commerce bill now before Congress known as the Cullom bill, with the following amendment:

In the first clause of section 4, instead of reading as it does—"That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction and from the same original point of departure"—to read as follows: That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation per mile or length of haul for the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, for a shorter than for a longer haul of the same class of persons or property from or to any point in any direction on the same line of transportation: Provided, That on the shorter haul a proportionate additional rate may be charged to cover what is known as a greater percentage of terminal expenses on the shorter over the longer haul; or, in other words, a reasonable and just graduation of lower rates on the longer over the shorter haul may be allowed, but not in violation of the equal rights and privileges of the people in any town or locality sought to be protected and secured against unequal and unjust discrimination by the third section of this act; all of which variations of rates of freight shall be subject to revision, correction, and control of the commission provided by this act.

We can see no valid reason why each class or kind of persons or property should be charged heavier rates of freight for one or any locality than for another, except to cover reasonable and just terminal expenses on the short haul as compared with the longer haul.

We see no valid reason why the same kind or class of person or property should be charged heavier rates of freight from Saint Louis, Chicago, or Cincinnati to Baltimore, Philadelphia, or New York, than from Baltimore, Philadelphia, or New York, to any of the aforementioned places, or from Atlanta to either of the aforementioned places, or from either of the aforementioned places to Atlanta; that is to say, the rates of freight charged on the transportation of the same class or kind of persons or property should be the same per mile or length of haul in each direction between any two points, localities, or places on the same line, whether the haul be shorter or longer, with the exception of a reasonable and just percentage to cover terminal expenses, as aforesaid. Nor can we see any valid reason why the people or small towns located between the great commercial centers of the country should be charged higher rates of freight on the same class or kind of persons or property on the same line of transportation than the people who reside in the leading commercial centers, except in such cases as an intelligent and just commission may allow.

Nor can we see any valid reason why the Congress of the United States, representing as it does the people and the States, should not take charge of, regulate, and control this vast railroad and transportation business, as it now does many other interests.

Without attempting to portray the vast political interests and dangers involved in this great question, we most respectfully petition your honorable bodies to enact into a law the aforementioned bill with the amendment herein suggested.

GEORGIA, 1886.

This petition is signed by numerous citizens.

Mr. HARRIS. Before the question of proceeding to the consideration of executive business is put, I desire to inquire if I understood the Senator from Illinois as giving notice that he would insist upon a final disposition of this conference report before adjournment to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. That is my purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. It would be desirable, if we could do so by unanimous consent, to have an agreement that before adjournment to-morrow, no matter at what hour, we should come to a final vote, so as to end this matter.

Mr. CULLOM. I should be very glad if we could have such a unanimous consent. I did suppose the probability would be that some Senator would object; hence I did not ask unanimous consent, but I should be very glad to have it now.

Mr. HARRIS. We can not know that some Senator will object until he does it. I will ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that before adjournment to-morrow—no matter at what hour, whether it be 5 o'clock, 6 o'clock, or 10 o'clock to-morrow night—we come to a vote upon the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent of the Senate that an agreement be entered into to take the vote to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. I object.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8599) providing an additional judge in the second judicial circuit, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INTERNATIONAL PRISON CONGRESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to an invitation which has been extended to this Government to appoint a delegate or delegates to the Fourth International Prison Congress, to meet at St. Petersburg in the year 1890; and commend its suggestions to the favorable attention of Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 11, 1887.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 3125) to establish and maintain a life-saving station at Lynnhaven Inlet, Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 3126) to effect a rearrangement of grades of office in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 3127) to amend the law relating to international extradition; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SEWELL. I renew my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and twenty-six minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened; and (at 6 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 13, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 12, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REAR-ADMIRAL RALPH CHANDLER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, and recommending that permission be granted to Rear-Admiral Ralph Chandler to accept a vase tendered to him by the Emperor of Austria; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MOFFATT, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for two days, on account of sickness.

Mr. COX, of New York, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. MATSON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in support of the case of Lieut. James Macklin, United States Army, no adverse report having been made.

SETTLERS ON LANDS IN NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a bill of the following title, returned by the Senate with amendments; and the same was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

SUPERVISING INSPECTORS, ETC.

Mr. NEGLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10660) to amend sections 4405 and 4410 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to the meeting of the supervising inspectors and Inspector-General; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. SKINNER, Mr. PEEL, and Mr. PERKINS as conferees on the part of the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 54) providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TUCKER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order fixing the business for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That next Wednesday, January 12, immediately after reading the Journal, be, and is hereby, set apart for consideration of bills and resolutions presented by the Committee on the Judiciary, and if the business of said committee shall not be concluded on Wednesday, then the next day (Thursday), immediately after reading the Journal, is set apart for the same purpose.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS].

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR SECOND JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

Mr. COLLINS. I call up the bill (H. R. 8599) providing an additional judge in the second judical circuit, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be appointed for the second circuit, by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in addition to the present circuit judge, another circuit judge, who shall have the same qualifications and shall have the same power and jurisdiction therein that the justice of the Supreme Court allotted to the said circuit, or the present circuit judge, has under existing laws, and who shall be entitled to the same compensation as the present circuit judge. A circuit judge may hold a district court in place or in aid of the district judge when requested by him.

SEC. 2. The regular terms of the circuit court for the southern district of New York shall hereafter be held on the first Monday of every month. At any of said terms the different judges may hold courts separately at the same time for the hearing of any causes or proceedings pending in said court, as the same may be assigned by the judges of said court, or by a majority of them. Criminal causes and matters shall be heard at the same times as now provided by law. Any term may be extended by the order of a judge for the completion of an unfinished trial or hearing.

SEC. 3. That at two at least of said terms annually in the southern district of New York, and as much oftener as the business shall make it necessary, courts shall be held for the hearing and determination of appeals and writs of error from the district court of said district, including appeals in admiralty and in equity and reviews in bankruptcy, and also for the hearing of motions for new trial in civil cases and in criminal cases in the circuit court, and motions in arrest of judgment. Such courts shall be held by three judges authorized to hold the circuit court, one of whom may be a district judge. The circuit justice, if present, shall preside thereat; if he be not present, the circuit judge present who is senior in office shall preside. No judge shall sit in review of a cause tried before him. The decisions of the court may be reviewed as now provided by law. In the case of a division of opinion upon the hearing of any cause or question, the opinion of the majority shall be taken as the decision of the court. But upon any such hearing where a division of opinion shall arise, if the adjudication involves a legal question of sufficient importance to require that the final decision thereof shall be made in the Supreme Court, upon a certificate thereof signed by said judges, or a majority of them, a review upon writ of error or appeal may be had thereon in the Supreme Court. For that purpose the circuit court shall state the question upon which the division of opinion has arisen, with the facts upon which the same arises; and the said question shall thereupon be decided in the Supreme Court, and enforced as in other cases where the judges of the circuit court are divided in opinion. The like appeals, writs of error, or reviews in causes arising in the district court of any other district of said circuit may be heard before the said judges sitting to hear appeals in the southern district of New York, upon consent of the parties to the controversy, or their proctors or attorneys, or upon the order of the senior circuit justice. The decision of such judges shall be certified to the circuit court of such other district, and thereupon the decree of the circuit court of such district shall be entered in accordance with such decision.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to hear some explanation of this measure.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill has originated in a communication transmitted to this House by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 27th of last March, covering 108 pages, and showing the absolute necessity, in the interest of the public service, and in justice to the rights of suitors, that additional judicial force should be provided in the second judicial circuit. The matter was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and this bill, which has been unanimously reported by that committee, provides for one additional circuit judge in the second judicial circuit, which comprises the States of Vermont, New York, and Connecticut. Of all the cases pending in the nine circuits of the United States, 44 per cent. are in that circuit. According to the report made to us, 75 per cent. of all the cases against collectors of customs were pending there; and 4,000 such cases are now pending there without proper judicial force to try then. There are involved in those cases against collectors of customs about $20,000,000. The circuit judge is now obliged, when he can sit at all, to sit chiefly in equity. The district judge is occupied, during all his time, in hearing admiralty cases. The judge of the eastern district, when he can sit there, is obliged to to spend all his time in the trial of criminal cases. The condition of things in that circuit to-day, especially that part which is called the southern district of New York, amounts to a denial of justice; and in consequence of the existing state of affairs, the Government is every year losing hundreds of thousands of dollars. So that I can safely say there is an imperative necessity for the passage of this bill.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to inquire whether there are not other circuits of the United States that have as much need of an additional circuit judge as the second circuit.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not think there are, because in the second circuit 44 per cent. of all the business done in the nine circuits of the United States is transacted. But if it should turn out that any other circuit really needs an additional judge, I certainly shall have no objection to recommending that one be authorized.

Mr. PETERS. Is it not a fact that the eighth circuit, comprising the States of Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, and Colorado, has as much need of an additional circuit judge as the second circuit?

Mr. COLLINS. I can safely say that there is not one-third as much business transacted in the eighth as in the second circuit.

Mr. MILLS. A great deal of this business, in fact the bulk of it, is on account of the customs cases in New York, where two-thirds of the duties are collected.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This is absolutely needed, I know.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know about that.

Mr. COLLINS. The President has again called attention to the necessity for this in his annual message.

Mr. OATES. And recommended two judges instead of one.

Mr. MILLS. The demand for this arises on account of the increased amount of litigation growing out of the customs collections at the port of New York. I know that the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended this, and I understand the President has also. But, Mr. Speaker, you may grant this new judge to this district, and may make another judge for it, if you will, but the result will only be that the more judges you assign to it the more this litigation will continue to press upon the Government for adjudication. There can positively be no relief to this thing unless our policy is changed in reference to the collection of customs at New York. We allow importers to go in and file a protest against the exaction of certain duties, and then sue the collector of customs in case of a difference of opinion as to the value of an importation between the collector and the importer. In such cases the law allows suit to be brought, and the Treasurer reports to us some twenty or twenty-five thousand protests now on file in the Treasury Department. It will be impossible for all the judges in the United States to keep up with them.

What we ought to do is to make some officer, and I do not care whether he be a judge or some officer connected with the customs collection in New York, a party with power to determine questions which arise with reference to the value of invoices, and make his determination final and conclusive. Why should it not be? Let us take an illustration: Here is an invoice of goods, and the collector says to the importer you have not given the value of this invoice by a thousand dollars; the goods are undervalued and you must pay that additional amount. The importer pays it, but files a protest to recover it. He charges, however, immediately the one thousand dollars upon the selling price of his goods and collects that amount from the customer. The man himself does not lose a dollar by the operation, but reimburses himself from the consumer or purchaser of the goods, and then comes in and makes an effort to recover the same amount back again from the Government. Why, Mr. Speaker, it is a good speculation for these people, and you may continue to appoint judges as long as you please to check the evil, but this species of litigation will grow, provided you give an opportunity to these parties to bring such suits. Now, what we ought to do, I repeat, is to make the determination of the collector of customs, or some officer appointed for that purpose, final and binding upon all parties, for so long as we continue to allow appeals from one court to another until it reaches the final tribunal, the Supreme Court of the United States, you will have protests filed and appeals made from the decision of the collector as long as there is an opportunity for this species of profitable speculation.

Mr. COLLINS. All my friend from Texas has said is conceded; but if there were no collectors or suits under the customs law this judge would be needed all the same.

I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COLLINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POLYGAMY.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (S. 10) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, with a substitute reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, and ask its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Senate bill.

The Senate bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in any proceeding and examination before a grand jury, a judge, justice, or a United States commissioner, or a court, in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation, under any statute of the United States, the lawful husband or wife of the person accused shall be a competent witness, and may be called and may be compelled to testify in such proceeding, examination, or prosecution without the consent of the husband or wife, as the case may be; but such witness shall not be permitted to testify as to any confidential statement or communication made by either husband or wife to each other during the existence of the marriage relation.

SEC. 2. That in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation, under any statute of the United States, whether before a United States commissioner, justice, judge, a grand jury, or any court, an attachment for any witness may be issued by the court, judge, or commissioner, without a previous subpœna, compelling the immediate attendance of such witness, when it shall appear to the commissioner, justice, judge, or court, as the case may be, that there is reasonable ground to believe that such witness will unlawfully fail to obey a subpœna issued and served in the usual course in such cases; and in such case the usual witness fees shall be paid to such witness so attached: Provided, That no person shall be held in custody under any attachment issued as provided by this section for a longer time than ten days; and the person attached may at any time secure his or her discharge from custody by executing a recognizance, with sufficient sureties, conditioned for the appearance of such person at the proper time as a witness in the cause or proceeding wherein the attachment may be issued.

SEC. 3. That any prosecution under any statute of the United States for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation may be commenced at any time within five years next after the commission of the offense; but this provision shall not be construed to apply to any offense already barred by any existing statute of limitation.

SEC. 4. That every ceremony of marriage, or in the nature of a marriage ceremony, of any kind, in any of the Territories of the United States, whether either, or both, or more of the parties to such ceremony be lawfully competent to be the subjects of such marriage or ceremony or not, shall be certified in writing by a certificate stating the fact and nature of such ceremony, the full names of each of the parties concerned, and the full name of every officer, priest, and person, by whatever style or designation called or known, in any way taking part in the performance of such ceremony, which certificate shall be drawn up and signed by the parties to such ceremony, and by every officer, priest and person taking part in the performance of such ceremony, and shall be by the officer, priest, or other person solemnizing such marriage or ceremony filed in the office of the probate court, or, if there be none, in the office of the court having probate powers in the county or district in which such ceremony shall take place, for record, and shall be immediately recorded. Such certificate, or the record thereof, or a duly certified copy of such record, shall be prima facie evidence of the facts required by this act to be stated therein, in any proceeding, civil or criminal, in which the matter shall be drawn in question. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not longer than two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 5. That every certificate, record, and entry of any kind concerning any ceremony of marriage, or in the nature of a marriage ceremony of any kind, made or kept by any officer, clergyman, priest, or person performing civil or ecclesiastical functions, whether lawful or not, in any Territory of the United States, and any record thereof in any office or place, shall be subject to inspection at all reasonable times by any judge, magistrate, or officer of justice appointed under the authority of the United States, and shall, on request, be produced and shown to such judge, magistrate, or officer by any person in whose possession or control the same may be. Every person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not longer than two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court. And it shall be lawful for any United States commissioner, justice, judge, or court before whom any proceeding shall be pending in which such certificate, record, or entry may be material, by proper warrant, to cause such certificate, record, or entry, and the book, document, or paper containing the same, to be taken and brought before him or it for the purposes of such proceeding.

SEC. 6. That nothing in this act shall be held to prevent the proof of marriages, whether lawful or unlawful, by any evidence now legally admissible for that purpose.

SEC. 7. That it shall not be lawful for any female to vote at any election hereafter held in the Territory of Utah for any public purpose whatever, and no such vote shall be received or counted or given effect in any manner whatever; and any and every act of the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah providing for or allowing the registration or voting by females is hereby annulled.

SEC. 8. That all laws of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah which provide for numbering or identifying the votes of the electors at any election in said Territory are hereby disapproved and annulled; but the foregoing provision shall not preclude the lawful registration of voters, or any other provisions for securing fair elections which do not involve the disclosure of the candidates for whom any particular elector shall have voted.

SEC. 9. That the laws enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah conferring jurisdiction upon probate courts, or the judges thereof, or any of them, in said Territory, other than in respect of the estates of deceased persons and in respect of the guardianship of the persons and property of infants, and in respect of the persons and property of persons not of sound mind, are hereby disapproved and annulled; and no probate court or judge of probate shall exercise any jurisdiction other than in respect of the matters aforesaid; and every such jurisdiction so by force of this act withdrawn from the said probate courts or judges shall be had and exercised by the district courts of said Territory respectively.

SEC. 10. That the laws enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah which provide for or recognize the capacity of illegitimate children to inherit or to be entitled to any distributive share in the estate of the father of such illegitimate child are hereby disapproved and annulled; and no illegitimate child shall hereafter be entitled to inherit from his or her father or to receive any distributive share in the estate of his or her father: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any illegitimate child born previous to the passage of this act.

SEC. 11. That all laws of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah which provide that prosecution for adultery can only be commenced on the complaint of the husband or wife are hereby disapproved and annulled; and all prosecutions for adultery may hereafter be instituted in the same way that prosecutions for other crimes are.

SEC. 12. That the acts of the Legislative Assembly of Utah incorporating, continuing, or providing for the corporation known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, and the ordinance of the so-called general assembly of the State of Deseret incorporating the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, so far as the same may now have legal force and validity, are hereby disapproved and annulled, so far as the same may preclude the appointment by the United States of certain trustees of said corporation as is hereinafter provided. The President of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint fourteen trustees of the said corporation, who shall have and exercise all the powers and functions of trustees and assistant trustees provided for in the laws creating, amending, or continuing the said corporation, which trustees so appointed shall hold their respective offices for the term of two years; and the trustees of said corporation shall annually or oftener make a full report to the Secretary of the Interior embracing all the property, business affairs, and operations of the said corporation; and the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah shall not have power to change the laws respecting said corporation without the approval of Congress. Said trustees shall each give bond, payable to the United States, with good and sufficient security, for the faithful discharge of the duties incumbent upon him as trustee, in such sum as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 13. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to institute and prosecute proceedings to forfeit and escheat to the United States the property of corporations obtained or held in violation of section 3 of the act of Congress approved the 1st day of July, 1862, entitled "An act to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States and other places; and disapproving and annulling certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah," or in violation of section 1890 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and all such property so forfeited and escheated to the United States shall be disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior, and the proceeds thereof applied to the use and benefit of the common schools in the Territory in which such property may be: Provided, That no building, or the grounds appurtenant thereto, shall be forfeited which is held and occupied exclusively for purposes of the worship of God.

SEC. 14. That in any proceeding for the enforcement of the provisions of law against corporations or associations acquiring or holding property in any Territory of the United States in excess of the amount limited by law, the court before which such proceeding may be instituted shall have power in a summary way to compel the production of all books, records, papers, and documents of, or belonging to, any trustee or person holding or controlling or managing property in which such corporation may have any right, title, or interest whatsoever.

SEC. 15. That all laws of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, or of the so-called government of the state of Deseret, creating, organizing, amending, or continuing the corporation or association called the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company, are hereby disapproved and annulled; and it shall not be lawful for the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah to create, organize, or in any manner recognize any corporation or association for the purpose of or operating to accomplish the bringing of persons into the said Territory for any purpose whatsoever.

SEC. 16. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to cause such proceedings to be taken in the supreme court of the Territory of Utah as shall be proper to dissolve the said corporation mentioned in the preceding section, and pay the debts and to dispose of the property and assets thereof according to law. Said property and assets, in excess of the debts and the amount of any lawful claims established by the court against the same, and that by law shall escheat to the United States, shall be taken, invested, and disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the President of the United States, for the benefit of common schools in said Territory.

SEC. 17. That the existing election districts and apportionments of representation concerning the members of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah are hereby abolished; and it shall be the duty of the governor, Territorial secretary, and the United States judges in said Territory forthwith to redistrict said Territory, and apportion representation in the same in such manner as to provide, as nearly as may be, for an equal representation of the people (excepting Indians not taxed), being citizens of the United States, according to numbers, in said Legislative Assembly, and to the number of members of the council and house of representatives, respectively, as now established by law; and a record of the establishment of such new districts and the apportionment of representation thereto shall be made in the office of the secretary of said Territory, and such establishment and representation shall continue until Congress shall otherwise provide; and no person other than citizens of the United States otherwise qualified shall be entitled to vote at any election in said Territory.

SEC. 18. That the provisions of section 9 of said act approved March 22, 1882, in regard to registration and election officers, and the registration of voters, and the conduct of elections, and the powers and duties of the board therein mentioned, shall continue and remain operative until the provision and laws therein referred to, to be made and enacted by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory of Utah, shall have been made and enacted by said Assembly and shall have been approved by Congress.

SEC. 19. That whoever commits adultery shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding three years; and when the act is committed between a married woman and a man who is unmarried, both parties to such act shall be deemed guilty of adultery; and when such act is committed between a married man and a woman who is unmarried, the man shall be deemed guilty of adultery.

SEC. 20. If any person related to another person within and not including the fourth degree of consanguinity, computed according to the rules of the civil law, shall marry or cohabit with or have sexual intercourse with such other so related person, knowing her or him to be within said degree of relationship, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of incest; and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than three years nor more than five years.

SEC. 21. That if an unmarried man or woman commit fornication, each of them shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars.

SEC. 22. That commissioners appointed by the supreme court and district courts in the Territory of Utah shall possess and may exercise all the powers and jurisdiction that are or may be possessed or exercised by justices of the peace in said Territory under the laws thereof, and the same powers conferred by law on commissioners appointed by circuit courts of the United States.

SEC. 23. That the marshal of said Territory of Utah, and his deputies, shall possess and may exercise all the powers in executing the laws of the United States possessed and exercised by sheriffs and their deputies as peace officers; and each of them shall cause all offenders against the law, in his view, to enter into recognizance to keep the peace and to appear at the next term of the court having jurisdiction of the case, and to commit to jail in case of failure to give such recognizance. They shall quell and suppress assaults and batteries, riots, routs, affrays, and insurrections, and shall apprehend and commit to jail all felons.

SEC. 24. That the office of Territorial superintendent of district schools created by the laws of Utah is hereby declared vacant; and it shall be the duty of the supreme court of said Territory to appoint a Territorial superintendent of district schools, who shall possess and exercise all the powers and duties imposed by the laws of said Territory upon the Territorial superintendent of district schools, and who shall receive the same salary and compensation, which shall be paid out of the treasury of said Territory; and the laws of the Territory of Utah providing for the method of election and appointment of such Territorial superintendent of district schools are hereby suspended until the further action of Congress shall be had in respect thereto. The said superintendent shall have power to prohibit the use in any district school of any book of a sectarian character or otherwise unsuitable. Said superintendent shall collect and classify statistics and other information respecting the district schools in said Territory, showing their progress, the whole number of children of school age, the number who attend school in each year in the respective counties and average length of time of their attendance, the number of teachers and the compensation paid to the same, the number of teachers who are Mormons, the number who are so-called Gentiles, the number of children of Mormon parents and the number of children of so-called Gentile parents, and their respective average attendance at school. All of which statistics and information shall be annually reported to Congress, through the governor of said Territory and the Department of the Interior.

SEC. 25. (a) A widow shall be endowed of the third part of all the lands whereof her husband was seized of an estate of inheritance at any time during the marriage, unless she shall have lawfully released her right thereto.

(b) The widow of any alien who at the time of his death shall be entitled by law to hold any real estate, if she be an inhabitant of the Territory at the time of such death, shall be entitled to dower of such estate in the same manner as if such alien had been a native citizen.

(c) If a husband seized of an estate of inheritance in lands exchanges them for other lands, his widow shall not have dower of both, but shall make her election to be endowed of the lands given or of those taken in exchange; and if such election be not evinced by the commencement of proceedings to recover her dower of the lands given in exchange within one year after the death of her husband, she shall be deemed to have elected to take her dower of the lands received in exchange.

(d) When a person seized of an estate of inheritance in lands shall have executed a mortgage on such estate before marriage, his widow shall nevertheless be entitled to dower out of the lands mortgaged as against every person except the mortgagee and those claiming under him.

(e) Where a husband shall purchase lands during coverture, and shall at the same time mortgage his estate in such lands to secure the payment of the purchase-money, his widow shall not be entitled to dower out of such lands, as against the mortagee or those claiming under him, although she shall not have united in such mortgage; but she shall be entitled to her dower as against all other persons.

(f) Where in such case the mortgagee, or those claiming under him, shall, after the death of the husband of such widow, cause the land mortgaged to be sold, either under a power of sale contained in the mortgage or by virtue of a decree of a court of equity, and if any surplus shall remain after payment of the moneys due on such mortgage, and the costs and charges of the sale, such widow shall nevertheless be entitled to the interest or income of the one-third part of such surplus for her life, as her dower.

(h) In case of divorce dissolving the marriage contract for the misconduct of the wife she shall not be endowed.

The substitute proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary is as follows: Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That in any proceeding and examination before a grand jury, a judge, justice, or a United States commissioner, or a court, in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation, under any statute of the United States, the lawful husband or wife of the person accused shall be a competent witness, and may be called, but shall not be compelled to testify in such proceeding, examination, or prosecution, and shall not be permitted to testify as to any statement or communication made by either husband or wife to each other, during the existence of the marriage relation, deemed confidential at common law.

SEC. 2. That in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation, under any statute of the United States, whether before a United States commissioner, justice, judge, a grand jury, or any court, an attachment for any witness may be issued by the court, judge, or commissioner, without a previous subpœna, compelling the immediate attendance of such witness, when it shall appear, by the oath or affirmation of at least two credible persons in writing, to the commissioner, justice, judge, or court, as the case may be, that there is reasonable ground to believe that such witness will unlawfully fail to obey a subpœna issued and served in the usual course in such cases: and in such case the usual witness fees shall be paid to such witness so attached: Provided, That the person so attached may at any time secure his or her discharge from custody by executing a recognizance before any commissioner, judge, justice, or court of the United States, with sufficient surety, conditioned for the appearance of such person at the proper time as a witness in the cause or proceeding wherein the attachment may be issued.

SEC. 3. That every ceremony of marriage, or in the nature of a marriage ceremony, of any kind, in any of the Territories of the United States, whether either or both or more of the parties to such ceremony be lawfully competent to be the subjects of such marriage or ceremony or not, shall be certified by a writing stating the fact and nature of such ceremony, the full names of each of the parties concerned, and the full name of every officer, priest, and person, by whatever style or designation called or known, in any way taking part in the performance of such ceremony, which certificate shall be drawn up and signed by the parties to such ceremony, and by every officer, priest, and person taking part in the performance of such ceremony, and shall be by the officer, priest, or other person solemnizing such marriage or ceremony filed in the office of the probate court, or, if there be none, in the office of the court having probate powers in the county or district in which such ceremony shall take place, for record, and shall be immediately recorded, and be at all times subject to inspection as other public records. Such certificate, or the record thereof, or a duly certified copy of such record, shall be prima facie evidence of the facts required by this act to be stated therein, in any proceeding, civil or criminal, in which the matter shall be drawn in question. Any person who shall wilfully violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not longer than two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act shall be held to prevent the proof of marriages, whether lawful or unlawful, by any evidence now legally admissible for that purpose.

SEC. 5. That it shall not be lawful for any female to vote at any election hereafter held in the Territory of Utah for any public purpose whatever, and no such vote shall be received or counted or given effect in any manner whatever; and any and every act of the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah providing for or allowing the registration or voting by females is hereby annulled.

SEC. 6. That all laws of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah which provide for numbering or identifying the votes of the electors at any election in said Territory are hereby disapproved and annulled; but the foregoing provision shall not preclude the lawful registration of voters, or any other provisions for securing fair elections which do not involve the disclosure of the candidates for whom any particular elector shall have voted.

SEC. 7. That the laws enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah conferring jurisdiction upon probate courts, or the judges thereof, or any of them, in said Territory, other than in respect of the estates of deceased persons, and in respect of the guardianship of the persons and property of infants, and in respect of the persons and property of persons not of sound mind, are hereby disapproved and annulled; and no probate court or judge of probate shall exercise any jurisdiction other than in respect of the matters aforesaid; and every such jurisdiction so by force of this act withdrawn from the said probate courts or judges shall be had and exercised by the district courts of said Territory, respectively.

SEC. 8. That if any person related to another person within and not including the fourth degree of consanguinity, computed according to the rules of the civil law, shall marry or cohabit with or have sexual intercourse with such other so related person, knowing her or him to be within said degree of relationship, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of incest, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than three years and not more than fifteen years.

SEC. 9. That when sexual intercourse is committed between a married person of one sex and an unmarried person of the other sex, both persons shall be deemed guilty of adultery, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding three months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 10. That all laws of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah which provide that prosecution for adultery can be commenced only on the complaint of the husband or wife are hereby disapproved and annulled; and all prosecutions for adultery may hereafter be instituted in the same way that prosecutions for other crimes are.

SEC. 11. That the marriage relation between one person of either sex and more than one person of the other sex shall be deemed polygamy. Polygamy or any polygamous association or cohabitation between the sexes is hereby declared to be a felony, and shall be punished by confinement in the penitentiary for a term not less than one year nor more than five years; and the continuance of the polygamy or polygamous association or cohabitation between the sexes after any indictment or other legal proceeding is commenced against any person shall be deemed a new offense, punishable as aforesaid.

SEC. 12. That the laws enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah which provide for or recognize the capacity of illegitimate children to inherit or be entitled to any distributive share in the estate of the father of such illegitimate child are hereby disapproved and annulled; and no illegitimate child shall hereafter be entitled to inherit from his or her father or to receive any distributive share in the estate of his or her father: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any illegitimate child born within twelve months after the passage of this act, nor to any child made legitimate by the seventh section of the act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1883.

SEC. 13. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to repeal the act of Congress entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882; but the provisions of said act, except in so far as they are repugnant to this act, shall be applicable to this act as if herein expressly mentioned; and the power given to the President by the sixth section of said act shall be applicable to the offenses created by this act.

SEC. 14. That the acts of the Legislative Assembly of Utah incorporating, continuing, or providing for the corporation known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, and the ordinance of the so-called general assembly of the state of Deseret incorporating the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, so far as the same may now have legal force and validity, are hereby disapproved and annulled, and the said corporation, in-so-far as it may now have, or pretend to have, any legal existence, is hereby dissolved.

SEC. 15. That all laws of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, or of the so-called government of the state of Deseret, creating, organizing, amending, or continuing the corporation or association called the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company are hereby disapproved and annulled; and the said corporation, in so far as it may now have, or pretend to have, any legal existence, is hereby dissolved; and it shall not be lawful for the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah to create, organize, or in any manner recognize any corporation or association, or to pass any law, for the purpose of or operating to accomplish the bringing of persons into the said Territory for any purpose whatsoever.

SEC. 16. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to cause such proceedings to be taken in the supreme court of the Territory of Utah as shall be proper to declare void and to dissolve the said corporations mentioned in the preceding section and in the fourteenth section of this act, and pay the debts and to dispose of the property and assets thereof according to law and equity.

SEC. 17. That the eleventh paragraph of the third section of the act entitled "An act in relation to courts and judicial officers of the Territory of Utah," approved June 23, 1874, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"A writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to the supreme court of the said Territory shall lie in all criminal cases where the accused shall have been sentenced to capital punishment, or convicted of bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation, or of any offense under the act entitled 'An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes,' approved March 22, 1882, or under this act, whether the judgment complained of was rendered before or after the approval of this act; and a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to the supreme court of the Territory, or an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the supreme court of the Territory, shall likewise lie and be allowed as to any judgment or decree rendered in any proceeding or suit authorized under the sixteenth section of this act; and the Supreme Court of the United States is authorized to speed all cases arising under this section, and dispose of them as promptly as possible, without regard to their place upon the docket: Provided, however, That the writ of error or appeal hereby allowed shall be taken and prosecuted within the period limited in like cases from judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of the United States, or within one year from the approval of this act."

SEC. 18. That all religious societies, sects, or denominations shall have the right to have and to hold, through trustees appointed by the several county courts of the Territory, so much real property for the erection of houses of worship, and for the residence of minister, priest, or other religious teacher, as shall be needed for the convenience and use of the several congregations of such religious society, sect, or denomination: Provided, however, That such real property shall not exceed in an incorporated town or city ten acres, or elsewhere fifty acres; nor shall any such society, sect, or denomination have and hold, except in the value of buildings erected on said real property as aforesaid, and in the value of the personal property used in religious worship or for the comfort of those assembled therefor, a greater amount in money value than $50,000.

SEC. 19. That commissioners appointed by the supreme court and district courts in the Territory of Utah shall possess and may exercise all the powers and jurisdiction that are or may be possessed or exercised by justices of the peace in said Territory under the laws thereof, and the same powers conferred by law on commissioners appointed by circuit courts of the United States.

SEC. 20. That the marshal of said Territory of Utah, and his deputies, shall possess and may exercise all the powers in executing the laws of the United States possessed and exercised by sheriffs and their deputies as peace officers; and each of them shall arrest or cause to be arrested all offenders against the law in his view, and carry them before the proper officer or court for examination according to law. They shall have power to prevent assaults and batteries, and to quell and suppress riots, routs, and affrays.

SEC. 20. That all laws passed by the so-called state of Deseret and by the Territory of Utah for the organization of the militia thereof or for the creation of the Nauvoo Legion are hereby annulled, repealed, and declared void and of no effect; and the militia of Utah shall be organized and subjected in all respects to the laws of the United States regulating the militia in the Territories: Provided, however, That all general officers of the militia shall be appointed by the governor of the Territory, by and with the advice and consent of the council thereof. The Legislative Assembly of Utah shall have power to pass laws for organizing the militia thereof, subject to the approval of Congress.

SEC. 21. That all laws passed by the general assembly of Deseret or by the Legislative Assembly of Utah granting or confirming any water, timber, or herd rights on any part of the public domain, or any special privilege therein, to any person or to any civil or ecclesiastic corporation or association, or to any person for the use and benefit of any such corporation or association, are hereby annulled and declared void; and the Attorney-General of the United States is hereby directed to cause such proceedings to be had in the supreme court of the Territory of Utah as shall enforce this section, and also to avoid and set aside all fraudulent entries upon homestead or pre-emption claims to lands in said Territory as may come to his knowledge; and the supreme court of said Territory shall have all needful jurisdiction in law and equity for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 22. (a) A widow shall be endowed of the third part of all the lands whereof her husband was seized of an estate of inheritance at any time during the marriage, unless she shall have lawfully released her right thereto.

(b) The widow of any alien who at the time of his death shall be entitled by law to hold any real estate, if she be an inhabitant of the Territory at the time of such death, shall be entitled to dower of such estate in the same manner as if such alien had been a native citizen.

(c) If a husband seized of an estate of inheritance in lands exchanges them for other lands, his widow shall not have dower of both, but shall make her election to be endowed of the lands given or of those taken in exchange; and if such election be not evinced by the commencement of proceedings to recover her dower of the lands given in exchange within one year after the death of her husband, she shall be deemed to have elected to take her dower of the lands received in exchange.

(d) When a person seized of an estate of inheritance in lands shall have executed a mortgage or other like conveyance of such estate before marriage, his widow shall nevertheless be entitled to dower out of the lands mortgaged or so conveyed, as against every person except the mortgagee or grantee and those claiming under him.

(e) Where a husband shall purchase lands during coverture, and shall at the same time execute a mortgage or other like conveyance of his estate in such lands to secure the payment of the purchase-money, his widow shall not be entitled to dower out of such lands, as against the mortgagee or other grantee, or those claiming under him, although she shall not have united in such mortgage; but she shall be entitled to her dower in such lands as against all other persons.

(f) Where in such case the mortgagee or other grantee, or those claiming under him, shall, after the death of the husband of such widow, cause the land mortgaged or so conveyed to be sold, either under a power of sale contained in the mortgage or conveyance or by virtue of the decree of a court of equity, and if any surplus shall remain after payment of the moneys due on such mortgage or conveyance, and the costs and charges of the sale, such widow shall nevertheless be entitled to the interest or income of the one-third part of such surplus for her life as her dower.

(h) In case of divorce dissolving the marriage contract for the misconduct of the wife, she shall not be endowed.

(i) The term "lawful wife," wherever used in this statute, shall be held to mean, in all cases of Mormon or plural marriages, the first wife; and such wife only shall be entitled to dower under this act on the death of her husband.

SEC. 23. That the existing election districts and apportionments of representation concerning the members of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah are hereby abolished; and it shall be the duty of the governor, Territorial secretary, and the United States marshal in said Territory forthwith to redistrict said Territory, and apportion representation in the same in such manner as to provide, as nearly as may be, for an equal representation of the people (excepting Indians not taxed), being citizens of the United States, according to numbers, in said Legislative Assembly, and to the number of members of the council and house of representatives, respectively, as now established by law; and a record of the establishment of such new districts and the apportionment of representation thereto shall be made in the office of the secretary of said Territory, and such establishment and representation shall continue until Congress shall otherwise provide; and no persons other than citizens of the United States otherwise qualified shall be entitled to vote at any election in said Territory.

SEC. 24. That the provisions of section 9 of said act, approved March 22, 1882, in regard to registration and election officers, and the registration of voters, and the conduct of elections, and the powers and duties of the board therein mentioned, shall continue and remain operative until the provision and laws therein referred to to be made and enacted by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory of Utah shall have been made and enacted by said Assembly and shall have been approved by Congress.

SEC. 25. That every male person over twenty-one years of age resident in the Territory of Utah shall appear before the clerk of the probate court of the county wherein he resides, and register himself by his full name, with his age, place of business, his status, whether single or married, and if married, the name of his lawful wife, and shall take and subscribe an oath, to be filed in said court, stating the facts aforesaid, and that he will support the Constitution of the United States and will faithfully obey the laws thereof, and especially will obey the law aforesaid approved March 22, 1882, and this act, in respect of the crimes in said acts defined and forbidden; and that he will not directly or indirectly aid, abet, counsel, or advise any other person to commit the same. No person not so registered, or who shall have been convicted of any crime under this act or under "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, or who shall be a polygamist, or shall associate or cohabit polygamously with persons of the other sex, or who shall not take and subscribe the oath aforesaid, shall be entitled to vote in any election in the Territory, or be capable of jury service, or to hold any office of trust or emolument in the Territory.

SEC. 26. That the council of the Territory of Utah shall hereafter consist of thirteen members, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, every two years, the members of which shall be citizens resident in the said Territory, one to be selected from each district of the Territory, according to the apportionment provided for in the twenty-third section of this act.

SEC. 27. That all judges of the county and probate courts and selectmen of each county of said Territory, and all clerks of said courts, justices of the peace, sheriffs, constables, and other Territorial, county, and district officers, shall (after the expiration of the terms of office of those now in office) be appointed as follows; and all laws to the contrary are hereby repealed:

The President shall have power to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint all judges and selectmen of the county and probate courts for the term of two years. The said courts shall appoint their clerks, recorders, and registers of deeds, wills, and other papers by law required to be recorded.

The governor, by and with the advice and consent of the council, shall have power to appoint all justices of the peace, all sheriffs, constables, and other county and district officers, and all other officers of the Territory not herein otherwise provided for.

SEC. 28. That the office of Territorial superintendent of district schools created by the laws of Utah is hereby abolished; and it shall be the duty of the governor of said Territory to appoint a commissioner of schools, who shall possess and exercise all the powers and duties heretofore imposed by the laws of said Territory upon the Territorial superintendent of district schools, and who shall receive the same salary and compensation, which shall be paid out of the treasury of said Territory. The said commissioner shall have power to prohibit the use in any district school of any book of a sectarian character or otherwise unsuitable. Said commissioner shall collect and classify statistics and other information respecting the district schools in said Territory, showing their progress, the whole number of children of school age, the number who attend school in each year in the respective counties and average length of time of their attendance, the number of teachers, and the compensation paid to the same, the number of teachers who are Mormons, the number who are not Mormons, the number of children of Mormon parents, and the number of children of parents who are not Mormons, and their respective average attendance at school. All of which statistics and information shall be annually reported to Congress through the governor of said Territory and the Department of the Interior.

Passed the Senate January 8, 1886.

Attest: ANSON G. McCOOK, Secretary.

Mr. TUCKER. I desire to submit an amendment to be considered as pending to the twenty-seventh section of the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 4 the word "and," and insert after the word "district" in said line the words "and municipal;" and after the word "shall" in the fifth and sixth lines strike out from the word "after" down to the word "office," in the sixth line, and insert in lieu thereof the word "hereafter."

Mr. TUCKER. It has been proposed by those whom I represent on the committee that, at the request of gentlemen on the other side who are opposed to this bill, two hours should be allotted to them for discussion in opposition, that time to be divided as they shall see proper between my honorable friends from Massachusetts and North Carolina, my colleagues on the committee. We may take, as the advocates of the bill, a like amount of time, but I shall not occupy as much if it is possible to avoid it. I shall reserve my own time for the close of the debate, at which time I shall ask the previous question on the bill. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] may divide the two hours as they please between themselves and the gentleman from the Territory of Utah, who I understand will also desire to be heard in opposition.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me to move an amendment at this time, to strike out the fifth section of the substitute?

Mr. TUCKER. As I understand, it is not now in order to move another amendment. The substitute is an amendment to the bill of the Senate, and the amendment which I have ordered is the only other amendment allowed under the rules.

Mr. LONG. I should like permission, at least, to have an opportunity of testing the sense of the House upon the amendment, and ask the gentleman from Virginia if he will permit me to ask unanimous consent of the House to offer an amendment to strike out section 5. I refer to that section which deprives all women of the Territory of Utah of the right of suffrage.

Mr. TUCKER. I am not inclined to accede to that suggestion now, and would prefer to see, in the first place, how the discussion goes on. I am very anxious to dispose of the bill to-day if it be possible.

Mr. LONG. I desire to occupy no time, but simply to make the motion in order to obtain an expression of the sense of the House. Some of us who are in favor of the bill would hesitate to vote for it with that section in it.

Mr. TUCKER. I will give the gentleman from Massachusetts an answer after a while.

The SPEAKER. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Chair will state that the gentleman from Virginia has just offered an amendment to the substitute; and so long as that amendment is pending no other is in order to the text of the substitute. But an amendment to the amendment would be in order. It has also been the practice of the House to allow an amendment to the original bill, and an amendment to that amendment, in order to perfect the text before taking the vote on the proposed substitute.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman from Virginia consents to my moving the amendment I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. It may be considered as pending then by consent.

Mr. HAMMOND. I object.

Mr. COLLINS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLLINS. We had an arrangement between the majority and minority of the committee that we should offer amendments at the proper time. We have prepared some forty amendments, and I desire to know of the Chair when those will be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already answered that question. If the House refuses to agree to the amendment, or if it agrees to it, and the previous question shall not be ordered and in operation, other amendments will be in order under the rules of the House, as already stated by the Chair. One amendment and an amendment to that amendment may be pending at the same time. Beyond that no other is in order.

Mr. COLLINS. But if the previous question is moved and ordered——

The SPEAKER. Then all amendments are cut off, and all debate.

Mr. COLLINS. And we protest against that.

Mr. BENNETT. Lest my silence might be interpreted as consent to the division of time, which the chairman of the committee spoke of a while ago, I wish to say that I take this time because I can not get any more, and that I regard it as beggarly when a bill of such far-reaching provisions is to be considered by this House. In my opinion parts of the bill are simply atrocious.

Mr. TUCKER rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, when I rose some time ago it was simply to make the announcement as to the division of the time which I propose. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] desires now, I believe to take the floor on this bill.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, the pending measure contemplates more than the suppression of polygamy, and invites inquiry as to its scope and a brief history of the circumstances which have resulted in the necessity for legislative action.

In 1827 Joseph Smith claimed to have found certain inscribed plates, which inscription he interpreted and called the Book of Mormon. He gathered about him many followers whose subsequent experiences in Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois are well known. Smith was killed in an Illinois jail in 1844, after which those who had followed him, some 20,000 in number, emigrated to the far west, and settled around Salt Lake in 1847, in a region of country belonging to Mexico. By the treaty of March, 1848, it became a part of the territory of the United States, notwithstanding which the Mormons organized the state of Deseret. In 1851 the general assembly of the state of Deseret passed an ordinance incorporating "the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints," with perpetual succession, and with power to acquire real and personal property, although previously Congress had passed an act for the government of Utah.

On September 14, 1850, the general assembly incorporated "The Perpetual Emigration Fund Company," and afterward enlarged and confirmed its powers. In those and succeeding years it granted large tracts of the public lands to the church and to leading members of the church.

Under its authority the militia was organized, equipped, and drilled, becoming an efficient army under the name of the Nauvoo Legion. When the Territorial government went into operation, Brigham Young having been appointed governor by the President, the conduct of affairs continued as before—wholly in the hands of the Mormons, and chiefly in the hands of the church.

The Territorial Legislature declared valid the acts incorporating the church and the Emigration Fund Company, and those incorporations have since been the sources of power and the agents of the all-crushing tyranny exerted in Utah.

Polygamy had been invented, so to speak, before the Mormons went to the mountains, but the invention had not been applied at that time.

The population of Utah is 180,000, of which 150,000 are adherents to the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints." About 15,000 men and women are polygamous in function, all in belief.

Congress in 1862 passed a law punishing bigamy and polygamy, but no considerable result followed the enactment, and in 1882 the Edmunds law, so called, was passed, and has been somewhat more productive of convictions, but does not promise success in its object, because of the difficulties of making proof.

In Utah there are no records of marriages, either of the first or of the succeeding ones. None but officers of the church can solemnize marriage, and those marriages succeeding the first only take place under circumstances of the greatest secrecy.

Under the Territorial government there have been no laws punishing crimes against chastity, such as incest, bigamy, or even adultery, excepting the last, against which provision was made only in case the husband or wife of the guilty party prosecuted.

There is no hope of any change for the better as regards polygamy unless Congress takes the matter earnestly in hand, not in the spirit of persecution, but with the determination that the evil and wrong shall cease. It is now growing stronger, and is not confined to the boundaries of Utah.

Its friends, the Legislature of Utah, will not strangle it, but Congress must, and fortunately Congress can. It has the legal power under the Constitution, and it has the means at hand.

I fully believe that this bill, if it becomes a law, will not only uproot polygamy in the Territory, but, if supplemented by the proposed constitutional amendment, will rid us of all fear of it and its cognate evils ever being introduced into State constitutions.

A moment's consideration will discover the gravity of the situation. An earnest, resolute, and even fanatical people have taken possession of one of the large Territories of the Union, seized upon the public domain, organized and established a church which absorbs as well as controls the state, gives it wealth and power unequaled, numbers considered, by any heretofore existing; incorporated and supplied with abundant means an emigration society which operates as a recruiting force most formidable in its energies and success; have seized all the civil power, including education of children, as well as the whole military force and given them into the hands of the church and made it not an empire in an empire, but the empire itself. That church governs all things with a steady and relentless hand; it disposes of life and liberty; it dictates laws and practices, and has in the name of religion imposed upon its subjects faith in, and practice of, polygamy.

This people and this church defy the moral sense of the civilized world and are of necessity antagonistic to the principles and institution of the Republic.

Subject to the laws of Congress, under the Constitution, they defy such laws as thwart their needs and interests, and the time has arrived when it must be decided whether they rule or obey.

This bill now under consideration undertakes to deal with the whole subject, and to place Utah where the Constitution puts her and where all other Territories remain—under the laws of Congress. It proposes to take possession of the public domain not disposed of under the laws of the United States, to disband the Mormon army—the Nauvoo Legion—to make provision for the education of children; to provide punishment for offenses against chastity, and the way for making proof; to amend the incorporation of the church, so as to divorce it from the state; to insure in Utah, as elsewhere, equality of rights to all churches, giving all freedom of worship and of conscience, but also subjecting all to the laws of the land.

This bill proposes also to annul and declare void the incorporation of the "Perpetual Emigration Fund Company," and to place the government of Utah largely in the hands of officers appointed by the President of the United States, not only that crime may cease but that good government may exist.

All these objects meet my most unqualified approbation after long and earnest study of the subject. I am, therefore, pained to find one provision in the bill to which I am unalterably opposed. For a long time female suffrage has prevailed in Utah, as in other Territories, with no known evils connected with it. This bill strikes that down without any complaint as to the manner in which it has been exercised and without any allegation of danger in its future exercise.

Without reference to the right or wisdom of woman suffrage, of which I have no doubt, I am appalled at the first suggestion of taking the election franchise from a considerable class of persons accustomed to its use.

Will the precedent be invoked hereafter, and, if so, in what direction? Who can tell?

In spite of this objection, I shall earnestly support the bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I understand some gentleman opposed to the bill now desires to take the floor.

Mr. CAINE. Mr. Speaker, it is a work of supererogation to point out the enormities of this proposed legislation, which, while professing to be for the suppression of polygamy in the Territory of Utah, is actually a measure intended to suppress the Mormon Church and place its property in the hands of a receiver. Under ordinary circumstances I would content myself with entering a formal protest, serenely confident that enlightened mankind throughout the world will in due time condemn such legislation as wrong in theory, violative of fundamental constitutional provisions, undemocratic and un-American, and wantonly destructive of the dearest, most sacred rights of humanity. There has never yet been a wanton exercise of arbitrary power, whether by unrestrained executive authority or by prejudice-impelled legislative enactment, which did not, as time rolled on, bring its own revenges. This bill rudely overrides and sets at naught the eternal, the immutable principles upon which the common rights of men are bottomed. Do you flatter yourselves that you can with impunity trifle with the rights of your fellow men? Do you sacrifice your own sense of right and justice, and bend your better judgment to the demands of a false public sentiment, which owes its existence to two unworthy sources—religious intolerance and bigotry—and the arts of unscrupulous, designing, self-seeking men whose only object is the plundering of my people, and hope that you and your posterity will escape the penalty that heretofore has, sooner or later, been visited upon those willfully breaking the unchangeable laws governing the destinies of nations?

France to-day still pays, as for long years she has been paying, the penalty for the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. That wanton act, as shortsighted as it was arbitrary, as senseless as it was wicked, drove beyond the borders of France a million of souls, comprising some of the best blood and best intellects of the French people. The Protestant émegrés, driven from their homes in France, stripped of their property, carried with them to England, to Germany, and to the wilds of America, not only their religion but that training and discipline of mind which the school of adversity always teaches, and to-day you can read on the brightest pages of the histories of the countries receiving the refugees the great achievements wrought by them. England owes to them and their posterity much, very much, of her pre-eminence in the world's commerce. Germany is their debtor both in the arts of peace and of war. Strike from your galaxy of statesmen and warriors, from your roll of great men in all the walks of life, the names of French Huguenots and their descendants, and see what a void there would be!

England lost in great part what she gained through her kindly reception of the persecuted fleeing from other lands by her impolitic and atrocious treatment of Puritan Englishmen and Catholic Irishmen. Had she been content with driving the Puritans from her own soil and not sought to impose unwarrantable restraints upon them in the homes they had established on this continent, it is possible that to-day all English-speaking people would be united under one government—the grandest and greatest upon earth. The condition of Ireland to-day attests most eloquently the incontestable fact that legislation like this you propose to enact never has and never will accomplish aught but the creation of a plague spot in the body-politic, which in her case has festered for many centuries and is at this moment the dominant issue in English politics.

Do you say I am presumptuous in comparing the despised Mormons with the French Huguenots, the English Puritans, and the Catholic Irishmen? In numbers we will probably not equal either, and yet there are nearly a quarter of a million who hold that religious belief in the United States. This bill strikes at the property of the Mormon Church and proposes a test oath to professors of the Mormon faith. It is true that our religious establishment is only fifty-six years old, but in that short period our people have been driven from three States by mob-violence, our property destroyed, our prophet and leaders murdered in cold blood, and forty-one years ago we had, in the dead of winter, to leave our homes on the east bank of the Mississippi River, which we had won by honest toil, and make an unparalleled pilgrimage of more than 1,500 miles, across trackless plains and unknown mountains, to find beyond the pale of civilization a new abiding place. We found a desert land not then the domain of the United States.

The first act of the pioneer band, nearly all of whom came of good New England, Pennsylvania, and New York stock, was to hoist the Stars and Stripes and take possession in the name of the United States, a Government which we then believed and still believe to be of divine origin. This country was at war with Mexico. The Mormons, driven from their homes on the banks of the Mississippi, and living in tents and rude huts, scattered in camps along the way from the Mississippi to the Missouri, had been especially appealed to by the President to furnish a battalion of five hundred men to make a forced march across the continent and help seize and hold California. The appeal was responded to, although it required every fifth man to abandon his family at the outset of an enforced journey, long, arduous, and perilous, but whither no one then knew, save that their tabernacle was to be set up somewhere beyond the Rocky Mountains.

In making this heroic sacrifice, as in hoisting the flag of their country on the mountain peak overlooking the valley of Great Salt Lake, and taking possession in the name of the United States, the Mormon pilgrims were simply doing their duty. They believed and taught then, as they believe and teach to-day, that the Government of the United States was founded by men who were inspired of God. It mattered not what they had suffered at the hands of lawless men, or wherein those in authority had failed to do their duty, the Mormon religion imposed upon those who accepted the faith the sacred obligation of supporting, defending, and aggrandizing that Government, the establishment of which was but part of the latter-day dispensation.

The achievements of the Mormons speak for themselves. They found a desert region in the interior of the continent, which the few white men who had theretofore penetrated pronounced an irreclaimable waste. Hostile savages held the then supposed to be only habitable places round about. Almost 2,000 miles of plains and mountains, uninhabited, save by warlike savage nomads, separated us from the eastern frontier line. Between Great Salt Lake Valley and the few scattered Spanish settlements on the Pacific, more than 800 miles of still more inhospitable deserts and rugged mountains intervened. The history of mankind does not afford another such example of a people, stripped of all their possessions, and with the scantiest possible provision, successfully accomplishing so marvelous an undertaking. Within less than two years more than five thousand souls made the pilgrimage from the banks of the Mississippi to Great Salt Lake Valley, growing on the way their provisions and making the raiment with which they were clothed. What was endured during that exodus, the awful suffering from hunger, until the first year's crops were grown and matured in the valley, would require a far more eloquent tongue than mine to adequately describe. Men and women, who were children then, will tell you that even now they experience in dreams an aftertaste of the pangs of hunger gnawing at their vitals through the long and dreary winter of 1847–'48. All stores were held under strict guard and meager rations meted out. But for the kindly assistance of the scarcely-better provided Indians, who taught our people to find, dig, and cook wild roots, starvation would have been the lot of all the weak and ailing.

Those of you who have made the journey across the great plains, over the Rocky Mountains, and through the great valley in palace cars, and seen the wonders wrought by the persistence, the industry, and the thrift of the Mormons can have only the faintest idea of what the transformation has cost the people whom you now deliberately propose to turn over to insatiable spoilers.

I hazard nothing, Mr. Speaker, when I make the statement that but for the Mormons the building of the Union and Central Pacific Railroads would have been an utter impossibility. More than that, sir, but for the work of reclamation, accomplished in two short years among the dreary wastes of Salt Lake Valley, the California and Oregon pioneers of 1849 and succeeding years could not have made the overland journey from the Missouri to the Pacific. We marked out the way, built the roads, bridged the streams, established ferries, and along the line planted settlements.

I repeat, sir, that not only would the construction of a continental iron highway have been indefinitely postponed, save for the Mormon settlements in the inter-mountain region, but, to-day, all that vast region, now populous, gridironed with railroads, yielding millions upon millions in the products of mines and of soil, would be scarcely better known than it was forty years ago.

If the material work accomplished by the Mormons has been such as to challenge the admiration of the world, their political, moral, and intellectual achievements have been none the less remarkable. They have not only reclaimed waste places deemed irreclaimable before their advent; they have not only subdued nature and made the desert to blossom as a garden of flowers; they have not only built cities and towns, railroads and telegraph lines, but they have dotted the land, they won from sterility everywhere, with school-houses and places of worship. It is our proud boast that but few of the oldest States in this Union can show a less percentage of illiteracy than the Mormon population of Utah. There is no community on the face of this earth where so large a percentage of the heads of families own their homes. Ninety per cent. of Mormon heads of families in Utah own the houses they live in and the lands they cultivate! Of all the States and Territories in the Union there are but thirteen showing a lower percentage of total population who can not read, Connecticut having the same as Utah,

3.37 per cent. The money raised for school purposes in Utah is greater in amount than the school funds of three States, and of any of the Territories save Dakota. And more than that, sir, not one dollar of the school fund, by far the larger part of which comes from Mormon taxpayers, is used for sectarian purposes! The school books of the public schools of Utah are as absolutely free from Mormon teachings as are those used in the District of Columbia.

The only successful attempts, unaided by the General Government, to reclaim Indians from a savage state and teach them the arts of peace, and make them thrifty agriculturists and useful citizens, have been the work of the Mormon Church and its missionaries. I assert only that which I know to be true when I declare that on more than one occasion the Mormons have prevented costly Indian wars, not only in Utah but in the adjoining Territories.

One of the many slanders so industriously spread abroad concerning my people is the statement that the great mass of them are densely ignorant. Sir, the official statistics give the lie most emphatically to this reckless assertion. Has the State of Connecticut a densely ignorant population? But three and thirty-seven hundredths of the inhabitants of the State of Connecticut can not read. Precisely the same proportion of the people of the Utah in 1880 could not read.

Another unfounded slander spread abroad most industriously by our enemies is the charge that the population of Utah is largely made up of foreigners, who are ignorant and unfit to be citizens of the United States. What do the statistics prove? According to the census of 1880 the total population of Utah was 143,963. Of this number 74,509 were males, and 69,454 females—the males outnumbering the females by 5,045. Of the total population 99,969 were native-born, and only 43,994 foreign-born. There were 52,189 native-born males and 44,780 native-born females; and the foreign-born males were 22,320, and the foreign-born females, 21,674. While the proportion of the foreign-born population of Idaho, is 44,062 to 100,000; of Wisconsin, 44,548; California, 51,217; Minnesota, 52,168; Dakota, 62,117; Arizona, 65,798; Nevada, 70,065; in Utah it is only 44,062. In Dakota, Oregon, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Michigan, Maine, Massachusetts, Florida, Arkansas, Washington, Colorado, and New Mexico the foreign-born population increased during the decade preceding the census of 1880, from which these statistics are taken; in Utah it had decreased, and Utah showed a more rapid decrease in its foreign-born population during the period named than twenty-nine of the States and the District of Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, I assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is not upon the face of the globe another agricultural and pastoral community where the average of general intelligence is so high, where so small a percentage of men, women, and children can not read. This is not an idle boast. If I dared to trespass upon your time and your patience I could bring overwhelming proof of my assertion. It is the universal verdict of the intelligent and unbiased observers who have visited Utah and gone among her people.

The fact that the Mormon people have, in a high degree, capacity for self-government is attested by their history. I defy any impartial student of institutional history to take up the legislative enactments of the Territorial Assembly of Utah, beginning with our provisional government, and coming down to date, and fail to pronounce the highest encomium upon the wisdom, the fairness, the justness, and equity of the Mormon government of Utah.

A gentleman who has devoted years to a critical study of their ecclesiastic and political institutions says:

> The wisdom of their leading men has been exemplified in the founding and elaboration of a local government, which will receive the unqualified approval of every student of institutional history. In the settlement of no other Western Territory has the distinguishing feature of old New England, the principle of the town meeting, community, self-government, been so rigidly adhered to as in Utah. Brigham Young, who was pre-eminently great as a leader of men and a builder of communities, was a native of Vermont. His chief co-laborers were either natives of New England, New York, Pennsylvania, or the Western Reserve of Ohio. Their civil, like their ecclesiastical policy, was essentially democratic. They built not for to-day, but for all time. The community was the starting point. Mutual assistance, mutual forbearance, unity of sentiment, unity of sympathy, love of God, love of fellow-men, and absolute reliance on Divine Providence were the foundations of the community. Co-operation of communities was the guiding principle of the State.
> The result is a model local government. The Territory is absolutely without debt. The expenses of administration are reduced to the minimum. Taxation, on a very low valuation, is, for Territorial purposes, three mills on the dollar. Property in Salt Lake City, with its 30,000 people, and all its public improvements, has a debt of less than $200,000, created to build an irrigating canal 26 miles long, and the rate of taxation, Territorial, school, county, and municipal, is only 17 mills on the dollar. A model school system is maintained without sectarianism. The percentage of illiteracy is three-tenths of 1 per cent. less than that of Massachusetts, and one-tenth of 1 per cent. greater than that of Vermont.
> There is no agricultural community on the face of the globe where you can meet so many traveled and educated men as you will in the different Mormon settlements of Utah. You will cease to wonder at this statement when you are told that every year the church calls upon a large number of young men to go "without scrip and without purse," as missionaries to all lands. These men are gone on an average of three years. They preach the gospel, learn languages, take note of all they see and hear. The Mormon is inquisitive as well as acquisitive. He is cautious, secretive, and prudent, because the world looks at him askant. Shrewd at making a bargain, his word is as good as his bond. There is no trade so eagerly sought after as that of the Mormon merchant. They are scrupulously honest, pay invariably 100 cents to the dollar, and mind their own business.

Such, Mr. Speaker, is the testimony of a disinterested observer.

A great deal was said before the Judiciary Committee, and the bill now under consideration contains a provision about grants of land, water, and timber privileges made to certain individuals by the provisional legislature of Utah. It was claimed before the committee, and apparently with effect, that these grants were for the purpose of creating monopolies and thereby aggrandizing particular men, or interfering in some way with settlement by non-Mormons. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Water and timber were scarce articles. Grants were given to a few men who had means to build roads into cañons to enable the people to get timber out, and the privilege of charging toll was given to those who at great expense made the roadways. Toll bridges were allowed to be built by private individuals for the accommodation of the public. But these were mere temporary expedients necessary in a poor community. They long since ceased to exist. As to the charge of monopolizing water-rights I will repeat what I said before the committee, the truth of which can not be questioned:

> The Mormon pioneers undoubtedly had an eye to securing whatever there was good in the desert country they had sought out as a place of refuge. * * * The area of land which can successfully be cultivated by irrigation by a family is not great. * * * Community co-operation is one of the features of the Mormon polity. A settlement was first made where the water could be, with the least labor and cost, brought to irrigate the land. The custom which has come to be recognized law in all other countries is, that those who first take out the water can not be deprived of the quantity to which they thereby become entitled. The Mormons were provident and thoughtful of the future. They settled at the mouths of cañons where the mountain streams debouched. They did just what every forehanded people, pioneers, will do; they took all they could get. It is now made a serious charge against them that they monopolized the water and the arable land, not to aggrandize themselves, but to provide for their children and their brethren of other sections of the Union and of other lands, who might come to join them. Was it a crime?

Every one acquainted with the local history of Western Territories knows that it was the common practice to grant charters for toll roads and bridges in almost every Territory. I believe it is an undisputed fact that, for a long time, the firm of Barlow & Sanderson, two enterprising Vermonters, had a monopoly of the stage coach and mail-carrying business in Colorado, because they owned the toll roads through every available pass in a certain region. They got the charters from the Legislature of Colorado, built the roads, and the tolls they were allowed to charge prevented competition in their business.

There is no more occasion for the twenty-first section of this bill than there would be for an enactment requiring the Attorney-General to institute suits to annul grants given to Barlow & Sanderson for toll roads in Colorado by its Territorial Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, disguise the fact as the advocates of this bill may; seek with great ingenuity, as the authors of this bill have done, to slip round, or under, or over, constitutional prohibitions, they can not escape certain demonstrable conclusions:

First. That in prescribing a test oath as a qualification prerequisite to exercising the right of suffrage they are doing something that is not only hateful and odious in the sight of every American, but they in this case do it in despite of the plain letter of the Constitution. I need only quote the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] who has charge of this bill. When the so-called Edmunds anti-polygamy bill was under consideration in this House he said, in premising his remarks:

> I believe the most precious assurance for American liberty and the most essential guarantee of American civilization is the Constitution of the United States. To destroy any evil by unconstitutional methods is to cure a disease by a poison which disturbs the vital functions of the body politic and injects into it a principle most difficult to be extirpated, and creates a precedent whose influence must be injurious and may be fatal to the life of constitutional government.

That was sound doctrine, right eloquently and pithily announced. But hear him on the question of the test oath prescribed by that bill:

> I come now—

He said—

> to the eighth section of the bill. That provides that no bigamist, polygamist, or any person cohabiting as before mentioned, shall vote or be eligible to office, or hold office in any Territory or place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, or under the United States. This disfranchises every such person from every office from the Presidency down to the most petty place under the Government.
> I waive the question of a constitutional power to make disqualifications for offices to which another department appoints, or as to which the Constitution itself establishes its own free qualifications. I assert that this section, without trial of any kind, takes from every person guilty of any of these offenses the precious right of suffrage and the privilege of eligibility to or the title to hold any office under the United States. This is done by act of Congress for crime. It operates eo instanti of the approval of this law. If at that moment he is guilty of a new offense created by this act, this act in the same moment inflicts this heavy penalty.
> It does more. The ninth section establishes a commission of five persons, whose decision of exclusion of any man from the polls is absolute and final. He has no appeal. That commission tries the question of guilt or innocence in order to determine his right to vote. His citizenship is emasculated under this law, without the process of law by indictment and jury trial before a court of law. The commission of five are the absolute arbiters of the rights and immunities of one hundred and forty thousand citizens of the United States.

The gentleman from Virginia held that such a law was unconstitutional, and in this he was but voicing the unbroken current of decisions, up to that time, by the courts of last resort in every State in this Union that had passed upon the question, as well as that of the Supreme Court of the United States. Learned lawyer, as the gentleman is I know, he must have had in mind at that time the celebrated case in the matter of Dorsey, found in 7 Porter, 293. A statute of Alabama disqualified persons who had engaged in duels, and prescribed a test oath. Mr. J. L. Dorsey declining to take this oath was refused admission to the bar, and the case coming up to the supreme court of that State was elaborately considered in all its bearings. In the course of the opinion the court says:

The tenth section of the bill of rights, among other things, provides that no one shall be compelled to give evidence against himself, nor shall he be deprived of his life, liberty, or happiness, but by due course of law. After a patient and mature examination of the matter, I am of opinion that the requisition of the expurgatory oath exacted by this law offends against this portion of the bill of rights. It is so offensive to the first principles of justice to require a man to give evidence against himself in a penal case that, independent of the constitutional interdict, no one in this enlightened age will be found to advocate the principle. But it may be said, this is not a case of this kind, as no corporal or pecuniary punishment is the consequence of a refusal to take the oath against duelling. But are not the results the same whether punishment follows from the admission or is imposed as a consequence of silence? Can ingenuity make a distinction between a punishment inflicted in this mode, as a consequence of the refusal to take the oath, by closing one of the avenues to wealth and fame, and a positive pecuniary mulct? If there be a difference, I think it entirely in favor of the latter so far as the amount or weight of the penalty could affect the decision of this question.

I do not doubt that, familiar as the gentleman is with constitutional law, he had overlooked the opinion of the New York court of appeals in Barker vs. The People (3 Cowen, 686), wherein that high court held that—

Eligibility to office is not declared as a right or principle by any express terms of the constitution; but it results, as a just deduction, from the express powers and provisions of the system. The basis of the principle is the absolute liberty of electors and the appointing authorities to choose and appoint any person who is not made ineligible by the constitution. Eligibility to office, therefore, belongs not exclusively or specially to electors enjoying the right of suffrage. It belongs equally to all persons whomsoever not excluded by the constitution. I therefore conceive it to be entirely clear that the Legislature can not establish arbitrary exclusions from office, or any general regulation requiring qualifications which the constitution has not required. If, for example, it should be enacted by law that all physicians or all persons of a particular religious sect should be ineligible to public trusts; or that all persons not possessing a certain amount of property should be excluded; or that a member of the Assembly must be a freeholder; any such regulation would be an infringement of the constitution, and it would be so because, should it prevail, it would be, in effect, an alteration of the constitution itself.

As a right flowing from the constitution, it cannot be taken away by any law declaring that classes of men, or even a single person not convicted of a public offense, shall be ineligible to public station; but as a right not expressly secured by the constitution it may be taken from convicted criminals when the Legislature in their plenary power over crimes deem such a deprivation a necessary punishment. To say this is to say, in substance, that the right in question may be forfeited by crimes when the Legislature so direct.

Now I appeal to the gentleman to say if the law laid down by the supreme court of Alabama and the New York court of appeals in these cases was not sound. If it was good law, as declared by the New York court of appeals, that "as a right flowing from the constitution, it can not be taken away by any law declaring that classes of men, or even a single person not convicted of a public offense, shall be ineligible to public station," then I want to know if the right of suffrage can be taken from a class of men, or even a single individual not accused or even suspected of any crime, because he will not take a prescribed oath in which he is required to swear that he will not violate certain laws? Was there ever anything more preposterous proposed? But the gentleman may say the right of suffrage is not expressly secured by the Constitution of the United States to white men. Then I reply to him, in the language of the New York court of appeals, "as a right expressly secured by the constitution it may be taken from convicted criminals when the Legislature in their plenary power over crimes deem such deprivation a necessary punishment. To say this is to say in substance that the right in question may be forfeited by crimes when the Legislature so direct." But could the Legislature inflict a punishment like this upon innocent men who will not swear that they never will be guilty of an offense which the Legislature may create?

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the Cummings case, declared, of the provisions of the constitution of Missouri, which disfranchised those who would not swear that they had not been guilty of certain things—

The clauses in question subvert the presumption of innocence and alter the rules of evidence, which heretofore, under universally recognized principles of common law, have been supposed to be fundamental and unchangeable. They assume that the parties are guilty; they call upon the parties to establish their innocence; and they declare that such innocence can be shown only in one way—by an inquisition in the form of an expurgatory oath into the conscience of the parties.

How much more reprehensible are the provisions of section 25 of the bill under consideration. By this the citizen who will not swear that he is not going to violate a law, by his refusal is, ipso facto, subjected to a severe penalty—total disfranchisement and disqualification. Could anything be more monstrous?

The supreme court of New York, in Gotchens vs. Matheson (58 Barbour, 152), said:

Citizenship of the United States is an important right and the privileges conferred by it are important privileges, dearly prized by the American people. An act that provides for a forfeiture thereof imposes a penalty and comes within the provisions of the Constitution in regard to bills of attainder.

The gentleman from Virginia, standing in his place in this House on the 13th of March, 1882, declared of the eighth and ninth sections of the bill then under consideration:

I should be false to my sworn duty to support and defend the Constitution of the United States if I voted for a bill which not only violates the Constitution, but makes a precedent of evil omen to the liberties of the people. I can not consent to eradicate one vice by an act of usurpation of power which might involve results of greater magnitude and importance to the happiness of the present and future generations of this great Union.

He said further—to dwell upon the dangerous powers vested in the oligarchy to be constituted by the ninth section. Given a board, which is to regulate suffrage, to hold elections, to make returns thereof, and all this without appeal, and there will be no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that, for the time being, 140,000 citizens of the United States will be subject to an autocratic oligarchy as absolute in its authority and capable of achieving as much unhappiness for its subjects by the plunder of their property, the deprivation of their liberties, and the violation of their constitutional rights as ever existed among any people in ancient or modern times.

That bill which the gentleman thus denounced became a law March 22, 1882, the provisions of the eighth and ninth sections being unchanged. By the terms of the twenty-fourth section of the bill now under consideration the ninth section of the act of March 22, 1882, is continued in force.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, that "board" which the gentleman so eloquently denounced "as an autocratic oligarchy as absolute in its authority and capable of achieving as much unhappiness for its subjects by the plunder of their property, the deprivation of their liberties, and the violation of their constitutional rights as ever existed among any people in ancient or modern times," is by this bill to be continued in full force and effect. And that, too, notwithstanding the gentleman knows that the Territorial Assembly of Utah at its last session passed a bill meeting in every possible way the requirements of the act of March 22, 1882, but which was causelessly vetoed by the then governor of the Territory.

I know it has been claimed that the Supreme Court of the United States, in Murphy et al. vs. Ramsey et al. (114 U. S., 15), has affirmed the power of Congress to prescribe a test oath such as was provided by the eighth section of the act of March 22, 1882; but I insist that that judgment of the Supreme Court does not meet the issue raised by the proposed legislation contained in section 25 of this bill.

The eighth section of the act of March 22, 1882, only applied to bigamists, polygamists, or those guilty of unlawful cohabitation. It required all the ingenuity of the Supreme Court to get around the decision of that court in the Cummings case to escape the logic of the opinions in a half dozen cases decided by the highest courts of Pennsylvania, New York, Alabama, Georgia, and Kentucky. I refer to Huber vs. Reily (3 P. F. Smith, 142); Gotchens vs. Matheson (58 Barbour, 152); Barker vs. The People (3 Cowen, 686); In the Matter of Dorsey (7 Porter, 293); Campbell vs. The People of Georgia (11 Ga., 353); Gaines vs. Buford (1 Dana, 510).

The Supreme Court of the United States recognized the hopelessness of answering the logic of these famous cases. If it admitted that the disfranchisement prescribed in the eighth section of the act of March 22, 1882, was imposed as a punishment, it knew it would be open to two objections, either one of which would be fatal. Accordingly a majority of the court, ignoring the point that it, in effect, was a bill of pains and penalties directed against a class merely, held that "it is not open to the objection that it is an ex ost facto law." Referring to the eighth section the court says:

It does not seek in this section, and by the penalty of disfranchisement, to operate as a punishment upon any offense at all. The crime of bigamy or polygamy consists in entering into a bigamous or polygamous marriage, and is complete when the relation begins. That of actual cohabitation with more than one woman is defined, and the punishment prescribed in the third section. The disfranchisement operates upon the existing state, and condition of the person, and not upon a past offense. It is, therefore, not retrospective. He alone is deprived of his vote who, when he offers to register, is then actually cohabiting with more than one woman. Disfranchisement is not prescribed as a penalty for being guilty of the crime and offense of bigamy or polygamy, for, as has been said, that offense consists in the fact of unlawful marriage and a prosecution against the offender is barred by the lapse of three years by section 1044 of the Revised Statutes. Continuing to live in that state afterwards is not an offense, although cohabitation with more than one woman is. But as one may be living in a bigamous or polygamous state without cohabiting with more than one woman, he is in that sense a bigamist or a polygamist, and yet guilty of no criminal offense. So that, in respect to those disqualifications of a voter under the act of March 22, 1882, the objection is not well taken that represents the inquiry into the fact by the officers of registration as an unlawful mode of prosecution for crime.

In respect to the fact of actual cohabitation with more than one woman, the objection is equally groundless, for the inquiry into the facts so far as the registration officers are authorized to make it, or the judges of election, on challenge of the right of the voter if registered, are required to determine it is not, in view of its character as a crime, nor for the purpose of punishment, but for the sole purpose of determining, as in the case of every other condition attached to the right of suffrage, the qualification of one who alleges his right to vote. It is precisely similar to an inquiry into the fact of nativity, of age, or of any other status made necessary by law as a condition of the elective franchise. It would be quite competent for the sovereign power to declare that no one but a married person shall be entitled to vote; and in that event the election officers would be authorized to determine for that occasion, in case of question in any instance, upon the fact of marriage as a continuing status. There is no greater objection, in point of law, to a similar inquiry for the like purpose into the fact of a subsisting and continuing bigamous or polygamous relation, when it is made, as by the statute under consideration, a disqualification to vote.

Observe the inconsistency of the court as well as the inexactness of the language employed to convey its meaning. It says that the law "does not seek in this section, and by the penalty of disfranchisement, to operate as a punishment upon any offense at all." What the writer was trying to say was that "disfranchisement" in its imposition in this instance was not as a "punishment" for crime, but the habit of using legal phraseology was so strong upon him that he could not escape self-condemnation out of his own mouth. "Penalty," according to Wesbter means, "penal retribution;" "punishment for crime or offense;" "the suffering in person or property which is annexed by law or judicial decision to the commission of a crime, offense, or trespass."

Therefore "the penalty of disfranchisement" is a punishment, and to argue that it can be inflicted and not "operate as a punishment upon any offense at all" is self-stultifying. But let us analyze the whole paragraph quoted above. The court admits that disfranchisement can not be inflicted as a penalty by the Legislature without a trial. Its attempt to prove that a bigamist is not disfranchised for that offense, or for unlawful cohabitation, is disingenuous. Of course "the crime of bigamy or polygamy" is committed by "entering into a bigamous or polygamous marriage," but "disfranchisement," although it "operates upon the existing state and condition of the person," is none the less "a punishment" for that offense even if prosecution therefor "is barred by section 1044 of the Revised Statutes." To claim that "disfranchisement is not prescribed as a penalty for being guilty of the crime and offense of bigamy or polygamy," but is imposed as a punishment for continuing in a bigamous or polygamous state, which is made an offense, is to describe exactly "a penal retribution," which the Constitution of the United States declares shall not be inflicted "without due process of law."

To admit that while "one may be living in a bigamous or polygamous state without cohabitation with more than one woman, he is in that sense a bigamist or a polygamist and yet guilty of no criminal offense," and still insist that "the objection is not well taken that represents the inquiry into the fact by the officers of registration as an unlawful mode of prosecution for crime," is simply begging the question. What is the purpose of the inquiry? To ascertain if the person is living in a bigamous or polygamous state without being guilty of a criminal offense? No! The object is to find out whether he is guilty of an offense which subjects him to the penalty of disfranchisement. To do this what is the mode? An expurgatory oath? Yes! Who are to do this? The officers of registration, who, in the language of the New York court of appeals, "are not authorized to do so. They can determine who are citizens, but they can not adjudge and declare, as an original adjudication, that the plaintiff's citizenship has been forfeited by the commission of an offense." (Gotchens vs. Mathewson 58 Barbour, 152.)

Unlawful cohabitation is an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment; nevertheless the Supreme Court says that "the inquiry into the fact, so far as the registration officers are authorized to make it, or the judges of election, on challenge of the right of the voter, if registered, are required to determine it, is not in view of its character as a crime, nor for the purpose of punishment, but for the sole purpose of determining, as in the case of every other condition attached to the right of suffrage, the qualification of one who alleges his right to vote." But how far "in the case of every other condition attached to the right of suffrage" are the registration officers, or judges of elections, competent to inquire? "They may determine," says the supreme court of Pennsylvania, "many things, such as the age and residence of a person offering to vote, whether he has paid taxes, and whether, if born an alien, he has a certificate of naturalization; * * * but whether he has been guilty of a criminal offense and has, as a consequence, forfeited his right, is an inquiry of a different character." (Huber vs. Riley, 3 P. F. Smith, 142.) The utmost extent to which they can go, says the supreme court of New York, is to receive as evidence the adjudication by a court of competent jurisdiction "that the plaintiff's citizenship has been forfeited by the commission of an offense." (Gotchens vs. Mathewson, 58 Barbour, 152.)

And the reasons for this are threefold. First, because both in the United States and in England it has invariably been held that an election officer is "neither a judge nor anything like a judge." Second, because "citizenship of the United States is an important right, and the privileges conferred by it are important privileges, dearly prized by the American people. An act that provides for a forfeiture thereof, imposes a penalty, and comes within the provisions of the Constitution in regard to bills of attainder." (Ibid.) Third, because "if this were not so, if that which can not be accomplished by means looking directly to the end can be accomplished by indirect means, the inhibition may be evaded at pleasure. No kind of oppression can be named against which the framers of the Constitution intended to guard which may not be effected." (Cummings vs. The State of Missouri, 4 Walg. 272.)

Having wabbled into this untenable position it is not surprising that the court should assert that "it would be quite competent for the sovereign power to declare that no one but a married person shall be entitled to vote." It might with equal accuracy have said that the sovereign power could prescribe the height, in feet and inches, of the persons entitled to vote, as well as the color and cut of their hair.

Mr. Speaker, waiving, for argument sake, the question of the righteousness and soundness of the law and reasoning of this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, do not the provisions of section 25 of the bill now under consideration go way beyond what the court says Congress may lawfully do? It is not content with fixing a "status" for the voter by requiring him to "register himself by his full name, with his age, place of business, his status, whether single or married, and if married, the name of his lawful wife," but says he "shall take and subscribe an oath," wherein he must swear, among other things, not only that he does not mean to commit certain offenses, but that "he will not, directly or indirectly, aid, abet, counsel, or advise any other person to commit the same."

There have been test oaths prescribed in this country before; but never, I believe, what might be termed in futuro test oaths, which men who were neither accused nor suspected of crime were required to take as a prerequisite to being qualified to vote. If it is forbidden by the Constitution to prescribe an oath as to the past actions of a man who has not been convicted of any crime, thereby disfranchising him as a penalty for not taking the oath, how much more must it be unconstitutional to require him, under the pain and penalty of disqualification, to swear that he does not intend to commit an offense, or aid, abet, advise, or counsel, directly or indirectly, others "to commit the same?"

Mr. Speaker, in the language of the gentleman from Virginia, "I believe the most precious assurance for American liberty and the most essential guarantee of American civilization is the Constitution of the United States. To destroy any evil by unconstitutional methods is to cure a disease by a poison which disturbs the vital functions of the body politic and injects into it a principle most difficult to be extirpated, and creates a precedent whose influence must be injurious and may be fatal to the life of constitutional government."

But, Mr. Speaker, this test oath is by no means the only undemocratic and un-American feature of this bill. It provides for the emasculation of the present Territorial government. It deprives the people of the right to elect one branch of their Legislative Assembly, and provides for a legislative council of thirteen members who are to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. And this, too, in the face of the fact that the governor of the Territory has by the organic act an absolute veto power. What possible excuse for the addition of autocratic oligarchic powers?

But this is not all. The people are deprived of the last vestige of local self-government by conferring upon the governor the power to appoint every county, municipal, and precinct officer, except judges and selectmen of the county and probate courts, who are to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The gentleman from Virginia has experienced a wonderful change of heart since 1882. Then he denounced as atrocious the proposition to confer upon a "board"—"an autocratic oligarchy"—power that would enable them to plunder the people of their property, to deprive them of their liberties, and to violate their constitutional rights. Now he not only is in favor of continuing this "autocratic oligarchy" with all its powers unimpaired, but he wants to impose upon the people alien local officers—those who assess their property and collect the taxes—as well as every other vestige of local self-government.

Mr. Speaker, can it be that such a precedent as this is to be set by the Congress of the United States? Sir, I take it that there is not a member of this House who will contend that Congress can with impunity disregard that right of local-community self-government which lies at the basis of all free representative governments. It has been well remarked, "That it is a principle of institutional law, peculiar to the race from which we sprang, and without it no free government ever has been, or ever can be, maintained. From the time Tacitus remarked this feature of the common law of primitive Germany it has been the well-spring of the free institutions which distinguish the governments of the races springing from the liberty-loving and liberty-maintaining Teutonic tribes. Whenever our English ancestors, from any combinations of circumstances, temporarily lost sight of or were deprived of the right of local-community self-government, they invariably became the victims of oppressive power exerted by the tyranny of one or of many."

Our forefathers were wisely tenacious of this principle of community government. All the reasons which they gave in justification of their revolt against British tyranny were bottomed on this fundamental right. It was in a town meeting, the embodiment of the idea of local-community self-government and a venerable survival of an archaic institution that determined and systematic resistance to the encroachments of King and Parliament was first organized. Otis, Old Man Eloquent, and John Adams, of glorious memory thundered in the former, but plain yeoman Sam Adams, the man of the town meeting, with his committee of correspondence, solidified New England and prepared the way for united action by the thirteen colonies.

You have the power to deprive one hundred and fifty thousand people in the Territory of Utah of this sacred right of local-community self-government; but remember precedents, like curses, come back to plague their inventors. It is not so many years since the representatives of the people of thirteen States of this Union were shut out of both Houses of Congress and kept out until State governments were reconstructed in order, as Judge Black declared, to "maintain the worst men in the highest offices, throw the reins loose on the neck of rapacity, make leprous fraud adored."

Place thieves
And give them title, knee, and approbation
With Senators on the bench.

Mr. Speaker, I can not undertake to point out and comment upon all the monstrous features of this bill. I would not presume to trespass so long upon the time and patience of the House. I trust, however, you will bear with me while I briefly refer to two other of its provisions.

Section 14 annuls the law incorporating the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, so far as the same has any legal validity, and also annuls the corporation of the association called the "Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company" and dissolves said corporation

The argument made by the majority of the Judiciary Committee in favor of these provisions of the bill and the reasoning of gentlemen in support thereof on the floor of this House are both ingenious and disingenious. Certain premises are laid down, and the whole fabric built thereon stands upon a false foundation.

The acts incorporating the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints and the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company were within the legislative power conferred upon the Territorial Assembly of Utah by the organic act. They were as much within its power as the incorporation of any other companies or associations. They were "rightful subjects of legislation, consistent with the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of the organic act." Congress, it is true, reserved the right to disapprove, and if it exercised this power, the acts of the Legislative Assembly disapproved were null and of no effect. But the Supreme Court of the United States (in the Miners' Bank vs. The State of Iowa, 19 Curtis, 1) declared that until Congress did disapprove of the acts of Territorial Assemblies they were valid. It held, moreover, in the same case, that a corporation owing its existence to an incorporating act passed by a Territorial Assembly was a valid one. It follows, therefore, a corporation thus created would become vested with certain rights. If it was given the right to acquire and hold property and manage it for its own use or benefit, or for the use and benefit of others, those rights became vested rights. You can not interfere with those vested rights any more than the Legislature of New Hampshire could with the vested rights of Dartmouth College.

If there is any law well settled in this country I take it that it is the law in regard to vested rights. When Congress came to legislate upon the subject of polygamy in 1862, the original bill contained a clause repealing, or annulling in toto, the act of the Legislative Assembly incorporating the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, but the Congress did not dare go that far. It expressly declared that in the future no religious organization, association, or society should acquire property to a greater amount than $50,000; but it did not interfere with the property already held by such organization, association, or society. It did not, because it could not without violating the well-settled law of the land in regard to vested rights.

I will not consume your time by arguing this subject in all its details and ramifications. This is done fully and far better than I could hope to do it by the minority of the Judiciary Committee in their report to the House. It is so thoroughly and perfectly demonstrated there that Congress has not the power to do what this bill proposes to do in the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth sections that it would be a mere waste of time on my part to add one word further. If you will not "believe on such authority and such reasoning you would not believe though one rose from the dead" to warn you against this contemplated wrong. For like reasons I have not deemed it necessary to touch upon other outrageous features of this bill, which have been so ably discussed in the minority report.

As is shown by that report, section 2 "invades the personal rights, attacks and overthrows the personal security of the citizen." It is not only indefensible legislation, but it is useless. To-day the arrest of persons wanted as witnesses without previous service by a subpœna is the course of procedure in Utah. There is no warrant of law for it. The only effect of this proposed legislation by Congress is to give a semblance of right to what has been, and is being, done by making it lawful in the future.

The sixth section of the bill is useless because no such laws as are therein denounced exist in the statute-books of Utah.

In the majority report, in speaking of the annulment of the laws incorporating the Mormon Church, this language is used—

> The organic act expressly provides that all laws passed by the Territorial Legislature "shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States, and if disapproved shall be null and of no effect."

This power whenever exercised makes the original law null—not only hereafter, but "of no effect." If disapproval only nullifies its effect for the future no force will be given to the last words.

Section 7 of the bill annuls certain laws conferring jurisdiction on the probate courts of Utah. Are we to infer that this disapproval by Congress of these laws not only annuls them for the future, but makes them "of no effect" so far as the past is concerned? If this is the effect, as the majority argues, in regard to the laws incorporating the Church and the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company, then it must follow, according to their reasoning, that whatever has been done in the past by the probate courts was illegal, null, and "of no effect." This is contrary to the law laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Miners' Bank vs. The State of Iowa, already referred to, but I suppose the court will promptly reverse itself, when it has the opportunity, on the dictum of the distinguished lawyers who subscribe to this later doctrine.

Mr. Speaker, may I venture to appeal to this House to consider well before it commits itself to the monstrous propositions contained in this bill. I know too well the influences which are operating to drive this proposed legislation through Congress. I realize how the very air has been made pregnant with the baseless calumnies, the slanders, the innumerable and unmitigated falsehoods, ceaselessly concocted and persistently disseminated. Religious bigotry and intolerance are arrayed against my people. Political necessity, cant, hypocrisy, and all kindred Pecksniffianism join in the hue and cry. The platform, the pulpit, the press, are mighty engines for the manufacture of public sentiment. Their batteries are directed constantly and with full force upon the Mormons. I know that it is probably well-nigh impossible for any man in public life to even protest against a measure, no matter how monstrous, how unconstitutional, that is aimed at Mormonism.

Daily, almost hourly, we are told that it is the evil of polygamy that leaves us friendless. "Rid yourselves of that stigma," is the advice of those who admit the wrongfulness, the danger, of such legislation as is now proposed, "and fair play and justice will have a chance." But is it polygamy that is aimed at? If so, why not give the laws already enacted and so vigorously, nay, so ruthlessly enforced, an opportunity to work their legitimate effects? If they will not extirpate polygamy, surely no legislation of a kindred character ever will. If you are impatient and must have quicker results why not act upon the declaration of an assistant Attorney-General of the United States, who deliberately said that it would have been an act of mercy to have put all grown-up Mormons to the sword. This bill, if it becomes a law, will place the Mormon people at the mercy of men whose object is first to plunder them of all their earthly possessions, and drive them from their homes. The possibilities of the results of this legislation, Mr. Speaker, can not be exaggerated. In all candor I verily believe that a law directing general outlawry to be declared against all who did not, after certain time from the issuing of a proclamation, publicly renounce and recant their belief in the faith of the Mormon Church would be merciful in comparison with the effects of this proposed law.

Mr. Speaker, it is not the morals of the Mormon people or the contaminating influence thereof upon the public that is at the bottom of the persecution we have to endure. It is preposterous nonsense to talk about the "Mormon blot" upon the civilization of our age. If you were to undertake to eradicate blots upon your civilization you would have your hands full. I would respectfully refer gentlemen who are curious to know something of the morality which the boasted civilization of the nineteenth century has developed in localities far removed from Utah, and where intellectual light blazes most powerfully, to Von Oettingen's Moralstatistik, published in 1882. The Fortnightly Review, speaking of this book recently, said:

> It exhibits truly the most "dismal" of sciences, since it consists of little else than the exhibition of a complete record of crime. Perhaps the most disheartening pages of Von Oettingen's array of facts are those which relate to the crimes of great cities and densely populous areas. Von Oettingen's tabulations seem to include all European countries except Spain, Portugal, and Turkey. If a map of Europe were before us shaded in proportion to the returns of known vice and crime the darkest shadows would rest where the boast of intellectual light is greatest—in Saxony, the shrine of modern culture, the fortress of free thought.

There is but scant probability of "the canker of Mormon polygamy," as it is termed, endangering the morals of the world, of endangering your civilization, in the presence of the widespread and general demoralization of morals.

Mr. Speaker, the Mormon Church establishment is the thing aimed at in all this onslaught upon the Mormon people. It is a religious problem you are endeavoring to deal with in this as well as in all other legislation that has been attempted or proposed. It is our ecclesiastical and not our moral polity that is aimed at—that is sought to be overthrown. The men who are here from Utah, clamoring for the disfranchisement of the Mormon people, who insist that every office within that Territory shall be vacated and filled by appointees, that even our selectmen, who make the assessments of property, and the tax-collectors shall give way to non-Mormons, are not afraid of the contamination of their own or their families' morals. They know, as all the world knows, that a purer, more orderly, upright, God-fearing, and God-serving community does not exist upon earth than the exclusively Mormon settlements of Utah. It is simply because the minority can not, under a democratic American form of local government, rule the majority that these men are here clamoring for our disfranchisement.

There is one question, Mr. Speaker, that is pressing swiftly and strongly upon the people of this country; there is one problem that demands the serious attention of all who are interested in the future welfare of the nation, and even of society itself. That question, that problem, the Mormons have solved for themselves. We are not perplexed about the relations between capital and labor; we are not threatened with the dangers of a dissatisfied proletariat; we have no dread of communism; our slumbers are not disturbed by fears of anarchists. The Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company you propose to wipe out, cut up root and branch, because it imports poor and ignorant foreigners, who you claim become the bond slaves of the Mormon hierarchy. And yet 90 per cent. of all the Mormon families in Utah own their own houses. But 3.37 per cent. of men, women, and children can not read. The official statistics are a sufficient answer to this nightmare.

The hard times recently experienced the world over have been experienced in Utah. But where Mormon laborers have been employed, either in or outside the Territory, there have been no strikes. And, what is still more worthy your attention, there is not to-day in an exclusively Mormon community an almshouse or the need of one.

It is said the country demands the suppression of polygmy. Admit for argument's sake that it does. The country does not demand that the rights of citizenship shall be denied the people of Utah, nor that their church shall be disincorporated and the church property squandered.

It will be claimed that this legislation is recommended by the Utah Commission. Do those who make this claim fully comprehend how great a personal interest the members of that commission have in the success of this measure? This bill perpetuates them in positions where they draw $5,000 a year each from the public Treasury, where they are allowed some remarkable personal expenses, and where they have practically nothing to do. Is it a matter for astonishment that they should recommend the passage of this bill?

It is also claimed that this legislation is recommended by the governor of Utah. Is he not an interested party also? If this bill becomes a law it will give him the direct and indirect appointment of two thousand officers who heretofore have been chosen by the people. A patronage so great might satisfy the ambition of one more aspiring even than the governor of Utah. This modest gentleman, while admitting that he sees no probability of any outbreak in Utah, has had the supreme assurance to urge that a "strong, well-disciplined, and efficient" force of United States soldiers be held near Salt Lake to assist the civil authorities. Is Congress prepared to follow the bent of these place-seekers in their insatiable cravings? Recommendations from sources in which personal considerations are so manifest would, ordinarily, carry eternal condemnation on the face of them.

If this bill were only what it professes to be, if its purpose were the suppression of polygamy alone, how can all this help it? As fast as can be done convictions are now secured and the ease with which they are obtained is of national notoriety. So long as the forms of law are observed it is impossible to expedite convictions without an increase in the number of courts, and this bill does not even hint at such a step. In breaking up the family relations already formed, of what advantage can it be to deprive me of my franchise? How can that cure the marriage relations of the president of the Mormon Church, or the unlawful cohabitation of any other man?

One man's polygamy was suppressed very successfully a few days since. An apostate Mormon, acting as deputy marshal, shot a Mormon for whom he had a warrant on a charge of unlawful cohabitation. The man was on horseback. He was unarmed. The marshal called on him to halt, and almost at the same instant fired. The burden of the testimony shows the man did not try to escape, though there was absolutely no justification for the shooting even had he endeavored to do so. In an hour the Mormon was dead. The murderer, while being taken to Beaver, where the district court was in session, was met by twelve or thirteen members of the grand jury, which he had selected on an open venire. This cavalcade carried refreshments, and the return trip was after the style of the triumphal march of a homeward-journeying hero. This same grand jury investigated the murder and found an indictment charging the deputy marshal with manslaughter. He was prosecuted by the assistant United States attorney for Utah, who, during the trial, declared in open court that unlawful cohabitation was a felony, when the United States statute explicitly makes it a misdemeanor. The same prosecutor told the jurors that the assassin should be acquitted, and they obediently returned a verdict of not guilty.

Mr. Speaker, the declaration of an assistant Attorney-General of the United States, that it would be an act of mercy to put every adult Mormon to the sword, is bearing fruit. The theory of the clique bent on our destruction, that a Mormon is, in his nature, a dangerous criminal, is bearing natural fruit. The continued legislation which is being driven through Congress and which, with unerring certainty is hedging in and trampling down the safeguards of liberty to Mormons, is bearing fruit after its kind. This bill, which renders it possible to enlarge the powers of Mormon haters and to swell their official numbers, will bear the same fruit. The unlawful cohabitation of E. M. Dalton was suppressed. This way of suppression has received an impetus by the acquittal of his assassin. Where do you expect this license by law and this immunity from punishment by courts will end? A Mormon boy, in a private brawl with a deputy marshal, in broad daylight, and on a crowded street in Salt Lake City, struck the deputy a blow with his fist. For this offense he was twice fined, and then sent to the penitentiary by the United States judge. A Mormon is killed in cold blood by a deputy marshal, and the assassin is acquitted at the instance of the United States prosecutor. This kind of history reads well, does it not? And it will improve vastly with age.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will say that no community ever did exist that was at the same time industrious and thrifty and yet immoral, dishonest, and disloyal. Men there may be bad to a degree that will not bear mention who are also industrious, but communities and nations never. History records no such example. The industry and thrift of my constituents is admitted by their bitterest and most fanatical enemies. They dare not deny it. Do a handful of Mormons in the Rocky Mountains set at defiance all that the experience of history has revealed? Are they in the world's history the solitary instance of thrift and immorality, of industry and licentiousness, of probity and dishonesty, possessed of material wealth and yet disrespectful of property rights? Nothing could be more absurd.

History tells us, Mr. Speaker, that where there is thrift and industry in a community, side by side with it will be found morality, truthfulness, and loyalty. The admission of the industry of the people of Utah destroys the whole case of their enemies. Industry and immorality have ever been and will forever remain incompatible in communities. But even were this not true, what can you do by legislation? There is no gainsaying the fact that industry could not exist where property rights are not duly respected and protected by law. The industry of Utah therefore signifies the existence of ample protection for property rights. It has been stated by one of those now in Washington in the interest of this bill that one-half the property in Salt Lake is owned by Gentiles. Taking his word as true, what does it show? That the very presence in business ventures in Utah of so many persons intensely antagonistic to the Mormon people demonstrates the existence of laws covering property rights absolutely.

What more can you do? You can not legislate the people industrious. The history of all times contradicts such a possibility. You can not legislate people virtuous, nor can you legislate them happy. All that you can do is to throw around industrial communities those safeguards which, while preserving them from interference, still see that the rights of individuals in property are secured; that the people are not subject to destroying exactions, nor to the fury and bigotry of men invested with power, and base enough to use it for the injury of their fellows, for the limitation of their liberties, and for the annulling of their rights. No sound governmental policy dare go beyond this. No statesman dare attempt to do more while he has any respect for his reputation or regard for those lessons which history teaches. In Utah what have we found? A people whose industrial accomplishments are without a rival in modern times, if ever rivaled. Arbitrarily, and with an utter disregard of historical teaching and practical working, this people have been assumed to be immoral.

With a full knowledge that every attempt at the introduction of morality by means of legislation is against all good reason, men seem determined to legislate this people moral. You are asked to make honest that which is alleged to be inherently dishonest; good that which is hopelessly bad; pure that which is reeking with filth; noble and elevating that which is ignoble and debased, and all by legislation. In other words, you are asked to legislate the sow's ear into the silk purse.

Mr. Speaker, it can not be done. You begin on a false basis. But even were the position sure, the means are opposed to reason and to history. If the Mormon people are what the popular belief declares them to be, they will destroy themselves more surely, more rapidly, than can be accomplished by any methods to which you dare resort. The effect of immoral practices by communities is such certain, such inevitable decay that even when all appears best and fairest the death-promoting germs are at work surely and relentlessly undermining, and will bring the whole into that crumbling decay, that putrid ruin, which a beneficent Creator has determined shall be the fate of all that is not builded upon and sustained by the eternal principles of morality. If Mormonism fall, it will fall of its own weight. I contend, Mr. Speaker, and I make the contention with all respect, that instead of promoting the true interests of Utah all this special and class legislation has been a pronounced detriment.

You have found my constituents honest, for their reputation in business marts is almost unexampled. You have found them industrious. Instead of following the promptings of reason and experience by throwing about them those safeguards which would enable them to continue their work of enriching this great nation—instead of this, it is proposed to hamper them still further and by the most violent methods.

I tell you if we want our own people and the nations of the world to respect our boast of justice and our right to govern, if we would have them love the principles of freedom we profess, we must begin by manifesting some respect for justice and some love for free and liberal principles ourselves. Only by this means can we inspire in others a permanent and abiding faith in our institutions and in our loyalty.

My constituents have suffered indignities, insults, and ostracism for years almost uncomplainingly. They have been despoiled of character by paid assassins—and by assassins I mean those that are vilest, who rob women and children of that which alone gives value to life—and my people have asked in vain for justice. They have been misruled by men sent from a Government that did not design to be unfriendly, men who have been their enemies in every way but that which gives the garb of honor to enmity, and my people have submitted. They have been taunted, and by wicked and treasonable designs have been tempted to assume a position of open and avowed resistance to the Government, and the attempts have failed; yet charges of defiance and treason have been entered against them which were shown to be false, and still there came no redress for my people. One by one their rights—and those rights which give a community its reputation, its better, its immortal part—have been wrested arbitrarily from them, and still my people have appealed for justice and raised opposition only by those means which the Constitution has provided. A whole nation, if the words of blatant men prevail, is arrayed against them determined upon their destruction, and this determination is gradually crystallizing in the acts of Congress, and yet the appeal of my people is to constitutional means and to these alone. This is the disloyal people of Utah!

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, I tell you solemnly, that in the United States, in the whole world, there is no people more loyal to the eternal truths of liberty, as expressed in the Constitution of this country, than my constituents; and there will come a time, a time when the mists which now befog the understanding of the American people and its legislators, when the refuge of lies erected by characterless charlatans shall have been swept away, there will come such a time when my words will stand forth marked, clear, and bold and untarnished as their truth justifies.

Gentlemen, I ask you to pause. For your own sakes you can not afford to take a step which is determined upon by such insufficient and untrustworthy testimony. I am here more than a pleader. I speak for myself; and I pledge my word and my character that the statements upon which this legislation is based are without foundation in fact. You can not afford to pursue a policy which is determined upon the destruction of a people whose only fault is, at worst, that they pursue the happiness of themselves and their fellows by methods which are different from your own. Time, the great corrector of all evils, will right this wrong, if such it be, and the fiat of the Eternal has already decreed that the last vestige of Mormonism shall be swept away by the peaceful progress of events, if it be not that which God in His wisdom has appointed shall survive as the fittest.

Gentlemen, you who have freed from bondage the negro slave, you who love liberty and cherish the institutions of our country, who would bequeath them fair and unsullied to your children, let me plead with you, let me beseech you, not to consign my people to such inhuman slavery. [Loud applause.]

During the delivery of Mr. CAINE'S remarks his hour expired.

Mr. COLLINS said: I take the floor for the second hour in my own right, and yield to the gentleman from Utah such time as he may require to finish his speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. VAN EATON). The gentleman from Utah will proceed.

Mr. CAINE resumed and concluded his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] has thirty minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. COLLINS. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT], my colleague on the committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 228) for the erection of a public building at Camden, N. J.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2619) authorizing a settlement of the claim of Hiram Berdan, assignee of the Berdan Fire-Arms Manufacturing Company;

A bill (S. 2791) to provide for an American register for the steamer Nuevo Moctezuma, of Philadelphia, Pa.;

A bill (S. 2920) amending section 3749 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (S. 3052) to extend the time for filing claims in the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to July 31, 1801."

POLYGAMY.

Mr. BENNETT was recognized, and addressed the House on the bill (H. R. 10) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882. [See Appendix.]

Mr. TUCKER was recognized.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who wishes to speak at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] used only fifteen minutes of his time. If the gentleman from Maine desires to occupy the remainder of the time——

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I had not supposed that it would be necessary to make any great number of observations in favor of this bill until I heard the applause which, on the other side of the Chamber, greeted the remarks which were made by the two gentlemen who have just sat down. It would seem now as if there ought to be some exposition of the principles which govern this bill. I have also a personal reason for desiring to state why I support the bill. I am a believer in local self-government. I am also a thorough believer in government by the people, and I look upon many of the tendencies—temporary I hope—of modern times with great distrust; for instance, the tendency to take from the people of this country their power of frequent examination into the acts of their officials. I believe that biennial elections and quadrennial governorships are inventions which deprive the people of power, and at the same time offer prizes to be captured by the corruption of political life.

I believe also that, under ordinary circumstances, the best government of which a people is capable is the government which they establish for themselves. With all its imperfections, with all its shortcomings, it is always better adapted to them than any other government, even though invented by wiser men. Believing in these principles, I think it desirable to explain why I consider this case an entire and complete exception to the general rule which ought to control the government of a free people by themselves. Gentlemen who have discussed this question upon the other side have done so always under the implied assumption that the Territory of the United States occupies the same relation to the United States as the territory of a State. There can be no greater fallacy than that, yet that fallacy underlies the whole of the able argument which was read by the Delegate from Utah. That argument proceeds sub silentio upon the idea that the Territory which is organized under the name of Utah bears the same relation to this people and this Government that a State would, or that Utah itself would, after it had been admitted to the full fellowship of the States.

The right of self-government is a right which exists in a State, which belongs to the inhabitants of the State, and which the Constitution declares Congress shall guarantee to the State. But the territory owned by the United States occupies an entirely different relation. Why, here in this District, before our very eyes, has been established, amid the acclamations of gentlemen on the other side, a government which does not allow the residents of a city of 200,000 inhabitants the least power or control over the affairs of the land they inhabit. It allows them neither control over their own local affairs nor participation, as citizens of the United States, in the common affairs of the country. This arises from the peculiar situation of the territory which is occupied by the seat of Government.

It was deemed desirable, and wisely so deemed, that the Government of the United States should of itself, apart from any control of any one of the States, and outside the boundaries of any of them, own and control territory necessary for the seat of Government. We have here territory which belongs to the United States; and we have the seeming anomaly of the capital of the country, republican in all its professions, which is governed without the will or consent of those actually residing here. Yet this is justifiable. It is justifiable on the ground of the situation. We pay half the expenses; we have the right to control; and all the people of the United States are interested; therefore we assume and exercise control.

Now, what is the position of a Territory of the United States? It is land owned by the United States outside of the territory of the States themselves. Even when the fee-simple has passed it is our domain. We may have a design in the future to make of this land States, to be admitted into the Union with the full powers of the existing States. But, in the mean time, Congress has the right to make rules and regulations for the Territory; and if this were an untouched question it might well be doubted whether Congress had any right to delegate this power, whether we are not bound ourselves to make the rules and regulations. But the legislative decision has been otherwise, and Congress has allowed to the inhabitants of the organized Territories the exercise of certain political privileges. These have been accorded to the temporary residents there, not as rights but as privileges extended by the hand of Congress.

Whatever limitation, therefore, Congress sees fit to put upon the power which it grants those that inhabit the land belonging to the United States is solely within the control of the people of the United States. They can limit this power, can make it greater or less, or can annihilate it entirely, and govern these Territories by commissioners, just as we govern the territory occupied now by the Federal capital. And I am not sure that before we get through we may not have to exercise our power in that direction. I am not sure that the wiser course today would not be to take complete control of this particular Territory.

Why of this Territory? What is there peculiar in its history and character that should make us legislate with regard to it differently from the way in which we legislate as to any other Territory? The delegate from Utah [Mr. CAINE] has himself outlined the reasons which have forced this legislation upon us. He dwells upon the pathos of the situation. He probably did not realize that he was stating the binding facts which will control this House in its action, and the country in its approval of that action.

A long time ago a body of religionists left the United States, marched across the plains, and took possession of certain property belonging to the people of the United States, out of which we had determined, in pursuance of our general policy, to make some day a State. But it was not merely a band of religionists; it was a people that had a polity. The delegate from Utah himself, either in a moment of forgetfulness when he wrote his manuscript, or in a moment of forgetfulness when he was talking, spoke of "the Mormon polity." There is the key-note of the situation. Those people went out there as the representatives of a polity. They went there as a government. What did they do? With that rare foresight which indicates statesmanship, and which we should compliment if the object had been just, the Mormon church took possession, under the forms of law, of every acre of arable land. The land out there required to be irrigated; and they took possession of every source of water supply.

They took possession of the forests; they took possession of everything that they deemed valuable, not only for themselves but for their co-religionists who should afterward join them. They intended to segregate to themselves as an organized band a certain portion of the property of the people of the United States. But wise as they were, they had not complete prophetic foresight. They knew nothing of the value of the mineral lands; and years afterward the swarming miners, when they went there, found themselves, except as to mineral privileges, deprived of all the rights which fairly belonged to them as citizens of the United States. That hierarchy has been kept up ever since its organization, inside the United States and controlling one of its Territories.

It is useless to call such a measure as that now before the House an assault upon a religion. It is an assault upon a band of men organized for the purpose of controlling exclusively the territory which belonged to the people of the United States; and, as the gentleman from Utah well says, whenever injustice is done it can never finally triumph; there will always come a period of reckoning. And to-day we are rooting out an unjust possession of the soil which belonged to the people of the United States, and should have been open and free to them.

Polygamy is only one of the incidents of the situation. It is one of the manifestations of a bad condition of society, and it affords me an illustration to show why we can not permit local control to be supreme in that region. You propose to punish a man for violating the laws of the United States with regard to polygamy. What is your practical situation? You bring him before a grand jury. If that grand jury were chosen as grand juries are selected elsewhere, the result would be that the grand jury room would be filled either with men who are committing the same crime, or with those who believe it would be a religious duty for them to commit it if they were worth property enough to sustain themselves in doing so. If you bring the offender before a jury, you are met by twelve men in the box, the majority of whom must necessarily be men who entirely sympathize with the crime. Now if there is anybody here who believes that an execution of the laws of the United States would be possible under such circumstances, he has a faith in the uprightness of mankind which I do not share.

That illustrates one of the difficulties which are in the way of the enforcement of the laws of the United States unless we take some such control of the matter as is proposed in this bill—unless we take hold of it by force of our governing power.

Well, perhaps, some one will say, why do you not let them carry out alone by themselves the principles which actuate them? In addition to the reasons I have given, it is because some time or other we must admit these people to a fellowship in the States, and while we recognize, and I recognize to its fullest extent, the rights of local self-government, the right of the preservation of local institutions, while I admit these rights as among the strongest bulwarks of our liberty, nevertheless this country must be, in the main, homogeneous in thought and feeling if it is to be a strong and solid nation. The differences which are to be tolerated must be kept within those reasonable limits which will enable the nation to be united in thought and feeling against all exterior opposition.

I have thus briefly, imperfectly, stated the reasons which will govern my vote. I find nothing in the bill obnoxious to my views except the single section with reference to woman suffrage. If opportunity is given to me I shall vote against that. I see no reason for incorporating it into the bill. I think there is not the slightest occasion for it, and I protest against it. But while I find that difficulty with the bill, nevertheless the advantage of it under the circumstances constrains my vote. [Loud applause.]

Mr. COLLINS. These people crossed the plains and occupied that territory and acquired title to it when it was not the property of the United States, but the property of Mexico.

Mr. REED. That does not make any difference, as we succeeded to the rights of Mexico.

Mr. COLLINS. But it makes a difference in your statement.

Mr. TUCKER. I will yield now to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, in the few moments of time alloted me, and in which I shall occupy the floor, I cannot give many reasons why this bill should pass. But I desire in the first place to disclaim on the part of the Committee on the Judiciary, which has given this subject a very full consideration, any wish or desire to persecute these Mormon people.

The gentleman from Utah [Mr. CAINE] told us that they had been driven from three States of this country. Well, that is after all for the very reason they persisted in violating the laws of those States. Now, sir, there has been a more charitable view taken of the Mormon people than any other race of men who ever inhabited this country. The Government of the United States has been extremely lenient to them, and for years past Congresses have failed and hesitated to put their strong hand on an evil which has been practiced by the Mormon Church.

It has been settled and well settled that it is within the power of Congress to legislate on that subject and to exterminate, if necessary, that evil from the country. And it has become an important question with us now whether we will hesitate longer to do it.

This bill strikes at the very root of the church. It absolutely repeals the charter which gave it existence. It is well settled in the case of the National Banks against the County of Yankton that Congress has the authority to declare null and void any act of a Territorial Legislature. It is true that this piece of country was embraced in the original Mexican boundary, but by treaty it was ceded to the United States. In that State of Deseret, before it came under the jurisdiction of the United States, they organized this Mormon Church, and afterward the Territorial government in 1855 re-enacted that organization. I call attention of gentlemen to the act of Congress passed in 1862, which I send up to the Clerk's desk to be read, wherein Congress exercised its right to nullify a Territorial act.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the following ordinance of the provisional government of the state of the Deseret, so called, namely: "An ordinance incorporating the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints," passed February 8, in the year 1851, and adopted, re-enacted, and made valid by the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah by an act passed January 19, in the year 1855, entitled "An act in relation to the compilation and revision of the laws and resolutions in force in Utah Territory, their publication and distribution," and all other acts and parts of acts heretofore passed by the said Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, which establish, support, maintain, shield, or countenance polygamy, be, and the same hereby are, disapproved and annulled: Provided, That this act shall be so limited and construed as not to affect or interfere with the right of property legally acquired under the ordinance heretofore mentioned, nor with the right "to worship God according to the dictates of conscience," but only to annul all acts and laws which establish, maintain, protect, or countenance the practice of polygamy, evasively called spiritual marriage, however disguised by legal or ecclesiastical solemnities, sacraments, ceremonies, consecrations, or other contrivances.

Mr. CASWELL. The only point, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make is this, in order to show to the House that in 1862 the Congress of the United States exercised the right and did actually nullify the organization of this very church.

What is the status, then, of this Mormon church? It has no legal existence; it has an existence merely de facto; and the only question is, what shall be done with the assets? This bill provides that the court may take charge and distribute the assets according to law and equity. That is all there is of it.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, in closing this debate I am not only confronted with the eloquent declamation and fine humor of my friend North Carfrom olina [Mr. BENNETT] and the well prepared address of the Delegate from the Territory of Utah [Mr. CAINE], but I find also that I am confronted, as members of this House are confronted, with a speech which I had the honor to deliver on the floor of this House nearly five years ago upon the Edmunds bill. I suppose the purpose of disseminating that document, which I did not know had attained the popularity itseems to have reached, was to embarrass me, as was supposed, in my advocacy of the present bill. I am glad, therefore, to mention to gentlemen who thought it might possibly embarrass me, that I had taken into full account the views I then expressed in the very ample and earnest consideration that I have given to this Mormon question in the committee, before this bill was introduced to the House.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing, except, perhaps in one point, I uttered on that occasion that is at all in conflict with what I believe to be the mild and just provisions of this bill. That point of seeming conflict with my formerly-expressed opinion has been settled by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court have held that there is no right of suffrage by any inhabitant of a Territory in the sense that there is such right of suffrage by a citizen within a State; that the absolute control of all matters of government in a Territory being in the Congress of the United States, subject to the Constitution, the question whether a man or a woman shall be allowed to vote is entirely and rightfully for Congress to determine; and hence when we exclude the whole of womankind as a class, gentlemen might just as well say that they are condemned without conviction to disfranchisement by the provisions of this bill, and that they are so condemned for the crime of being women. Now, there is nothing in that position, as I shall show when I come to discuss that point in their argument.

I will say, sir, for myself and the committee, over which you have done me the honor to appoint me chairman, that I suppose there never was a question brought to the consideration of a committee of this House that was examined with more earnest care than this Mormon question has been examined by the Judiciary Committee during the last session of Congress.

We heard the eloquent gentleman from Utah upon that subject; we heard a number of counsel; I think we listened to twenty or thirty hours of oral arguments; I read all the arguments and briefs that could be presented, and I came to the conclusion, after a careful study of the question, that something must be done if the United States were not to declare that they were unable to cope with the question of Mormonism in the great Territory of Utah.

Gentlemen have talked of the power of Congress over the Territories. Let us look at that a moment. From what does it result? It has not only been settled, but properly settled by the courts.

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States. (Constitution United States, Article IV, section 3, clause 2.

I desire to emphasize the words "territory belonging to the United States." It is their territory. It belongs to the United States; to them as copartners.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Their property.

Mr. TUCKER. Their property. That is the first proposition. Now, what does any nation, what does this Union, hold territory for? For two purposes—to be disposed of as property of the United States by the Congress; and to put the proceeds into the National Treasury. But there is another and a greater constitutional purpose on the part of this Union in holding territory, and that is to keep it intact as a domain for the colonization of our own people. It is the property of the United States not only as mere land, but it is the domain of the people of the United States, where every man, woman, and child anywhere within our border may go and live and have a better home than in the old States. It does not belong to the first little squad of men who choose to pounce down upon it and say "we are monarchs of all we survey; our rights there is none to dispute." It belongs to the United States, and they have a duty to perform in seeing that this property shall not be monopolized by any special class of men or by any church. That is the situation. It is our duty to secure it for free colonization for all the people of all the United States, to whom it belongs.

But, sir, there is another reason why Congress has the right to govern the Territories. Congress has power "to admit new States into this Union." (Constitution United States, Article IV, section 3, clause 1.) The United States are bound to "guarantee to every State a republican form of government." (Constitution United States, Article IV, section 4.) The populations in the Territories of the United States must be banded together around some nucleus of government which will enable them to live and be fostered until they can become the governing power of a State. We thus see, that in addition to the power of regulating the Territories, and the power of the admission into the Union of new States, the Constitution guarantees that these States shall also have a republican form of government.

But who shall organize the government for the people of the Territories? Who shall define the boundaries of each Territory? Who shall make its civil government? Who shall pass laws for its peace and order, and to raise it from the condition of a colony or province to the dignity and sovereignty of a body politic?

The Constitution provides for it.

Congress shall have power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof." (Constitution United States, Article I, section 8, clause 18.)

How comprehensive! The power of Congress to make rules and regulations for the territory, to admit States formed therefrom into the Union, and that of the United States (that is, the Government of the United States) to guarantee to each of such States so formed from their territory a republican form of government must be carried into execution by laws of Congress necessary and proper for these purposes. Congress then is charged with the duty and vested with the power, by necessary and proper laws, to organize the people of the Territories into distinct communities, to govern them as shall seem best and proper, so that they may, in due time, be fitted to enter the Union as equal States with their older sisters, clothed with the vesture of a republican form of government. The power of Congress to govern the Territories thus clearly springs from these clauses of the Constitution by irresistible deduction.

There is, therefore, no doubt and no question as to the power of Congress in this matter. The Supreme Court has fully sanctioned this view by a long line of decisions, the last of which is National Bank vs. Yankton, 101 U. S., 129. Congress can not pass a law violative of the principles of the Constitution; and in that sense the Constitution is extended to the Territories for the protection of its citizens; and for my own part, Mr. Speaker, I would vote against the bill I have reported if I could be convinced that there is one thing in it which trenches upon the conscience of any man—even of a Mormon. I would protect him with as much care as I would protect one of any other religion. Why, what my friend from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] read a few moments ago is perfectly well settled, and has been adopted in the reports of the Judiciary Committee, as a canon of religious freedom under the civil law. It is the language of the immortal Thomas Jefferson in the immortal act for the religious freedom of the people of the State of Virginia, framed on the 16th day of December, 1785, "that it is time enough for the rightful purposes of civil government for its officers to interfere when principles break out into overt acts against peace and good order."

I do not care what the Mormon believes. But he must not believe and act upon his belief if it violates the right of any other man or violates the power of the Government and its laws for the peace and good order of society. That is all. I do not object to his saying that he or some other man ought to have two wives or more; but I do not intend to let him or that other man have more than one. If you are not a polygamist in act I do not care what you believe; but I do care very much what you do. When religious belief breaks out into the overt act of polygamy it is time for the civil government to interfere to preserve the peace, purity, and good order of society.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that being the power of Congress, what is it the duty of Congress to do? What is polygamy? It is a crime by the law of every state in Christendom. Ever since Christ interpreted the Judaic law and gave it to us in His own express words it has been not only a sin against God, but has been made a crime by every Christian society. Mark His words:

For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; and they twain—

Not a whole bundle of them, but—

They twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh.

Ever since Christ uttered that language all of the Japhetic race have adopted monogamy as the only foundation of a decent civilization. [Applause.]

The nucleus of the state is the home of the people. What is the home of the people? The one man and the one woman; the one man loving supremely none but her, and the woman loving none supremely but her husband. Thank God, there are such homes yet in this great land which He has given to us and our posterity. [Applause.] That is the foundation of your polity; without it there would not be a Christian State in the Union that would be fit to live in. The family is the germ of society. As is the family, so will be the state. A family home of one man and one woman bound together by mutual and an exclusive confidence and trust, rearing under joint care the children whom God shall give them, is the foundation-stone of every Christian society among men, the essential principle of every free modern commonwealth. With its conservation, liberty, peace, purity, and progress will be the possession and inheritance of the Christian state. In its loss we will lose all which makes modern civilization the glory of our race.

But you may say, "Are there no homes in Utah?" Yes; but what kind? Homes in which the heart of the husband is divided out and diffused among so many wives that it is lost when it gets to any one [laughter]—the father of a number of distinct sets of children, the wives being mothers each of only one set. What a partnership! What a home in which to rear children! Why, gentlemen, that is the basis of a civilization that went out twenty centuries ago everywhere else except in Asia. Ours is the basic principle of the civilization of to-day; theirs of the ancient pre-Christian period of the world's history. With monogamy we are in the lead of progress in the twentieth century of the Christian era. Introduce polygamy, and we turn back the dial of our destiny—we obliterate the Christian era, and return from the light and glory of to-day to the gloom and barbarism of two thousand years ago! That social condition is an Asiatic exotic; ours is a plant of European-American growth. They are as diverse and incompatible as light and darkness. They cannot co-exist; they must be divorced, or one or the other must be extirpated. The Upas tree of polygamy is death to a Christian society or to a modern Christian commonwealth.

Can two such systems go together? Can they live side by side? Is there a man here who would to-day vote to admit the polygamous Territory of Utah into this Union? Shall the fair and pure sisterhood of these American States ever permit a polygamous sister to sit with them at the fireside of our great Union?

Several MEMBERS. No! no!

Mr. TUCKER. Never. Then what? Sit down and let them do, as the gentleman from Utah says—"We will work it out one of these days, and if we are wrong we will sink; but you must wait to see how long it will take us to sink." This language seems to make exclusive claim to that Territory for the Mormon people. Why, sir, that is our Territory, our domain for the homes of our own Christian people to dwell in; we want that as one of the States of this Union. And why does it not come in? Why does it, with 180,000 people, still, as for forty years it has stood, stand as a province of the Union and not as a State in the Union? Because there are 150,000 Mormons there that would perpetuate polygamy as an institution of their society.

Why do not other people go there? Why how can people go there when it is occupied by this number of a polygamous church who insist on making it a polygamous State? The question then for us to determine is, what is it our duty to do in order that Utah may be prepared to come into the Union one of these days as a State with like habits of social life, with homogeneous ideas of American civilization, and with principles in public polity compatible with our own?

For forty years Utah has been a Territory; and that she is to be ruled as such forever is contrary to the genius of our institutions. It is our duty to prepare Utah to come into the Union, by extirpating and rooting out all that is alien to the genius of our institutions, so as to permit people to go there who will establish the germs of American homes in that vast Territory.

Now, how is that to be done? Why, sir, what is this Mormonism? Is it merely polygamy? Are we dealing with the individual crime of the individual man? Not at all; or only incidentally. That is a very small part of the whole business. Any man that will look into the history of this thing will see that, as the gentleman from Utah said to-day, or said to-day in substance, every Mormon member of a church is bound by his fidelity to the church to see that the state is run in favor of the Lord.

Mr. CAINE. The gentleman from Utah did not make use of any such expression.

Mr. TUCKER. What, then, did the gentleman say? If he will turn to his manuscript he will find it there.

Mr. CAINE. Nothing of that sort is to be found there.

Mr. TUCKER. What did the gentleman say on that subject?

Mr. CAINE. I certainly did not say that.

Mr. TUCKER. I will be very much obliged, if the gentleman allows to go into the RECORD just what he said to-day.

Mr. CAINE. It has already gone to be printed.

Mr. TUCKER. But I do not care whether the gentleman admitted it or not. The fact is so, that the Mormon Church is a hierarchy that overrides the state. Let us see what that church was. Gentlemen say that it took possession of this Territory when it was still Mexican territory. That is true. They went out there, the gentleman from Utah says—about 5,000 men, as I understood him. Am I correct?

Mr. CAINE. No, sir. I said 5,000 went out there in the first two years.

Mr. TUCKER. Then there must have been about 5,000 who went there?

Mr. CAINE. There were some 20,000 who went there during the exodus.

Mr. TUCKER. How, then, came there to be only 5,000 left?

Mr. CAINE. I said in the first two years there was an emigration of 5,000.

Mr. TUCKER. Well, they went there, and by the treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo that Territory was acquired by the United States. The amount of territory that they occupied and claimed to be the state of Deseret by their constitution adopted in 1849, after the treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo, in which they erected themselves into the state of Deseret, was equal, I believe, to the territory of all the original Atlantic States. In their constitution they set up their authority as of the Lord, in which they said that they themselves must be the government of that territory "until the Congress of the United States shall otherwise provide for the government of the territory, hereafter named and described, by admitting us into the Union;" that is to say, they claimed to be an independent state of Deseret until they were admitted into the Union, as a free State inside the Union. They claimed to be independent of the Union until admitted into the Union. This was a clear and distinct usurpation of the authority of the Union within the Territory of Utah, which by treaty had become a part of the territory belonging to the United States.

By this act of the Mormon government the power of Congress was utterly repudiated. That was in March, 1849. The treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo was in 1848. In 1850, September 9, the organic act was passed for the Territory of Utah, which put an end to their power entirely. This same "state of Deseret" February 8, 1851, passed an act incorporating the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. This was five months after the organic act passed. That is, after Utah had become a Territory of the United States the "state of Deseret" (not the Territory of Utah) passed that act incorporating the Mormon Church.

Now, I say—and that is the argument of the report—that what the "State of Deseret" did after it became a Territory of the United States, and after the organic act was passed, was absolutely null and void. The incorporation of the church, therefore, has no sound foundation and has had none from the beginning. Afterward they incorporated the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Society and made it an annex to the church; for the board of the church was to appoint the board of managers of the Emigration Society, and they were to bring in people of the Mormon faith to swell the population of the Territory so that they might possess it for "the people of the Lord." Now, gentlemen, I have looked through the acts of the Assembly of Deseret and of Utah with great patience and in great detail. I believe I have seen every one of them, and six months ago I believe I could have stood an examination upon them.

I saw acts of the Assembly in which they gave a whole valley, the Valley of the Cache, to Brigham Young, in trust for the church; acts by which large properties were passed over to the church; acts showing that all the legislation of the civil power was in the direction of building up the kingdom of the Lord, as it was represented in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. It was a union of church and state, and the church was at the head of the state. They acquired property, nobody knows how much; to this day nobody knows how much. They have their secret services in the Endowment House, where oaths are taken that never get beyond its threshold. The power of the hierarchy is complete and absolute, but the rules by which it acts are hidden from the eyes of men. They have accumulated property to a very large amount—to how large an amount we know not. What the total is, whether it is held by gift, or by parties in trust for the church, we know not.

The great attack upon this bill is made upon that provision of it which disestablishes the church, disincorporates it.

That is proposed by this bill to be done, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that as long as that organized power of the church continues, so long will every member of that church be under its control, and thus make the power of the state simply the power of the church. When religion veils itself in mystery and organizes its power over its individual members under the dread claim of a Divine commission to direct the actions and bind the consciences of men; when it accumulates great wealth, and thus through superstitious reverence, and by the influence which concentrated and corporate wealth always acquires, wields power over civil affairs; such an ecclesiastic organism is a menace to the civil power, and becomes dangerous to the liberty of the people and to the peace and good order of society.

It is the experience of all countries, and especially of Great Britain and America, that the power to accumulate property in the hands of ecclesiastical bodies has been dangerous to the people; and this has given rise in British and American history to those mortmain acts which have checked so greatly this process of accumulation.

By the charter of this Mormon Church and of its annex corporation, the Emigration Society, the capacity to acquire real and personal property was unlimited. The latter corporation had power to emit bills of credit, a power denied even to the States of the Union by the Constitution of the United States.

These two powerful corporations, created without lawful authority, holding large real and personal property, and with unlimited capacity for future acquisition, were checked by the act of Congress of 1862. The church was limited to holding $50,000 of property. This is doubtless a dead letter as far as the Mormon Church is concerned.

The question for the committee was this: Is it not public policy to disestablish the church, to put it on the same basis with all other churches, and by dissolving the corporation of the church leave its members as citizens free from this corporate ecclesiastical authority to act as their judgments should dictate in civil affairs; to free the man from corporate shackles and leave him to independent action as a citizen of the State?

We dissolve the tribal relations of the Indians in order to make the Indian a good citizen; so we shatter the fabric of this church organization in order to make each member of the church a free citizen of the Territory of Utah. "But what right have you to disestablish the church?" says my friend from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT]. Why, sir, we do not disestablish a church that had any rightful establishment, or lawful existence; we simply disestablish a church that was sought to be illegally established by the power of the Territory of Utah. There is no power that Utah has exercised in reference to that church that was not subject to the will of Congress, subject to be repealed and annulled by Congress; and now Congress comes in and says that the raising up of such a power of priesthood in the Territory of Utah is dangerous to the liberty of the people, and therefore we disestablish it—that is to say, we annul the illegal provision by which it purports to have been established. The Supreme Court has sanctioned the power of Congress in this respect in the National Bank vs. Yankton (101 U. S., 129).

Mr. HERBERT. You only disestablish the civil establishment of the church?

Mr. TUCKER. We disestablish the church.

Mr. GROUT. You do not attack its divine authority at all.

Mr. HERBERT. You disestablish the civil establishment?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes; I want to be distinctly understood upon that point, because if there is anybody in the world that is bound to be a friend of religious freedom it is a man born in the old Commonwealth of Virginia, and I have, in reality, attempted to engraft the polity of old Virginia upon the polity of Utah. In old Virginia we do not allow the church to have any property except the property upon which the church building stands and that upon which the parsonage for its pastor is erected.

As to the power of the church to accumulate property and mingle itself too much with the temporalities of this world, we know that that will corrupt the church, and that when the church is corrupted, it will corrupt the state.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Will you please state just here, for the information of the House, whether the Mormon Church still owns those lands which you say were granted by the state of Deseret?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir; I have already stated in the report, and I state now, that after the power of the Territory got into the hands of the United States, after Brigham Young was "disestablished" as governor by President Buchanan, the Legislature revoked a great many of those grants of property to the church, but the establishment of the church was afterwards confirmed by the Territory of Utah at some time before 1860.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what I was going on to say was this: This disestablishment of the church and its property is due to the fact that by its establishment there was a difference made between the Mormon Church and all other churches. I wish gentlemen to mark the fact to which I now call their attention. I say that while the Territorial legislature of Deseret and the Territorial government of Utah established and incorporated the church of the Mormons, there was no incorporation given to any other church; no power was given to any other church to accumulate property, while the power to accumulate property to an unlimited extent was given to the Mormon Church by that act of incorporation.

It is this discrimination between the Mormon Church and all others that led the committee to adopt this provision of the bill disestablishing the Mormon Church.

Let me add further. It has been said that Congress is forbidden to pass any law respceting the establishment of religion. That is true, and is fatal to the objection urged against this part of the bill. For if Congress with full power to govern the Territories could not pass a law respecting—that is, looking toward the establishment of religion—how can a Territory, deriving all its legislative authority from Congress, do so? And can there be a doubt that when a corporation is granted to the Mormon Church and is denied to all others—when unlimited capacity to acquire property is given to that church, and is granted to none other, this is a law respecting the establishment of religion and is void, because unconstitutional ab initio. And if this be so, Congress, in obedience to the Constitution of the United States, is bound to annul an act of incorporation, which was a violation of the Constitution. This disestablishment, therefore, is a constitutional duty to annul and disapprove an unconstitutional act of Utah.

Mr. PETERS. Is the title to their church property derived from any other source than the Territorial act?

Mr. TUCKER. They may have obtained some of their property from individuals. I think it is the fact that they have done so. I will come to that point in a moment to show the reason for one feature of this bill.

Now, all that this bill does is to disincorporate the Mormon Church and leave the other churches unincorporated. They will all be on an equality. We propose to enact in the 18th section of the bill that the Mormon Church and all other churches shall have the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, to build houses of worship and houses for the residence of their spiritual teachers, to a certain extent, in town and in country. We propose, further, to enact that beyond the property occupied for worship they shall not own property exceeding in value altogether $50,000, this being considered enough to keep them from being corrupted by wealth or too poor to do their legitimate church work. This privilege is given to every church in Utah Territory, but not to one more than another. So that this "disestablishment" which gentlemen speak of is really the revocation of an act establishing one church in Utah; and thereby all churches are put on an equal basis.

"But," say gentlemen, "what do you mean by authorizing the Attorney-General to come in and seize the property of the church?" My friend from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT]—my excellent and very able friend—whose speech was listened to with so much applause because it was an eloquent defense of a bad cause, a proceeding in which he is eminently celebrated and illustrious [laughter]—my friend from North Carolina has made a strong attack upon this bill on the ground that we propose to seize the property of the church and distribute it to everybody. Why, sir, let me state all that is proposed to be done. The question may arise whether this church ever had any valid incorporation. We propose, if it ever had any valid incorporation, to annul that incorporation. Therefore any proceeding which may be taken would either seek to annul the incorporation if it had any valid existence, or to declare that the church never had any such incorporation.

A MEMBER. What becomes of the property?

Mr. TUCKER. I am coming to that. We propose to authorize the Attorney-General to institute proper proceedings in the court of the Territory, with appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as to all its decrees, for the purpose of declaring the dissolution or the voidness of the incorporation of this church and of this Emigration Fund Society; and then we provide for paying the debts of the corporation so declared defunct, and "to dispose of the property and assets according to law and equity."

Mr. MORGAN. You dissolve the corporation.

Mr. TUCKER. We dissolve the corporation. Some gentleman has said "Why not, since you dissolve the corporation, let everybody who chooses bring suit and litigate for himself?" Why, as soon as the corporation is dissolved the property falls from the "dead clutch," the mortmain of the corporation, and has to be dealt with judicially. There may be a number of persons, creditors or others, who have claims to that property. Let the court decide what are the rights of the parties.

I hold upon perfectly well-established principles of law that if a person has conveyed to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, when it was supposed to have corporate existence, 1,000 acres of land, and the dissolution of the corporation is decreed, that land reverts, necessarily, by the principles of the common law to the original donor. Let the court so decide and give him back his land. If you can trace money which has gone to purchase property for the benefit of the church, then if the church is dissolved and can not hold the property, there is a resulting trust as to that money for the benefit of every man who contributed. My great offense, so far as this bill is concerned, is that I have not undertaken to provide that Congress shall deal with this property, but that I propose to put it in the hands of the judiciary of the United States to be dealt with. Is there any sin in that? What better course can be pursued with respect to this property?

Mr. Speaker, I hurry on; for I am going to call the previous question in a few minutes. Let me briefly refer to another difficulty. Gentlemen have referred to the difference between the Senate bill and our bill. The difference between these two bills with reference to this matter of the church is this: The Senate bill proposes that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint thirteen trustees to act in conjunction with twelve trustees of the church in Utah; and these two bodies of trustees are to undertake to run the church establishment. How could that be done? The President, in that case, with his trustees, would really be the church, and we should have a union of church and state. In my judgment there can be no such partnership as that. I hold the Church of God too sacred for any such partnership. There can be no partnership, as there is no concord, between Christ and Belial. Let church and state stand apart. In this bill, instead of providing that the Government of the United States shall run the church we say, let us disestablish the church and put each one of the Mormon congregations on the same footing as the members of every Presbyterian, or Episcopal, or Methodist, or Baptist congregation.

Mr. Speaker, there is another question. Gentlemen have said that there is a test oath proposed here, and they have quoted a speech of mine made several years ago in which I said that we can not by legislation make criminal a past act which was not criminal when committed. I still maintain that position. But gentlemen say "Here is a case where a man has committed bigamy twenty years ago; has been prosecuted and convicted for it; and you are going to prosecute him again for bigamy." Why, sir, there are certain things in the way of virtues, and more especially in the way of vices, which are continuous in their nature. A man keeps a disreputable establishment. You prosecute him for it. While the prosecution is going on the house is still kept up. Can he say, in such a case, "You must not prosecute me for this new offense, because I have atoned for all the future by the prosecution you have already instituted?" A nuisance of to-day may be continued to-morrow. The prosecution for to-day's offense does not involve immunity from that of to-morrow.

The man who has in his pocket spurious money with intent to pass it away is indicted for having it to-day, and he may be indicted for having it to-morrow with the same intent, and he may be indicted for having it the day after to-morrow with the same intent. They are different offenses. Now, what is meant here is according to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. A bigamist or polygamist, according to the terms of the Edmunds bill, is not the man who committed bigamy or polygamy twenty years ago, but the man who lives in bigamous or polygamous relations to-day or hereafter. That is to say, it is an offense on the part of any person, holding out relations with four or five wives in a decent community, any and every day that he does so. We hold it to be a crime, whether it is an institution of this Mormon society or an article of their religious faith or a rule of their religious life under former laws and by this act; and that a person who has entered into a bigamous marriage ten years ago and who still persists in clinging to that polygamous relation, who continues to hold on to the woman whom he took to be his wife years ago, shall be held to have committed a crime, because the relation is immoral and debasing to society, and he shall be punished for continuing to hold out to the view of society a home which is contrary to the moral sense of our social life, and which is an injury to the women who are its victims, to the man who commits the offense, and to the children brought into the world with the stain of partial bastardy upon them. To punish only for the original marriage and exempt forever after from any penalty will be to sanction the worst form of the crime—its perpetuated immoral influence and debasing effect upon society.

Now, sir, the whole purpose of that clause was to punish the continuance of the relation and not to punish them for having married two or more women ten years ago. The punishment is for holding out those wives in a polygamous relation.

My friend in his report said the bill was very unjust as it spoke of polygamous associations, and ingeniously construed it as making a crime to have any association with a polygamist. The language of the proposed law is, "Polygamy or any polygamous association or cohabitation between the sexes." It refers to polygamous association between the sexes. That is the thing that is punished, and not association with other polygamists. Therefore you see my friend was barking up the wrong tree. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, there are some other matters in the bill to which objection has been taken. This test oath, for instance. There is no test oath at all. There is no law of marriage in Utah that anybody knows of by which a registration of marriage can be made public; who this or that man is married to, nobody can tell by any matter of record. What we propose in this bill is that a register shall be kept of all marriages which shall take place hereafter. In order to meet the cases of marriages heretofore, it is provided that every man shall be required to go before the register and make record of his age and place of residence, and whether he is married or not.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And how much? [Laughter.]

Mr. TUCKER. Yes; and how much, and to whom. Is there anything unfair in that? We say, at the same time he shall take an oath to sustain the Constitution of the United States. Is there anything unfair in that? He is required to swear that hereafter he will obey the law of 1862, as well as this law, when it shall be passed. Is there anything unfair in that? He is required to swear that he will not aid or abet the offense of bigamy or polygamy, but will follow the law. Is there anything unfair in that?

And we say, further, that if he does not do these things he shall be deprived of the privilege which Congress has given to the citizens of the Territory of voting at elections, and serving on juries, and holding offices within the Territory.

One of the gentlemen said this bill prevented him from being a witness in any suit or action. That is not so. We only make it go so far as to deny him the privilege of place on a jury in the Territory, and of the privilege of voting, believing that to be ample. If he does not take this oath, if he does not swear to abstain from all bigamous or polygamous relations, he is to be subjected to the disqualifications imposed by the provisions of this bill, as to voting, jury service, and holding office.

This section does not disqualify him by reason of anything in the past. There is no bill of attainder nor ex post facto law proposed by this bill. If he will do hereafter what this section prescribes, he can vote, serve on juries, or hold office. If not, he can not. The past will not affect him. His future is within his own power as a good or bad citizen.

Nor, let me add, does the bill create any disqualification except in the Territory of Utah. I say this in answer to some remark which intimated that the disqualifications were extra-territorial.

Mr. OATES. It is nothing more than a registration oath. It is no more than when a person refusing to take that registration oath in order to qualify him for the privilege of voting is denied the right to vote. So, here, the one who refuses, under the provisions of this bill, to submit to the registration oath by which he declares whether he is married or not is deprived of all right to vote in the Territory or to hold a place upon any jury.

Mr. TUCKER. That is all. It is a mere registration oath for the better execution of the provisions of this act, and for the suppression of these bigamous and polygamous relations in the presence of the community.

I have run rapidly through this matter, and I know not hardly what I have said.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question right here?

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether or not it is true that on the 4th of July last year the Mormons in Salt Lake City did not run up our flag at half-mast on every public building in that city.

Mr. TUCKER. I do not really know; and the House will bear me witness, Mr. Speaker, that in what I have said and so far as the reports made to the House have gone I have not indulged in any denunciation of these unfortunate people.

What I want is that this Government shall set its face forever against this immorality. [Loud applause.] I believe to-day that with the passage of this bill, which is not unjust to any of them; and with the passage of the constitutional amendment, which simply provides that the Territory when it comes in shall not go back on its record as an anti-polygamous Territory, and shall not "return as a dog to his vomit or a sow to her wallow in the mire;" and that this crime of polygamy shall be a constitutional crime, just as treason is a constitutional crime; and that the punishment for polygamy shall be prescribed by Congress as is the punishment for treason, and shall be tried by the Federal courts just as treason is tried; that this evil will be forever stamped out.

With that constitutional amendment adopted no Territory can come into the Union which permits polygamy, because it is forever inhibited by the paramount law of the land. With these two measures this Government will have set its face forever against this vile and wretched institution. I believe that the mind of the rising generation among the Mormons is giving way before the moral sense, even in their own breasts, which makes them feel that this polygamous relation is demoralizing and debasing to a community. I believe that if the Government of the United States sets its face against it, and passes the constitutional amendment and this bill, it will all go to pieces; that we will hear no more of these polygamous associations, or of this headship of a church, which has dominated the Territory of Utah, and would dominate the State when admitted; and that this Territory will be populated by a pure people, who will be ready to come into the Union in due time as a Christian State whose foundations are laid in the families of Christian homes. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have hurried through with what I had to say in regard to this matter. I feel a deep interest in the question, because, as I said a few weeks ago, I am going out of public life. If I can do anything to establish a pure system in that unfortunate Territory by uprooting this criminal institution of its society, which has been a foul blot upon the name and civilization of the whole country, and thus permit this Territory, when the proper time shall come, to enter into the pure sisterhood of States with the institution of a pure Christian home as the basis of its polity, then I shall feel that my humble public life has not been altogether in vain. [Prolonged applause.]

I demand the previous question upon the bill, the substitute, and amendments.

Mr. SCOTT. I would ask the gentleman from Virginia if he will not permit me to have an amendment read which I want to offer, and which he can not object to I am satisfied.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. SCOTT. I ask the privilege of having it read for the information of the House.

Mr. TUCKER. My good friend, will you allow me, as I have said to other good friends to-day, I have no objection to having it read, but what I want is to press this bill to a vote now and here. [Applause and cries of "Regular order!"]

Let the evening of the 12th of January be signalized by the passage of this bill. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SCOTT. May I not have this read for the information of the House? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia consent to have the proposed amendment read for information?

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, in deference to the wishes of the House I can not consent. I must insist upon the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia to section 27 of the bill, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 4 the word "and," and after the word "district" add the words "and municipal."

Also strike out all after the word "shall" in the fifth line, down to and including the word "office," in the sixth line, and insert in lieu thereof the word "hereafter;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 27. That all judges of the county and probate courts and selectmen of each county and Territory, and all clerks of said courts, justices of the peace, sheriffs, constables, and other Territorial, county, district, and municipal officers shall hereafter be appointed as follows, &c.;

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the adoption of the substitute reported by the committee as amended.

Mr. SCOTT. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, 8 members only voting in favor thereof.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed. [The result of the vote was greeted with loud applause].

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 6313) to release unto the city of San Antonio, Tex., for its use as a public thoroughfare certain portions of the military reservation near said city; and

A bill (H. R. 7192) to provide a school of instruction for cavalry and light artillery and for the construction and completion of quarters, barracks, and stables at certain posts for the use of the Army of the United States.

And then, on motion of Mr. HAMMOND (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 13, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

JAMES G. FAIR, a Senator from the State of Nevada, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, calling attention to the importance of correcting the unhealthful condition of the Treasury building, and inclosing several reports on the subject; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882, stating the amounts due Charles McCafferty and D. and C. P. Dull, contractors for locks on the Great Kanawha River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 12, 1887.

The Secretary of War has the honor to report to the United States Senate, in accordance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882, wherein he is directed to settle the claims of Charles McCafferty and of D. and C. P. Dull, contractors for locks on the Great Kanawha River, that he has examined the said "claims of Charles McCafferty and D. and C. P. Dull, contractors for locks numbered 4 and 5 on the Great Kanawha River, under contracts made in 1874 and 1875, and subsequently for work done by reason of changes in the contracts and for losses caused by such changes, and by extra work and other losses incurred from such and other causes beyond their control," and having heard their allegations, proofs, and arguments, and examined all evidence available and bearing on the questions submitted, he finds that by reason of changes in the contracts, for losses caused by such changes, for extra work, and for other losses from causes beyond their control, the amount due said contractors is as follows, namely:

D. and C. P. Dull	34,379 30

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore United States Senate.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from O. C. Marsh, president of the National Academy of Sciences, transmitting the report of the operations of the National Academy of Sciences for 1886; which, with the accompaning report, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petition of George S. Hawley, now at the Soldiers' Home, in Ohio, but formerly a good Vermont soldier, praying for an increase of his pension, accompanied by a certificate of the surgeon of that Soldiers' Home stating his present condition, and a paper containing the proceedings and the report of the committee in his case in the House of Representatives, at some former session.

I move that the petition, with the accompaning papers, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, presented the petition of George W. Quintard and George E. Weed, assignees of John Roach, deceased, praying that an appropriation be made for the payment of two balances of account due John Roach before his assignment, which account was approved by the Navy Department; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of citizens and agriculturists of New Salem, Franklin County, Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the so-called Hatch experiment-station bill for the development of agriculture; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of the State of Massachusetts, represented by its officers and containing a membership of 9,000, in favor of the Senate bill which grants to the people of the District of Columbia the right to vote upon the question of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in this District. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the members of the Peoria County Grange, of Peoria County, Illinois, in favor of the passage of the interstate-commerce bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the members of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, in favor of the passage of the interstate-commerce bill, and especially indorsing those sections in it relating to pooling and the long and short haul; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a petition of the California State Horticultural Society, praying for the passage of the so-called Hatch experiment-station bill for the development of agriculture; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COLQUITT presented a petition of the executive committee of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars of Montana Territory, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 1579) granting to the people of the District of Columbia the right to determine by ballot whether intoxicating liquors may hereafter be legally manufactured and sold in that District; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COLQUITT. I desire to call attention to the petition which I presented yesterday afternoon in favor of the passage of the interstate-commerce bill. It was published in the RECORD, but not read, as I did not wish to consume the time of the Senate. It appears as a petition of citizens of Georgia merely, without any names attached to it, stating that it was signed by numerous citizens. It is due to the gentlemen who sent me the petition, accompanied by a letter, that I should state that it is signed by citizens of Atlanta, Ga., and signed by the leading wholesale merchants as well as leading and influential citizens of that State, such men as L. E. Bleckley, R. D. Spalding, John Collier, Maddox Rucker & Co., Moore, Marsh & Co., M. C. & J. P. Kiser & Co., Chamberlin, John & Co., and others.

I make this remark so that the petition may be identified as their petition, and to show that I have executed their request.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Henrietta V. Minnix, of Washington, D. C., praying for a remission of taxes levied for special improvements; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of R. Shoemaker, of Philadelphia, Pa., the petition of Dr. Swayne & Son, of Philadelphia, Pa., the petition of George W. Plumley, of Philadelphia, Pa., and the petition of Henry K. Wampole & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for a reduction of internal-revenue taxes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BROWN presented a petition of a large number of citizens of Cedartown, in the State of Georgia, praying that the internal-revenue taxes may be reduced as rapidly as the condition of the Treasury will allow; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, presented a petition of Mrs. Lydia M. Chase and others, members of the Arkansas State Women's Christian Temperance Union, praying for legislation for the adequate punishment of crimes against women and girls in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McPHERSON presented a resolution adopted by the city council of Passaic, N. J., urging the passage of a bill to appropriate the surplus revenue toward building a navy in all respects second to none of the great navies of Europe, and the construction of a system of coast defenses to protect us from foreign fleets in case of war; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of manufacturers and dealers in drugs, essential oils, &c., of New York city and Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for a reduction of internal-revenue taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Doolittle & Smith, wholesale druggists, of Boston, Mass., praying for a reduction of internal-revenue taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2928) making an appropriation for the erection of a monument to the negro soldiers and sailors who gave their lives for the preservation of the Government, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3128) concerning post-offices of the third class; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9859) to amend sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes, and making Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, a port of entry in place of Middletown, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report favorably an amendment intended to be proposed to the post-office appropriation bill providing for the expenditure of $400,000 to carry our mails between the United States and Brazil and Central and South America. I move that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2944) making appropriation for the jetties in Charleston Harbor, to report it with an amendment.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Commerce propose to amend the bill, in line 3, before the word "hundred," by striking out "five" and inserting "three;" so as to read:

That the sum of $300,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to expedite the completion of the jetties in Charleston Harbor, said sum to be made available immediately on the passage of this act.

Mr. HAMPTON. May I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of that bill? It is a matter of great consequence that it should be considered now and go to the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must object to that, although I am in favor of doing everything necessary for those jetties. The subject properly belongs in the river and harbor bill, and I want to see how much provision was made in the last appropriation bill for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the request of the Senator from South Carolina can not be complied with.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the improvement of Charleston Harbor, which refers to the bill I just reported from the Committee on Commerce, may be printed for the use of the Senate and lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the order to print the communication as a document will be made.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Railroads, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 72) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7648) for the relief of the estate of the late John How, Indian agent, and his sureties, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 331) for the relief of George W. Ira, M. D., of Nebraska, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 898) for the relief of the estate of Joel C. Frazier, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN. At the request of several of the delegates from the five civilized tribes, I introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 3129) to authorize Indians of the Cherokee, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek, and Seminole tribes of Indians to bring suits in certain courts of the United States relating to the condemnation of their property for public uses, was read by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 3130) for the erection of a public building in Paterson, N. J.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (S. 3131) granting a pension to Hugh Rogers; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I will state in this connection that the bill is introduced on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions that a special act be passed in this case. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3132) for the relief of Reaney, Son & Archbold; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3133) to provide for the appointment of commissioners to represent the Federal Government in the Constitutional Centennial Commission, and to authorize them to take part in carrying out the programme arranged for the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the framing and promulgation of the Constitution of the United States of America, to be held at Philadelphia on the 15th, 16th, and 17th days of September, A. D. 1887; for the publication of public archives and other documents; and making an appropriation for the same and other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 94) ordering the printing of the annual report of the National Academy of Sciences, with the accompanying memoirs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION OF LAKE CHAMPLAIN.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer a resolution of which I ask the present consideration.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Light-House Board be, and it hereby is, directed to report to the Senate what information may be in its possession concerning the amount of commerce through that part of Lake Champlain lying between the islands of North Hero and South Hero, and of the necessity or convenience to that commerce of lighting the channel there, together with an estimate of the expense of a suitable structure or structures for that purpose.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer another resolution touching that same channel, directed to the Secretary of War, for which I ask present consideration.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to the Senate any information in his possession touching the condition of the channel in that part of Lake Champlain which lies between the islands of North and South Hero, together with an estimate of the expense necessary to a suitable deepening of the said channel for the purpose of more convenient navigation of said lake and of properly marking the same with buoys.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MISSOURI RIVER COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 200 extra copies of the Appendix A B to the report of the Missouri River Commission, House Executive Document No. 28, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, be printed for the use of the commission.

CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS BY FEDERAL OFFICIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], which comes over under objection. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of the Treasury furnish to this body a full and complete statement, by itemized account, of all money paid out for or on account, directly or indirectly, of prosecutions of criminal causes in State courts by Federal officials of the Department of Justice, Department of the Interior, and the Secret Service Bureau of the Treasury Department, from the 1st day of July, 1879, to the 1st day of December, 1886, together with a list of all such officials or agents or employés engaged in such prosecutions, and the amount each received and for what specific services it was paid, and to state by what authority of law such proceedings have been carried on and payments made, and what pecuniary interest or vested rights the United States had connected with such prosecutions in said State courts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is evident on the face of that resolution that it calls for information the publication of which in some respects—not in all by any means, but in some respects—might be extremely injurious to public interests in respect of the detective service of the United States and other points that I might mention. I therefore think it wiser for the public interest that it should be referred to a committee in order that they may ascertain from the Treasury Department or otherwise what is the state of the thing and whether all of this information, or how much of it if not all, may be communicated with safety to the public interest.

I therefore move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VEST. The objection made by the Senator from Vermont can be fully met by simply inserting "if not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. EDMUNDS. We never address a Secretary in that way.

Mr. VEST. There is no reason why we should not. If we choose to put the matter within the discretion of the Secretary, we can do so, as a matter of course.

I have no partisan or personal object in offering the resolution. It will be seen by reading it that it covers several years of the administration of the last Republican President and two years of the present administration. If irregularities and violations of law have been committed by either administration it ought to be known.

The immediate cause of my offering the resolution is found in a publication in the Saint Louis Republican of January 9, which is as follows:

WASHINGTON, January 9.—[Special.]—District-Attorney Bliss has brought suit in the Court of Claims to recover from the United States $3,175, on account of deductions from his fee bills made by the First Comptroller. Of this amount $675 is on account of disallowances by the present Comptroller, but the remainder, $2,500, covers a deduction from one of his accounts by the last Republican Comptroller, Judge Lawrence. It seems a couple of suits in equity were brought against the Missouri Pacific Railway Company to recover certain taxes which accrued in 1862-'63 against the old Missouri Pacific, but were never collected. A compromise of the litigation was ultimately arranged under which an allowance of $2,500 for attorneys' fees was made. Mr. Bliss did not regard this as an official fee for which he should account to the Government, and made no report of it in any of his settlements. Comptroller Lawrence took a different view, and deducted the amount from one of the fee accounts subsequently submitted by Mr. Bliss. The suit in the Court of Claims has been brought to establish the right of Bliss to the money in this instance, as well as in the cases where Comptroller Durham has refused to allow per diem for constructive presence in court in Saint Louis, when other accounts show Bliss was actually absent in some other district, acting as special Government counsel.

When Mr. Bliss was here the other day, he filed, and had allowed on December 29, a bill for $870 in full for all services rendered up to October 31, 1886, in the Lindsay land-fraud cases. Since the beginning of the current fiscal year, Mr. Bliss has presented three bills for services. The first of these reached the Comptroller on September 28, and was for an aggregate amount of $924 for services as special counsel in prosecuting the Brazilian forgery cases, but $616 of the account was suspended, for the reason that it covered services during the fiscal year 1885-'86, for which the appropriation made by Congress had been exhausted. His per diem for twenty-two days during that fiscal year was therefore suspended, and will not be examined until after a deficiency appropriation is passed by Congress.

On October 12 he filed another account for an aggregate sum of $487.50, covering his regular services as district attorney, and of this amount the Comptroller allowed $225. There was one disallowance of $45, covering per diem for presence in court, on nine days on which the previous account for his presence in other districts as special counsel in the Brazilian forgery cases showed he could not have been in Saint Louis. The Comptroller also held up $205 of the account, covering per diem for forty-one days, pending a statement by Mr. Bliss showing whether he was actually in attendance on each day charged for, or represented by his salaried assistant, or all or some of the dates in question. It will be seen that the old trouble between Mr. Bliss and the Comptroller will come up again when his final settlement is made.

This article shows that there are many cases which are now, if not in litigation, under discussion in the Department for services claimed to have been rendered by district attorneys as representing the United States in State courts. The Comptroller, in my judgment very properly, refuses to allow them. If there is any law which authorizes the Department of Justice to send United States district attorneys into State courts to attend to litigation where the United States is not a party, I do not know of it.

As to this Pacific Railway case, I am not pretending to enter into the merits of the controversy between Mr. Bliss and the Government or the Department of Justice; but the point I make is that it is very obvious Mr. Bliss thinks he had a contract with the Department of Justice to attend to the Pacific Railway suit. The record shows that the Government had nothing to do with the suit. If there was any subtle or mysterious connection between the Government and the railway company in that litigation Congress ought to know it.

There is no law, I repeat, on the statute books which authorizes the employment of special counsel in such cases.

I do not care whether it hits Democrat or Republican. The resolution covers two years of the present Administration, and if the present Attorney-General has engaged in this practice I want it known. It is a violation of law, in my judgment as a lawyer. If there has been this peculiar sort of litigation by the United States, and I do not know how, to appear in a State court or to be involved in litigation in a State court requiring the presence of its district attorney to defend its interests, I should like to know it.

The present Comptroller, Mr. Durham, refuses to allow these accounts. His predecessor, Judge Lawrence, refused to allow them.

As I said before, without going into the merits of the controversy as a matter of contract, I simply, as a public man discharging my duty, want to know under what law that contract or assumed contract was made.

I have no objection to striking out that portion of the resolution in regard to the secret service. I put it in because I supposed there might be cases that it would be claimed originated in the secret service, but I am willing to modify the resolution in that respect.

There is no necessity in my judgment for referring the resolution to a committee. It is a resolution of inquiry calling for facts. If it goes to a committee they will simply inquire as to whether an inquiry is necessary, and how they could ever arrive at a conclusion without the facts it is impossible for me to imagine.

I hope, therefore, that it will not be referred, and I call for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I second the demand for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question of reference the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, I wish to say a word.

So far as the resolution relates, if it relates at all, to getting information in regard to any contract, or supposed contract, or pretended contract of any official of the Government of the United States in regard to the prosecution or defense of any civil suit in a State court, or in a United States court, or a Territorial court, or a foreign court, or anywhere else, I have not the slightest objection. But the resolution is not that. It is a resolution which, if answered, or which, if the Secretary were allowed to answer in the terms in which it stands, might expose to death a great many people who have given information to the officers of this Government in the discharge of their duty and have been paid for it, concerning the commission of crimes, &c.

I received the other day a letter from a citizen of Missouri (certainly a resident, I have no doubt a citizen) on this very subject, evidently, although he did not state the circumstances with sufficient clearness to enable me to understand it; but it was on the subject of the state of the law concerning the right of district attorneys of the United States to appear and defend the interests of the United States in State courts and to be paid for so doing. I replied to him, as I endeavor to do to every letter that is decent in its terms addressed to me, either personally or as chairman of a committee, that if he would furnish me with sufficient information to understand what he meant I would endeavor to have it investigated and acted upon. I have received no reply.

So it is quite unnecessary for the Senator from Missouri to suggest that his resolution is not a partisan one. I do not think any proper resolution of inquiry can be a partisan one in the just sense. I have always favored every resolution of inquiry that was proper in its nature, addressed in the times when the Democrats had possession of the Senate and were overhauling everything going on in the Departments, that the necessity of the case did not require should not be made absolutely public. So I do not take the resolution in the sense of having any party idea to hunt out the misdoings of a Republican official or a Democratic official. I only treat it fairly on its face as being a resolution commanding the return of information to the Senate a very considerable part of which might be not only disastrous to the public interests, if made public, but also expose to great personal danger many persons. The Judiciary Committee, if the matter is sent to them, will endeavor to do their duty by it.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I received a copy of this resolution, or perhaps I should more properly say a resolution identical in terms with this, from a citizen of another State than my own some weeks ago, requesting me to introduce it in the Senate. Knowing nothing about the matter I replied that I should be unwilling to do so unless further advised as to the necessity for the inquiry which was proposed. To that letter I received an answer divulging the motive of the writer in asking for the investigation, which enables me to state that although the incentive is not a partisan one, it is, as I understand, distinctively a personal one, having for its object not perhaps the prosecution of a political purpose, but it may be for the purpose perhaps of redressing a fancied personal grievance.

So far as the particular case to which the Senator from Missouri has referred in the newspaper extract that he has read is concerned, if there has been anything in that which requires investigation in the opinion of that Senator I am willing to vote for the adoption of a resolution that shall put the inquiry on foot. Whether that is the particular instance which led to the presentation of this resolution I am not prepared to say, neither am I at this time prepared to deny; but in any event the exhibition which has been made by the Senator from Missouri of the particular instance that appears in his judgment to require investigation, clearly shows either that the resolution should be modified or else it should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for further examination.

The Senator from Missouri suggests that the difficulty might be avoided by adding the words "if not incompatible with the public interest." Who ever heard of a resolution addressed by the Senate to a head of a Department asking him to communicate information in his possession "if not incompatible with the public interest?" Who ever confided to one of those officers such discretion as that? Those terms are only employed when addressing the President of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And touching foreign relations.

Mr. INGALLS. And touching, as I understand, relations between other governments and our own. I should be unwilling at this time to establish a precedent which would justify us hereafter in leaving to the discretion of one of the heads of the Departments which we have created the authority either to withhold or transmit information as he saw fit.

I hope, inasmuch as the Senator has seen fit to reinforce this resolution by a specific instance of the wrong which has been done, that he will think best either to limit the inquiry to that particular case or to allow the resolution to go to the Committee on the Judiciary for the purpose of ascertaining how far the inquiry should proceed. We either ought to have that particular evidence or we ought to have such of the evidence as can be communicated without injury to the public welfare, and a committee of this body is better qualified to judge whether this whole mass of evidence ought to be submitted than the head of the Department to which it is addressed.

Inasmuch as this inquiry would cover, as the Senator from Missouri says, half of an administration that was Republican and half of one that was Democratic, and inasmuch as this evidence is now in the possession of an officer in sympathy with him, I am not sure but that he might possibly conceive it to be not wholly compatible with the public interest to disclose anything that would be damaging to the party in power, while he might think it would be compatible with the public interest to communicate anything that would be detrimental to the one that has been displaced. I do not say that would be the case, but it is among the possibilities that if there could be any partisan aspect given to this inquiry under the present administration, compatibility with the public interest might be held to apply exclusively to objectionable practices under a Republican administration, and not under one that was Democratic.

Mr. VEST. We have heard from time to time in a very aggressive, not to say sneering, manner that "this reform administration" proposed to do so and so. It is a remarkable fact that whenever an attempt is made to find out whether there is any difference between former administrations and this reform administration, all sorts of technical objections are intervened at once in order to prevent inquiry.

In order to show that all I ask in this case is a simple exhibit of the facts as they exist upon the records of the Department, I am willing to meet the views of the Senator from Vermont and his objections, technical or hyper-technical as they may be, and to strike out all that portion of the resolution which refers to the secret-service department of the Government.

I also meet now the view or objection of the Senator from Kansas by withdrawing any suggestion as to the words "if compatible with the public interest," and leave this simply an inquiry as to the actual employment of assistant counsel by the Department of Justice to attend to litigation in the State courts where the United States is pretended to have been interested, but where the United States does not appear upon the record.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would not "alleged" do as well as "pretended"?

Mr. VEST. If the Senator wants to make an amendment to my remarks, I accept it with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was proposing an amendment to the Senator's resolution.

Mr. VEST. I was using certain forms of expression in regard to what I understand the resolution to mean. My object is simply to know whether there has been an infraction of the law by the Department of Justice, whether under Republican or Democratic administration, whether the money of the people has been taken without any legal authority for it to send special counsel who were then salaried officers of the United States into the State courts, and where, in my judgment, they had no legal authority to be.

In regard to what has fallen from the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Vermont with reference to a letter, I have simply to say that I have received several letters from the same source, and I declined to act upon them because I suspected there might be some personal feeling at the bottom of the suggested action from that party. But when in a reputable newspaper, one of the leading journals of the Mississippi Valley, I see this statement with amounts and dates and specifications, and when calling at the Treasury Department I find that not only this account of Mr. Bliss (for I disclaim any personal attack upon Mr. Bliss) but accounts of other district attorneys are pending there now to the amount of thousands upon thousands of dollars for services in the State courts while they were receiving salaries from the Government, in my judgment, I should be derelict in my duty if I did not attempt to bring the facts before the Congress of the United States.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to refer the resolution. There is no necessity for referring it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the Senator from Missouri to modify his resolution.

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read, as we are to vote on it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He can not modify it now, the yeas and nays having been ordered; but I shall withdraw my motion to refer if the Senator from Missouri will put into form the substance of what he has last stated, because, as far as he goes about the mere employment alleged to be illegal of anybody to serve the United States in a public matter, I do not object to all the information there is in the world being got.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri modified his resolution before the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read as modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of the Treasury furnish to this body a full and complete statement, by itemized account, of all money paid out for or on account, directly or indirectly, of prosecutions of criminal causes in State courts by Federal officials of the Department of Justice and Department of the Interior, from the 1st day of July, 1879, to the 1st day of December, 1886, together with a list of all such officials or agents or employés engaged in such prosecutions, and the amount each received, and for what specific services it was paid, and to state by what authority of law such proceedings have been carried on and payments made, and what pecuniary interest or vested rights the United States had connected with such prosecutions in said State courts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. While I am looking at this modification, I wish to say that it is not nearly so clear to my mind as it appears to be to that of my friend from Missouri, that the Attorney-General of the United States, or the head of any Department who is authorized to make use of the service of district attorneys in defending the interests of the United States, is limited by law to cases that exist in the Federal courts. Cases frequently arise, and have from the foundation of the Government, in the State courts, where as to our foreign relations the honor and the interest and the safety of the United States demand that its legal representatives, its counsel, its district attorneys, its Attorney-General, should appear in the State court to defend that action or prosecution in order to preserve what the honor and the duty of the United States may require in such cases. That occasionally happens.

The same is true in respect of cases where officers of the United States are sued in State courts for things that they have done in the performance of their duty. If these officers have done those things in the performance of their duty, they are entitled to be defended by the United States, of course; and in order to be defended there are two ways that are open to them by law—either to employ counsel themselves, or to report the case to the proper Department and have the proper Department undertake to defend, which is better, because then you know you are going to have a good defense and one that is not a sham. If that case is in the State court and the Department chooses to take up the defense it can do so. It must go into the State court in the first instance, and having gone there it has two courses to pursue. It can ask to have the case removed under the removal statute, or if it believes the State court will try it rightly, wisely, and fairly, then and there, it may go on then and there.

So, then, although it has nothing to do with the present question of getting information, to which I have not the least objection, I am not at all clear that there may not be a case—I do not know whether this is one or not—where it is not only proper and necessary but legal that the counsel for the United States, whether district attorney or special counsel or whatever, may be sent to represent the United States or some of its Departments in the courts of a State.

Mr. VEST. I acknowledge to some extent the statement of the Senator that a defense of the interests of the United State requires that Government officials, district attorneys and others, shall defend parties who are acting for the Government, although that fact does not appear of record. That would be a case exactly pertinent; but this case was not that sort of a litigation. Nothing of that sort was involved. Judge Lawrence refused to pay a district attorney $500 and other fees because the district attorney at the same time was drawing salary and per diem for constructive attendance on court. That was not the case of a receiver or any quasi-officer of the United States, but it was a case in which the parties went to the State courts and attended to litigation there, and then charged a special fee for it, and drew their salaries at the same time as district attorneys.

I would suggest that the resolution be amended so as to cover both civil and criminal cases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand that the case referred to was a civil cause, something about taxes, and I was just about to call attention to that point.

As the resolution is modified it is still so broad that it would call for an account of any money paid for secret service in any criminal prosecution. The Senator does not mean that; he means to ask as to money paid to officers of the United States, and therefore I suggest to him, after the word "indirectly," at the end of line 3, to insert "by officers of the United States," and then in the next line insert "civil," so as to read:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of the Treasury furnish to this body a full and complete statement, by itemized account, of all money paid out for or on account, directly or indirectly, to officers of the United States in the prosecution of civil or criminal causes in State courts by Federal officials, &c.

In that way I have no objection if the Senator desires the passage of the resolution.

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified, and the call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn, as also the motion to refer. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

M. C. MORDECAI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the morning business is closed.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the interstate-commerce bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. GRAY. Before that report is taken up, I ask the consent of the Senator from Illinois to call up a bill on the Calendar which I do not think will lead to any discussion whatever.

Mr. CULLOM. If the bill involves no discussion, I have no objection to yielding; but I am very anxious that the consideration of the interstate-commerce bill shall be proceeded with to-day without interruption. I yield to the Senator from Delaware, with the understanding that there will be no debate on his bill.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Illinois can reserve his right, if the bill leads to debate, to call for the regular order.

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to allow the bill to be taken up, with the reservation that I shall call for the regular order if the bill leads to discussion.

Mr. GRAY. I ask consent to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1619, being the bill (S. 933).

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 933) for the relief of M. C. Mordecai. It provides for the payment to M. C. Mordecai, or his legal representatives, of $37,991.95, in full compensation for all services rendered in carrying the United States mail in the steamer Isabel, or any other steamer, from Charleston, S. C., to Havana, Cuba, via Savannah, Ga., and Key West, Fla., from the 1st of October, 1859, to the 20th of July, 1860.

Mr. GRAY. I ask for the reading of the report, which explains the case.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. GRAY June 30, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred Senate bill 933, having examined the same, submit the following report:

At the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads made a report in this case, which this committee adopts, and is as follows:

"That in the year 1848 M. C. Mordecai and others were the owners of the steamer Isabel, a steamship built with reference to and for the purpose of carrying the United States mails from Charleston, S. C., via Savannah, Ga., and Key West, Fla., to Havana, in the Island of Cuba; that from 1848 to 1859 the said M. C. Mordecai, under a contract with the Postmaster-General and by authority of Congress carried said mails to and from the above-named points for the contract price of $50,000 per annum, except for the last five years of said term, for which they were paid $60,000 per annum; that prior to the expiration of said contract, to wit, March, 1859, provision was made, as in former years, in the Post-office appropriation bill, for a renewal of contract, but the entire bill failed to pass both Houses, and Congress adjourned without making any provisions whatever for the support of the mail service of the country.

"At the expiration of his contract, June 30, 1859, M. C. Mordecai ceased carrying said mails, because of the failure of the passage of the usual appropriation for its support.

"After the lapse of three months, namely, on October 1, 1859, at the earnest solicitation of the public, through petitions and appeals from the boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and merchants of all the principal Atlantic seaports, said M. C. Mordecai was induced, with the knowledge and consent of the Post-Office Department, to resume the carrying of said mails, intending, as stated in the memorial before your committee, to look to the subsequent action of Congress for compensation, the Postmaster-General not being authorized to contract for any compensation further than the ocean and inland postages, which were entirely inadequate to compensate for the service rendered.

"The evidence is abundant that the mails were carried regularly on said steamer twice a month, from October 1, 1859, to July 20, 1860, for which no compensation of any kind was received from any source.

"In the Post-Office deficiency bill of 1860 provision was made by the House for a renewal of the former contract, and also for compensation for the service performed as aforesaid without contract. This latter provision passed the House on a test vote by 115 to 60. In the Senate the entire paragraph was stricken out, and the Postmaster-General authorized to advertise in the usual manner and let the contract to the lowest bidder. This was done, and the petitioner was again awarded the contract, at $40,000 per annum for the service from Charleston to Key West, and the ocean and inland postages for that part from Key West to Havana. By the alterations thus made in the Senate, provision for the service from October 1, 1859, to July 20, 1860, was omitted, but at the next ensuing session of Congress a bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads allowing the petitioner compensation for said service at the rate of the last contract. On account of the disturbed condition of the country at that time, this bill never received consideration at the hands of Congress, and the petitioner, notwithstanding repeated efforts, has to this day received no sort of compensation for said service.

In view of all the evidence presented, it appears that the service upon this route had become a most important branch of the mail service of the country, and the petitioner exhibited great liberality and contributed largely to the public convenience by yielding to the solicitations of the public and continuing the service in all its efficiency as had been done when under contract, and your committee are of the opinion that he is equitably and properly entitled to receive compensation therefor at the rate at which the contract was renewed when let to the lowest bidder after public advertisement, namely, at the rate of $40,000 per annum for the service from Charleston to Key West, and the ocean and inland postages from Key West to Havana.

For nine months and twenty days, the period covered by said service, at the rate of $40,000 per annum, would amount to $32,222.22, and the postages from Key West to Havana, computed upon the basis of the succeeding contract, $5,769.73; total, $37,991.95.

Your committee therefore report the accompanying bill providing for the payment of the above-named amount, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY H. SIBLEY.

Mr. MAHONE. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Virginia asked me yesterday to yield, and I declined. He has a bill also that he says will take no time beyond a moment or two. I shall not object, with the reservation that if the matter he wishes to call up leads to discussion I shall insist on the regular order.

Mr. MAHONE. I move to take up Calendar No. 1624, being the bill (S. 909) for the relief of Henry H. Sibley.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, with the amendment of the Committee on Claims, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Court of Claims is hereby empowered to hear the claim of Henry H. Sibley, and to proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," and to report to Congress the facts in the case, and the amount of the claim, and the time when the claim or any parts thereof accrued, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of the statute of limitations should be removed, or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MAHONE. I move to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting what I send to the Chair. Since the bill was introduced the principal named in the bill is dead, and it is necessary to make an alteration. I offer this amendment with the approval of the Senator who reported the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the word "that," and insert:

The Court of Claims is authorized to adjudicate the claim of the legal personal representatives of Henry H. Sibley, deceased, growing out of a contract made by Henry H. Sibley in his lifetime with the Government of the United States for the use of a patented invention in the manufacture of a tent known as the Sibley tent; and that for this purpose the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction, notwithstanding any bar of the statute of limitations.

SEC. 2. That either party to any suit that may be brought under the provisions of this act shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from any final judgment the Court of Claims may render.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, the title was amended so as to read:

A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry H. Sibley.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 10) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2879) to authorize the service of civil and criminal process issued by Territorial courts within military and Indian reservations and the Yellowstone National Park;

A bill (H. R. 5577) to provide that a judgment in the circuit court of the United States, upon an interest coupon of a bond by a municipal corporation shall not be conclusive in a question on the bond when the amount gives jurisdiction to the Supreme Court on appeal; and

A bill (H. R. 10658) to change the lines between the eastern and western judicial districts of North Carolina.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 6313) to release unto the city of San Antonio, Tex., for its use as a public thoroughfare, certain portions of the military reservation near said city; and

A bill (H. R. 7192) to provide a school of instruction for cavalry and light artillery, and for the construction and completion of quarters, barracks, and stables at certain posts for the use of the Army of the United States.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. Now I insist on the regular order.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

Mr. CULLOM. The report has not yet been read to the Senate in full. If there are no further remarks to be made, I ask for the reading of the report, as I suppose that is necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the conference committee will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, which has been heretofore published in the RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate disagree to the report of the conference committee, insist upon its former action passing the original bill, and request a further conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts submits a motion, which will be read.

Mr. HOAR. The motion is in writing.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe, under the rule, the question must be on the motion to concur.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the Senate disagree to the report of the conference committee, insist upon its former action passing the bill, and request a further conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois, the Chair understands, has already made the motion that the Senate concur.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir. As I understand, I made the motion when I submitted the report. It is the standing motion and under the rule that would be the motion regularly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that both motions are in order. As to the order of precedence the Chair is not now prepared to determine before the question arises.

Mr. HOAR. I am not aware that the Senator from Illinois has made any motion as yet with regard to the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Illinois to move that the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference, at the very beginning.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that motion has precedence over any other motion, unless it may be to commit.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, without any motion the question pending upon a report of a committee of conference is, Will the Senate agree to the report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has already announced that he would consider the question.

Mr. HARRIS. Whether the Senator from Illinois made such motion or not, that was the question; no motion was necessary. When the Senate has acted on that question, if it disagrees, of course it will then be in order, if any Senator chooses to do so, to move that the Senate further insist and ask for a further conference; but the motion now in the form that the Senator from Massachusetts proposes it, is in the first branch of it simply to present the same question in another form as the question which is already pending before the Senate, "Will the Senate agree or disagree to this report?" When that question has first been decided, then it will be for the Senate to determine whether it will further insist and ask for a further conference, or recognize the fact that this action is the final defeat of the bill.

I desire to say upon that point, while I am on my feet, that from a two weeks' experience, almost daily, in that committee of conference, I am satisfied and absolutely confident that the disagreement on the part of the Senate to this report is the final defeat of legislation upon the subject during this Congress. I am absolutely confident that we can never more nearly approximate the views of the Senate with respect to this legislation by any subsequent or additional conference with the House than we have already done, and I desire that every Senator on this floor shall realize and recognize the fact that when he votes upon the question of agreeing or disagreeing to this report he is substantially and in effect voting upon the question as to whether we shall or shall not have legislation upon this question during this Congress, for such is, in my opinion, the inevitable effect of a disagreement to this report.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I suppose the mere method of putting this question is of trifling importance. Both these motions are motions that are in order—the motion to disagree, insist, and ask a further conference, and the motion to concur. I do not understand that the motion to concur or agree has been made, but undoubtedly whether it has been or not it can be, and if it be——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the principal officers at the desk, who are most likely to remember a matter of that kind, that when the report was first made there was a motion made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to agree to or concur in the report.

Mr. HOAR. That will depend on the Journal, of course. If it was made, it was journalized. If it was not journalized it was not made. But it is utterly unimportant. Undoubtedly at whatever time the motion to concur is made, whether made at the time of making the report or made at the time of putting the question, it will take precedence under the customs of the Senate of this motion of mine. The importance of this motion now is that the Senate may have before it what is proposed as the next step, supposing the motion to concur should fail. There are a great many motions, it is not necessary to say to the Chair, which may be pending at the same time, but which have a due order of preference in putting them. So there is no substantial difference between the Senator from Tennessee and myself.

I wish, however, to say one word, without addressing myself at this time to the general merits of the bill, in regard to the statement made by my honorable friend from Tennessee.

Here is a bill which embodies four great salutary propositions upon which the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the American people are substantially agreed. First, that the principle of the common law, which it has been held does not belong to the jurisprudence of the United States without special legislation, shall be extended to the common carriers of the country who are engaged in commerce among the States or with foreign nations. Second, that there shall be a commission who shall investigate, report, and to some extent direct the conduct of that business. Third, that hereafter the doctrine of reasonableness shall prevail by the authority of the statute of the United States between the carrier and the customer in fixing rates. Fourth, that there shall be no undue discrimination between persons or places or classes of business in the conduct of the great carrying trade of the country. And the committee having this bill in charge come in and hold over our heads a threat that no one of these things, so salutary and so desirable, shall be accomplished, but that we shall remain without legislation unless we shall consent also to ingraft on this bill what is a departure from the great doctrine of reasonableness, from the common law—to ingraft on it a principle against which the customers and not the railroads interested in great branches of the carrying trade are protesting on the ground that the inevitable effect of it will be to put up freights and to make large branches of business now carried on profitably and successfully impossible for the future.

Now, I appeal to the Senate not to submit to that kind of threat. It is not statesmanlike, it is not just, it is not in accordance with sound legislation that the Senate shall be told "you shall not accomplish what everybody wants and everybody believes just, unless you will submit also to regulations which are to cut up by the roots great departments of foreign commerce of this country."

I believe that a majority of the Senate can be made to see that the new provisions ingrafted on this bill are not only unjust and unwise, but that they are destructive of the object which the bill professes and which both Houses of Congress have at heart. I believe, while saying that, that there is an orderly, constitutional, legislative way to accomplish the good and to prevent the evil.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the remarks made by the Senator from Massachusetts provoke me to say what I have had in my mind to say for some days; and I will say it now.

The Senator said that he had no doubt that the effect of this legislation would be to increase freight rates. I have no doubt that will be the immediate effect of the passage of this bill, not because that is the legitimate result of the passage of this bill, but because the large interest in this country opposed to the passage of this bill will make that the occasion of unnecessarily and unjustly raising the rates in order to bring into disrepute before the people of this country the measure now before the Senate.

This measure, Mr. President, is not one that I would have proposed to the Senate if it had been left to me. I would have made the regulations much more stringent than they are. I would have left no loophole for controversy or debate about the meaning of any portion of this statute. But we must take this step or we must stand still upon this question. I am satisfied, from my observation and from conferences with members of this body and with members of the other House, that if this report be disagreed to on the part of the Senate, it means no legislation upon the subject during this session.

Mr. HOAR. Why?

Mr. GEORGE. Because I think that after a two weeks' work on the part of the conference committee, when concessions have been made, as I understand, by the conferees on the part of the House and on the part of the Senate—extreme concessions made on either side for the purpose of coming to an agreement—if this reasonable bill, this reasonable report, fair to the railroads, much fairer to them than it is to the people of this country, is rejected, no further concessions can be gotten.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question in that connection?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator mean to say that if a majority of the Senate are of opinion that this long and short haul clause is unjust—will raise rates, as he admits, not only temporarily, but permanently, and will defeat the purpose of the bill—there is any legislator that he knows of who will refuse to pass all the other excellent legislation which he also approves of in the bill because other Senators differ with him on that question?

Mr. GEORGE. In answer to that question I can say that there is a feeling, there is a sentiment, there is a suspicion, if I may use the term, that this bill or that all legislation on this subject is to be defeated by dilatory motions. I do not know how far that goes; I do not say that I entertain that suspicion myself; I do not, because I accord to every member of this body the same honesty and integrity of purpose that I claim for myself; but I do think, after the exposition made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], which I understand is concurred in by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], that any further attempt to postpone action in this matter will result in nonaction.

While I am up, Mr. President, I will supplement a little the idea which I first advanced. I believe it will be the policy of the railroad companies of this country as soon as this bill is passed, by all sorts of tricks and maneuvers, to make arrangements, to make rates which are unreasonable and unjust, and charge them to this bill.

I am not without precedent for a statement of that sort. I have had some observation in my own State which authorizes me to say, as I now do say, that every effort, every device, every trick will be resorted to on the part of the railroad companies for the purpose of bringing into disrepute legislation on this subject. And so, Mr. President, I do hope that every member of this body who is really in earnest about having a bill passed on this subject will vote to agree with the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the pending motion that the Senate disagree to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York will pause a moment. The Chair will state that upon a reference to the Journal and also to the RECORD, it does not appear that the Senator from Illinois did make the motion to agree to the report, and therefore no motion is pending except the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], on which the Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will yield a moment, I desire to state that my impression was that I made a motion to concur, but I was not sure about it, thinking that motion followed as a matter of course, that that was the regular motion to be put under the rules.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw my motion to let the Senator make his.

Mr. CULLOM. I will make the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, both motions may be presented.

Mr. HOAR. I will withdraw my motion and let the Senator make his, and then renew mine. It was not for the sake of having mine put first, because I do not understand that it is entitled to be put first if I make it, but only that it might be before the Senate so as to present a contrast between the two policies.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator is right in saying that the motion to concur has preference, and I make the motion now that the Senate concur in the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly, under the rules and parliamentary law, either motion is a proper motion, but the parliamentary rule requires that the motion to concur shall be first put.

Mr. HOAR. I so understand it, and I therefore will treat my motion as subsidiary, but it is pending.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, what was the question before any motion was made on the subject?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question was on the motion to print, which, having been adopted, left the conference report before the Senate without any motion based on it.

Mr. HARRIS. And what was the question, if no motion had been made, that the Chair would have put to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very likely the Chair would have put the question on agreeing to the report; but still a motion to disagree to the report is just as much in order as a motion to agree. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. FRYE. One moment, if the Senator pleases. I give notice that I shall offer a motion to recommit this bill with instructions, and if a point of order is made against that, and the Presiding Officer rules as the Senate ruled in a former case, that it is not in order (which I do not believe), I then shall make the motion to recommit, and let the instructions follow. As I understand it, either motion, if in order, will take precedence of the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will decide such questions as they arise.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, if no other Senator proposes at this moment to engage the attention of the Senate, I will venture to present some views that seem to me of importance. And yet a careful attention to the debate, as I have heard it, and to the record of the speeches, which I have not heard, but which I have perused, might restrain me from thinking that I could address any considerations of that kind to the Senate; but my constituents, composing the largest State in population and in wealth, and embracing all that belongs to foreign commerce, domestic manufacture, long reach of communication, and complete and intimate arrangements for domestic intercourse, it can not but be supposed that that great community feels an interest in this bill, and desires that whatever shall be the fate of the bill, its opinions and its views may have been presented to the Senate and understood by it.

As the matter as I shall present it will involve some examination of constitutional and of legal views, I can not expect to make it interesting; but I shall endeavor to dwell at each step in the progress of such argument, if I may so call it, as I shall make so as to bring us promptly, at least so far as I am concerned, to the determination of the question before us.

In the first place, Mr. President, this is a question really of the interest of commerce. It is generally spoken of as a measure of interstate commerce, and I had thought probably the title was confined to that; but wisely and circumspectly, even in the title of the bill, that confinement has not been practiced. It is, and is properly, described in the title as "A bill to regulate commerce." It does regulate commerce among the States, but it does also regulate commerce toward foreign nations; and thus, if we reject the single clause that introduces relations with the Indian tribes, as immaterial certainly to this discussion and immaterial in general compared with the other immense topics, this measure deals with the entire power of the Government of the United States over commerce.

Whatever the effect of this bill as properly construed and as reasonably applied shall be upon commerce, it is the exercise of a power lodged in this Government, solely on the motive of commerce, not upon any other motive, not upon any other consideration than what either directly or by converting influence touches the regulation of commerce. In the arrangements of the Constitution, in the purposes, in the feelings, in the independence, in the attributes, in the essential construction which went to make these great governmental arrangements for common interests, commerce was not only the motive urging most strongly the establishment of the Union, but it was only a commerce that after it was established and committed to a general government was to be a commerce impossible, if human wisdom could prevent it, of disparity among the States themselves or between the States in their relations to the external world.

And now let me say that this power of this Government, and this bill, and all these topics of debate, have no relation to railroads except just so far as they come within the application of the principle and sole constitutional right of dealing with commerce. Punishment or disparagement, favor, patronage, development are not within the province of this power when applied to railroads. They are not subject on these considerations of police and of government that are brought within the comprehension of the legislation of Congress. They are vehicles of commerce. Like ships, they are vehicles of commerce. Like arrangements for conveyance that have been noted in judicial decisions, this power as to commerce may have to deal with these more intimate and more subtle arrangements as affecting trade, but all of them are included in the right and the duty and the purpose of dealing with commerce. Nor, Mr. President, has the power of this Government the right or the duty of distributing population and either furthering or resisting operations that tend in that direction and with that effect. It is not to say whether this town, this village, this seaport, in the spread of population and the vastness of man's dominion over the power of nature, shall change the natural map so that no longer as nature made them are the points of favor and the points to be avoided still to be kept upon the map. What has happened has happened; what is to happen will happen; and if there is any line that is drawn between the powers of the Federal Government and the powers of the States it is this, that the domestic arrangements are to depend upon the determination of the State authority, and that this Government is neither a party nor is it a wisher in regard to the results and consequences that come out of the development of commerce or the changes of its methods except that this Government deals with this very subject itself of commerce in the interest of commerce.

The power of our Government, as I have already intimated, was not intended to be uncontrolled in the fundamental provisions of the Constitution. We are, then, to look at those arrangements in the light of the situation and the rights as they existed in the States before the General Government was contemplated and framed—how much they wished to forego of their independence in regard to the common interests, and how much they desired to deposit and how much to withhold; how much to withhold for the exercise of State authority; how much to withhold from both State and Federal; for what was the general freedom and equality on which the whole project rested and gave its motive, its frame, its shape, its credit, with the answering support of the various members of the Union.

We have been in the habit of saying as to foreign commerce, as it was all external—external to every part of the Union—that branch of commerce might not need to be restrained, and that after its deposit the motive or the opportunity of departure from the general and universal law, of equal advantage to all in foreign commerce, would regulate itself. But the framers of this Government were not indifferent, unconcerned, or uncircumspect in their dominion over that topic before they parted with it in the acceptance of the Constitution. I recall, and in very brief terms—for all that relates to it is in very brief terms—the instructive clause upon the power of this Government in regulating foreign commerce. It is provided, in limitation of the power of this Government—

> No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.
> No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another; nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another.

You will observe that this was the controlling idea working in the minds of the framers of the Constitution and its acceptance by the States—that nothing should come or could come in the power of this Government that would make discrimination among the States or among their interests, but that all was to be operated, not only in the sense of the general good and by the general power that this Government was endowed with, so that it should be impossible to become partial and discriminating among the States themselves.

We then have in a most important particular, indeed in several most important particulars, these limitations on foreign commerce and its regulation, and all tending to equality and freedom in the commerce of the people of these United States. I speak of the population of the United States—the population of all of the States—of the whole; but all of them also separately; populations, in the most important views, of individual States.

When we come to the dealing with commerce among the States, that single phrase "among the States" is all contained in the Constitution that in specific terms and by direct interpretation and acceptation relates to that subject. Was it then so important that foreign trade, the trade of our whole people ab extra, with the world outside, was to be controlled so that no discrimination should be made at home in reference to that foreign trade; and yet that this deposit of authority respecting trade among the States was unlimited with the General Government to burden it, to impede it, to derange it, to destroy it, at its will? The power to tax, as the great Chief-Justice has said, is the power to destroy; and is it true that this Government of ours is unguarded in the maintenance of equality among the States in trade, and in its freedom, by any principle or any postulate if there be wanting particular clauses of authority to govern this?

Why, Mr. President, the power to regulate commerce between the States was to regulate the commerce between the States that was assumed to be and to continue forever equal and free; and the deposit of this power in the General Government was to see to it by its supervision and its imposing authority that no regulation in the special interest of any State by the power of this Government could break that absolute unity and freedom. Did you need to put into the Constitution clauses that we should not establish custom-houses between the States, that we could not make a difference between the transit from remote States to the seaboard and near States to the ports of exportation? Was that needed to protect these people of the United States against such intervention as I have indicated; and if this bill is to have that effect is it constitutional?

Generalities have their value, even if the purpose and the result is not carried out in detail and expressed in firm stipulation. In the view that I shall take of the objectionable clauses of this bill I shall denounce them as unconstitutional and utterly inconsistent with the very basis upon which this constitution of power lodged in the Federal Government on the subject of commerce was arranged and deposited.

Let me read—never too frequently to be read when matters of interest relative to great and valuable pursuits of our people come under consideration—the preamble of the Constitution:

> We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity.

I omit the following clauses as immaterial, now present as an undisputed and indisputable purpose that freedom and equality and justice should be the base in all internal arrangement of every kind, not to the States as States, but to the people of the different States and the people of all the United States as in one country in their internal regulations of commerce.

And now I shall venture to suggest, and I hope I shall support it by pertinent argument, that the effect of this bill as it is to be treated, has rather a tendency to resort to a less perfect union, to disestablish justice, and to insure domestic discord. If that be true, are we to regard under the light of what is the historical and what is to be called the invincible view and opinion of all of us, that in dealing with commerce—commerce abroad, commerce among the States—everything is to be under the guardianship of this General Government, that private interests and discord shall not interfere with it, and that the right and the duty and the power of the Federal Government shall all be toward the establishment, maintenance, and execution of better union, justice, and domestic tranquillity.

What has been the record of the Supreme Court of the United States in its disposition of the manifold and not infrequent occasions in which the subject-matter of commerce among the States has come up for judicial interpretation and enforcement? I challenge, I think without risk, attention to this proposition, that every act judicially enforced under all the agitations and discussions respecting interstate commerce or commerce among the States has been to remove impediments and to insist upon absolute equality. The court has proceeded in the direction of disallowing State legislation further and further; but even when there was an allowance of any State legislation affecting commerce among the States, it was allowed solely on the ground that it was a mere advancement, support, protection of the necessary means of reaching the State commerce. But I will not delay upon any statement of this judicial interpretation, for we have now immediately before us the last conclusion of that court upon this subject; and I would not draw attention to the brief extract which I shall venture to present did not this judicial interpretation touch not only general principles but the very language almost, certainly of the very tendency and of the very extent of this legislation in these obnoxious clauses that we are to proceed upon and dispose of.

What was the question before the Supreme Court in its last decision? At the outset I will state that what Illinois did was in its nature, in its effect, in its amplification, in its office, or if not in its office certainly in its necessary effect, a burden on commerce among the States. What was it? It was a regulation of long and short haul within its own dominion, but operating externally necessarily in relation to the extended interstate commerce that was and must be affected by that legislation. If I am right in saying that that was the question and that the Supreme Court overruled the legislation of Illinois on the ground that it was a burden on commerce between the States, then I shall have secured to the respect of that great judicial body the assent of the whole Senate that if it was a burden on commerce and was by the State authority condemned for that reason, the same action is a burden on commerce although it is exercised and applied by the Federal Government; and then you will be brought in the first step of legislation to consider, whatever might be the judicial conclusion as to this action being constitutional by the Federal Government, whether the legislation of the General Government can unreasonably impose a burden on commerce between the States.

Let me ask attention to a few passages from the judgment of the court; but first let me say a word in regard to the consideration of this question by that court. The "granger" legislation of 1870, and that period will be remembered. In 1876 the constitutionality of that legislation as affecting interstate commerce was considered. I had the good fortune to be engaged in that litigation and on the side of the freedom of intercourse among the States and in condemnation of the burden laid by the State regulations of the Northwestern States. The court upheld that legislation; but the court, as it rightfully could do, said there were other grave considerations in that legislation, as there were, and that this matter, at first not sufficiently adverted to, deserved consideration. At any rate, they entered into an exposition to show that they could not have been profitably engaged in a support of such a regulation of State commerce by their decision in the granger cases, because the previous decisions of the court in other matters had really laid down the rule. It is under that exposition that I call attention to the present situation of the authorities on the subject. The court says, in the recent case from Illinois:

The case of the State Freight Tax (15 Wall., 232), which was decided only four years before these cases—held an act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania void, as being in conflict with the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States, which levied a tax upon all freight carried through the State by any railroad company, or into it from any other State, or out of it into any other State, and valid as to all freight the carriage of which was begun and ended within the limits of the State, because the former was a regulation of interstate commerce, and the latter was a commerce solely within the State which it had a right to regulate. And the question now under consideration, whether these statutes were of a class which the Legislatures of the States could enact in the absence of any act of Congress on the subject, was considered and decided in the negative.

It is impossible—

And here is the point—

It is impossible to see any distinction in its effect upon commerce of either class, between a statute which regulates the charges for transportation, and a statute which levies a tax for the benefit of the State upon the same transportation; and in fact the judgment of the court in the State Freight Tax case rested upon the ground that the tax was always added to the cost of transportation, and thus was a tax in effect upon the privilege of carrying the goods through the State. It is also very difficult to believe that the court consciously intended to overrule the first of these cases without any reference to it in the opinion.

What is the statute of Illinois that is brought up for judgment under these constitutional arrangements in the last determination of the court? I read still from the opinion of the court:

The language of the statute which is supposed to be violated by this transaction is to be found in chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes of Illinois, section 126. It is there enacted that if any railroad corporation shall charge, collect, or receive for the transportation of any passenger or freight of any description upon its railroad, for any distance within the State, the same or a greater amount of toll or compensation than is at the same time charged, collected, or received for the transportation in the same direction of any passenger or like quantity of freight of the same class over a greater distance of the same road, all such discriminating rates, charges, collections, or receipts, whether made directly or by means of rebate, drawback, or other shift or evasion, shall be deemed and taken against any such railroad corporation as prima facie evidence of unjust discrimination prohibited by the provisions of this act. The statute further provides a penalty of not over $5,000 for that offense, and also that the party aggrieved shall have a right to recover three times the amount of damages sustained, with costs and attorneys' fees.

The court holds that all arrangements regarding that portion that operates to burden commerce are obnoxious to the protective clause of the Constitution of the United States, and that in whatever form the States may assume to exercise their influence, if it affects the burden, then it is condemned as much as if a tax was laid on transportation as it was to pass from one State to another.

Now, let us see how the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States operates upon this specific form of State legislation which I have cited. The court proceed:

The applicability of this language—

Citing from a former decision—

The applicability of this language to the case now under consideration, of a continuous transportation of goods from New York to Central Illinois, or from the latter to New York, is obvious, and it is not easy to see how any distinction can be made. Whatever may be the instrumentalities by which this transportation from the one point to the other is effected, it is but one voyage, as much so as that of the steamboat on the Mississippi River. It is not the railroads themselves that are regulated by this act of the Illinois Legislature so much as the charge for transportation, and, in language just cited, if each one of the States through whose territories these goods are transported can fix its own rules for prices, for modes of transit, for times and modes of delivery, and all the other incidents of transportation to which the word "regulation" can be applied, it is readily seen that the embarrassments upon interstate transportation, as an element of interstate commerce, might be too oppressive to be submitted to. "It was," in the language of the court cited above, "to meet just such a case that the commerce clause of the Constitution was adopted."

It can not be too strongly insisted upon that the right of continuous transportation from one end of the country to the other is essential in modern times to that freedom of commerce from the restraints which the States might choose to impose upon it, that the commerce clause was intended to secure. This clause, giving to Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States, and with foreign nations, as this court has said before, was among the most important of the subjects which prompted the formation of the Constitution. Cook vs. Pennsylvania, 97 United States, 574; Brown vs. Maryland, 12 Wheaton, 446. And it would be a very feeble and almost useless provision, but poorly adapted to secure the entire freedom of commerce among the States which was deemed essential to a more perfect union by the framers of the Constitution, if at every stage of the transportation of goods and chattels through the country, the State within whose limits a part of this transportation must be done could impose regulations concerning the price, compensation, or taxation, or any other restrictive regulation interfering with and seriously embarrassing this commerce.

But to be more particular in dissecting this provision as to long haul and short haul when practiced by a State, let us see precisely what is the degree of interference with the transportation of property or persons from one State to another, which this statute proposes:

A citizen of New York has goods which he desires to have transported by the railroad companies from that city to the interior of the State of Illinois. A continuous line of rail over which a car loaded with these goods can be carried, and is carried habitually, connects the place of shipment with the place of delivery. He undertakes to make a contract with a person engaged in the carrying business at the end of this route from whence the goods are to start, and he is told by the carrier, "I am free to make a fair and reasonable contract for this carriage to the line of the State of Illinois, but when the car which carries these goods is to cross the line of that State, pursuing at the same time this continuous track, I am met by a law of Illinois which forbids me to make a free contract concerning this transportation within that State, and subjects me to certain rules by which I am to be governed as to the charges which the same railroad company in Illinois may make, or has made, with reference to other persons and other places of delivery." So that while that carrier might be willing to carry these goods from the city of New York to the city of Peoria at the rate of 15 cents per hundred pounds, he is not permitted to do so, because the Illinois railroad company has already charged at the rate of 25 cents per hundred pounds for carriage to Gilman, in Illinois, which is 86 miles shorter than the distance to Peoria.

So, also, in the present case, the owner of corn, the principal product of the country, desiring to transport it from Peoria, in Illinois, to New York, finds a railroad company willing to do this at the rate of 15 cents per pundred pounds for a car-load, but is compelled to pay at the rate of 25 cents per hundred pounds, because the railroad company has received from a person residing in Gilman 25 cents per hundred pounds for the transportation of a car-load of the same class of freight over the same line of road from Gilman to New York. This is the result of the statute of Illinois, in its endeavor to prevent unjust discrimination, as construed by the supreme court of that State. The effect of it is that, whatever may be the rate of transportation per mile charged by the railroad company from Gilman to Sheldon, a distance of 23 miles, in which the loading and the unloading of the freight is the largest expense incurred by the railroad company, the same rate per mile must be charged from Peoria to the city of New York.

The obvious injustice of such a rule as this, which railroad companies are by heavy penalties compelled to conform to, in regard to commerce among the States, when applied to transportation which includes Illinois in a long line of carriage through several States, shows the value of the constitutional provision which confides the power of regulating interstate commerce to the Congress of the United States, whose enlarged view of the interests of all the States, and of the railroads concerned, better fits it to establish just and equitable rules.

Mr. President, all that I insist upon here is a determination upon two points, not only by the authority of this dispassionate examination, but upon the great and as I think irresistible reasoning on which this decision rests, that legislation of this kind by the States is a burden on commerce. It produces inequality. It is inconsistent with equality and justice. And now if we transport the same measure into Congressional legislation, it does not alter its nature or its inequality or its injustice—I mean its inequality and its injustice as to its operation in its own sphere—and therefore I invoke the Congress of the United States by a chain of argument to determine whether it has power to burden commerce among the States upon motives that produce this disparity, this distinction in the freedom of commerce, in the rates and expenses that commerce itself must bear.

I agree that the submission of this power to the Federal Government is a denial to the States. I will not disguise the general interest and influence upon the action of the Federal Government in Congress that may be considered protected; but what I say is that when a measure is introduced in Congress that has not the motive, nor the occasion, nor the tendency to promote commerce in its equality, commerce in its foreign relations, commerce in equality and in absolute non-discrimination, in that it is doing a thing that is denied to the States, and the same reasons argue that it should be denied to the Federal Government.

Commerce is what the people who made the Constitution understood—commerce, no matter what the appliances and vehicles and methods of prosecution might be. They might not foresee the steam-cars or the electric telegraph, but they could see that freedom and equality for the people of the United States were more permanent and more useful than any modifications of the vehicles or the methods of intercourse of commerce or of transportation. They lodged this securely. The commerce clause was not to be used as the instrument and under the power of other motives than those which stimulate and help, invigorate, and maintain and secure the freedom and equality of commerce.

Mr. President, if I am at all correct in these views of the clauses which I shall attempt to expose in their true character, and not with any view of denunciation or exaggeration, then this would be unconstitutional legislation; and if it came up to the Supreme Court of the United States and the court did not retrace its reasoning, even if it did not retrace its decision, it would either be obliged to hold as a proposition of constitutional law that these discriminations and favoritisms among the States were not committed to the Federal Government, or to decide that it had the power to be restrained, restricted, modulated, and made consonant with these great interests of freedom and equality on the mere discretion of Congress, and that it could establish custom-houses between the States and have a tariff by which under the regulation of commerce between the States you could have your duties and your imports on the passage of commerce from one State to another.

Indeed, the court, rather than maintain such a proposition of law as that, would prefer to find in the distinct phrases of the Constitution an abundant protection of State intercourse and freedom under this positive regulation:

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles—

Not in the phrase of the Constitution, "exported from the United States," but it reads—

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

That breadth of application was essential. It was not to be presumed that a tax of export from Massachusetts to New York could be inflicted by the Federal Government, and it was not necessary to define it. Although the matter of commerce was present and controlling, if you please, it would not use a restriction which said, "No tax or duty shall be imposed on an export from the United States," but no duty shall be imposed on the exportation from any State.

Why is it, with a general concurrence on the part of the people of the United States, on the part, if you please, of great commercial interests, to a considerable extent, even upon the part of the railroads, that there is a readiness to accept the general frame of this bill, although some may doubt its expediency? Some may doubt, perhaps, in some of its details its constitutionality, but they are ready to accept and esteem as capable of trial, and an expectation of benefit that will not need any particular modification, all the clauses which make up the general frame of the bill, and which, as I think, in the minds of the people have been the principal inducement to desire its enactment.

Why is it that when we depart from this general regulation of commerce in the interest of commerce by its own motives and by its own laws, and with equality and freedom toward all the people of the United States, we are ready to accept this frame of supervision, and yet when we come to the fourth and fifth sections we find them to be repugnant to the interest, and the dearest interest, of the people of this country?

I submit to the sincere examination of the Senate that the regulations of the bill beside the fourth and the fifth sections are regulations of commerce, in the motives of commerce, in the promotion of commerce, in the advancement of equality and without discrimination either between States or among pursuits, or between remote and near arrangements of population and situation of States; and because substantially it adheres to and follows the phrases which were common to the experience of the law as it was understood and explained when the Constitution was adopted, and are still explained and construed now; and that is, as the fundamental rule, that charges shall be reasonable and equal, "without discrimination, without rebate"—I am quoting the language of the proposed statute—"without undne preference or advantage;" that the measure is to be extended all over this network of railroad intercommunication and does not touch and does not bear upon one spot or upon another; it does not bear upon one product or upon another; it does not touch one neighborhood or another. It does not make a difference. It is the same rule, the same law, the same application, and the same interpretation for these commissioners upon these rules of justice and equality, and nothing more.

But when you come to the question in the fourth section, so grave, so interesting, if you please, the occasion of so much irritation, producing so much injustice, producing so much resentment, inducing so much effort to cure, it is no longer regulated by the rules of commerce and its motives, but is a positive regulation, not a conformity of commerce to what is reasonable, but a determination in the Senate and in the House of Representatives of the United States of what is a rule and regulation of railroad transportation. In other words, all of this bill, except the fourth and fifth sections, properly belongs to the sphere of law-making. Wise or unwise, discreet or circumspect or deficient, it all belongs to the sphere of law-making. When you come to these two sections you depart from law-making and lay down rates and rules of transportation not governed by the laws or interests of commerce or transportation.

Before I enter upon any presentation of my own views of these two sections as impediments to free commerce and burdens upon free transportation, I ask attention to the judgment of business men, commercial men, in the interest and in the views of interstate commerce and of foreign commerce, and also of manufacturers and the dissemination of manufactures as well as in the dissemination of the trade products of the soil.

In the first place, I can not at least be indifferent, and I should hope that no Senator could be indifferent, to a deliberate, calm, and reasonable view presented by so great a body as the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York. New York, whatever may be said of other portions of this country, is not domineered over by railroads. We have other interests in New York, and our interests in the mass are generally hostile to what is the specific and single interest of railroads. It is in vain to talk of the action of a body charged with foreign commerce, charged with the cheapening of transportation, hostile to enhancement, hostile to discrimination, hostile to oppression, and to put their judgment down as if it proceeded in the interest of the railroads.

Let me say here for myself, not only from the propositions I have stated, that I regard it as a question of commerce directly and in relation to railroads only as bearing upon the interests of commerce. I have no interest, I have no relations, I have no bias in mind, but I can not fail to see the discrimination which these sections are to produce upon commerce. They may injure railroads for aught I know; they may cripple them for aught I know. Not to that end should I favor them; not to that end has the Constitution conferred any such power on Congress; but if it should injure, if it should cripple, it will be because it injures and cripples commerce and nothing else.

Strangulation of commerce for the purpose of constriction on railroads would be the merest folly in the world. If railroads have any distinct and selfish and sordid (if you please to use the word) interest in this matter of transportation, it is that commerce shall be developed and not restrained, that its volume shall be increased, that its freedom shall be untrammeled, and that its justice and universal prosperity as commerce shall be in itself and adjust itself to one of its vehicles as it would to other vehicles, at one time the only vehicles of commerce, I mean the foreign shipping and the domestic steamboat navigation of this country.

So to me, if I could tolerate the propriety of the arraignment of railroad managers and railroad systems which has been pressed on the attention of Congress, I should be obliged to say that all of it is out of place, unless you find, indeed, reasons which in the promotion of commerce should lead to a regulation not of railroads as distinguised from commerce, but of commerce operating upon railroads as vehicles of commerce.

The Chamber of Commerce has been for a period of years observant upon railroad schemes and purposes and their execution, hostile, interfering with them, desiring the authority of the State of New York to be exercised in their regulation and restraint, and operating in commercial influence always toward the equality and cheapening of transportation. It approves the general frame of this proposed act, its provisions against discriminations, against unreasonable rates, against undue preferences or advantages, and it approves of that portion of the measure which gives vigor to the execution of these salutary arrangements. It no longer leaves the single shipper, no longer leaves the single manufacturer, no longer leaves the single trade of one kind of commercial business to deal with this whole interest; but invigorates the arm of resistance to these destructive agencies, so that by the authority of this commission and by the authority of the courts, in the name of the public interest and at the expense of the public interest all the redress that law can give may be furnished for the benefit of commerce.

What, then, does the Chamber of Commerce of New York say on these two sections? It is their opinion, it is not the opinion of railroad people, but their opinion, judging of commerce, with which they, as the representatives of the constituents of the vast commerce of that city, have to do. They look at railroads only as bearing on the freedom, equality, and development of commerce; and whatever they say of criticisms that shall operate upon railroads is only in the light of how it will operate upon that center of this vast circumference that is to converge in the great port of New York for the distribution of commerce.

In that way they look at it. Could there ever be a larger view of the subject taken? Could there ever be one that would so effectually trample down and efface all trivial discrimination of the advantage of this railroad or that railroad line? I submit to the Senate that the judgment of men situated as these are is not to be discarded unless they are willing to substitute their own willfulness on the matter and meet the question of its disturbance with the affairs of this country after it shall occur, if it shall occur, with this clear notice in a calm and respectful presentation of the subject which proceeds from this great center of commercial interest and authority.

The report of that committee of the chamber of commerce, at my suggestion, was printed in the RECORD several days ago. No doubt it has been examined by Senators. If desired, it can be examined by all. I quote from that report the following passages:

Your committee are of opinion that (section 4) the prohibition to charge more for a shorter haul than a longer one is objectionable and certain to work against the public welfare. If enacted, it would do little good to any one. Local rates would not be thereby reduced, but "through traffic," which, on the average, furnishes not to exceed one-quarter of the revenues of the trunk lines, would be either refused, or raised to a standard of local rates—thus obstructing and materially decreasing the moving and exportation of cotton, grain, petroleum, and other products. Upon the utmost freedom in making through contracts from the West to the seaboard depends the development of the entire West and its farming lands. The gigantic results already witnessed, due to the fortuitous combinations of railroads and water transportation, and the ability to carry this through traffic for trifling additional cost, and so far at very moderate rates of freight, has produced a wealth to the whole nation so far exceeding any possible local benefits to be gained by the proposed prohibition as to forbid its consideration. Nor is this provision necessary to protect the local resident from imposition; his remedy is provided in the bill, quite independent of the through traffic. If a local rate is unjust it must be remedied; but the consideration thereof must depend upon the particular surroundings and circumstances of that individual case, and not upon that of others further on the line, who may have competing roads, water transportation, and many other things affecting rates of freight not at all applicable to the case in question. One immediate and inevitable effect of such a prohibition would be to divert most important volumes of freight to competing Canadian roads running to the seaboard.

As to section 5, your committee is also of opinion that the absolute prohibition against pooling is unwise, and much more likely to work injuriously to the public than beneficially. If it be considered, it will be evident that most if not all of the evils of unequal rates, discriminations, and partiality have arisen from unrestricted competition, the only result aimed at by the proposed prohibition, while a uniform tariff between all competing lines, arranged upon planes of equity to all shippers, and enforced by an agreed volume of tonnage apportioned to each road, is the very end to be accomplished by the bill itself—and this is "pooling." Its actual operation has been to do away with discriminations against individuals and localities; it has secured greater uniformity of rates; it has been found of greater advantage to shippers to deal with a "pool" commissioner, representing all the trunk-lines, than to be compelled to confer with many officials in detail—as instanced in the late dry-goods classification agreement—its existence has secured a steadily decreasing average rate of freight, which has developed during the whole period of "pooling." In general the system seems to have been productive of good to the public, and in many instances where injustice has arisen it has been from lack of good faith to keep its conditions on the part of the common carrier. While, on the other hand, its tendency has been to avoid disastrous railroad wars, entailing upon the investors serious loss, and always productive of disastrous effects upon the laboring classes and the commerce of the country.

For these reasons this committee would urge that any action looking to prohibition of pooling be at least deferred, and the subject referred (as was originally proposed by the Senate bill on this subject) to the commission to be established by this bill, for full investigation, report, and suggested legislation, if they deem any needed, in the future.

It is true that the framers of this bill, evidently fearing the strict operation of section 4 (as it regards the long and short haul), have lodged the discretion with the commissioners to limit or suspend, after investigation, its operation in certain cases. And if it be wise to confide to them so great a power, it can not be unreasonable to leave the whole subject (affected by sections 4 and 5) to them and their discretion, which would be the case were no clauses of this character contained in the bill. If any discrimination of an unjust character arises, the commissioners are fully vested with power to investigate and correct the same, and this seems to be all that is required at present, and until more experience is gained by the commission.

To this chamber the public are largely indebted for the investigation of the Hepburn committee, which led to the appointment of the railroad commission of this State. This commission has proved eminently satisfactory both to the public and the railroads, and has performed great public service.

The experience of our State railroad commission should furnish a valuable guide and precedent for the larger and more important duties of an interstate commission. When a law was passed creating a railroad commission in this State the powers and duties of the State commission were largely advisory. This chamber was of the opinion that the powers of this commission were too limited, but experience has demonstrated that the law was wise and salutary. The advice of the commission to the railroad managers has been followed in most instances, in spirit if not in letter. Publicity and public opinion have satisfactorily supplied the place of mandatory provisions of the law in this State.

I have also papers from other commercial bodies. Many of them have been introduced to the attention of Senators from the portions of the community which they particularly represent. Without going through any accumulation, any aggregation, or symmetry which should group together the opinions of all the commercial interests of this entire country, I select but one from its position as central in Illinois and one as proceeding from the Board of Trade of Minneapolis. In Peoria they say:

At a meeting of the directors of the Peoria Board of Trade, held December 20, 1886, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas after mature and careful consideration of section 4, known as the "long and short haul" clause of the interstate-commerce bill, now before Congress, it is the opinion of this board that the passage of the bill with the section mentioned will unsettle all business interests throughout the West; will depreciate the value of all farming lands west of the Middle States; will work directly in the interests of lake ports, lake transportation lines, Canadian roads and the Eastern farmer: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That in the opinion of this board such radical and experimental legislation as contemplated by the section mentioned is not only uncalled-for at the present time, but threatens widespread disaster to the most vital interests of the Western States.

Resolved, That the discretionary power given the commission to discriminate in the application of the "long and short haul" clause as between different localities, will at the best afford only uncertain and long delayed relief, and will be apt to add merely another element of uncertainty to the transportation problem.

This preamble and these resolutions were adopted unanimously by the Peoria Board of Trade. Peoria is not eastern; Peoria is central, central as toward the great Valley of the Mississippi and the immense breadth of grain-producing country which we are so fortunate as to include within the limits of the United States. This is their judgment. Can any one overwhelm it by the objurgation that it is in the interest of railroads? If by stigmas the judgments of all the most intelligent and responsible representatives of commerce are to be derided, if it is to be set down as an espousal and a sycophancy toward railroads, then already there is no opportunity of freedom. But they record their judgment, and they are going to be judged, if you pass this measure, just as you are going to be judged; and if they are right, then you have done this thing, and done it when advised by certain public manifestation and argument on the part of the representatives of commerce that it "will unsettle all business interests throughout the West, will depreciate the value of all farming lands west of the Middle States; will work directly in the interest of lake ports, lake transportation lines, Canadian roads, and the Eastern farmer."

No more responsible and no more distinct advertisement could be given to the Senate of what the people of this country think will be the practical result on commerce. I am not talking upon this bill and its effects upon politics; I am not talking upon its effect on railroads. The Peoria people and the farmers through the Mississippi Valley, and all those who have built up relations of transportation to this permeating scheme of railroads in this country tell you what the effect will be then. But I venture to say that if political reasons are operating upon the discrimination in the votes to be given here, that discrimination after the fact, if it is proved to produce the results that here we are notified will be produced, will not be a valuable position for any one to take.

We have from the Northwest, from the Minneapolis Board of Trade, the following, and this was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That while this board of trade fully approves the general principle of national legislation for the control and regulation of our interstate carrying trade, and while in the main it concurs in the provisions of the compromise bill now pending before Congress, it thoroughly disapproves and deprecates the provisions of section 4, relating to what is known as the long and short haul, and of section 5, relating to pooling arrangements between parallel or competing railway lines. In the judgment of this board section 4, if enacted, would give to the proposed national commission powers whose exercise would always be dangerous and might easily become destructive to the interests of the distinctively agricultural sections of the country.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed with instructions to forward the foregoing resolution to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, accompanied with a letter of transmission which shall more fully set forth the views of this board.

This was not only unanimously adopted, but the reasons are expressed with great calmness and with great pertinency which have led them to these conclusions; but these topics are appended, to which I ask your attention:

Allow us, also, in passing, to remind you of the fact that, of the entire membership of the Minneapolis Board of Trade, representing all leading branches of legitimate business and productive industry, not half a dozen have any pecuniary interest in railroads, direct or indirect, and we do not know of half that number who are so interested. The board speaks for the producers and shippers of the Northwest. Further, it is fully recognized that national supervision of our railway system is necessary and best, in the interest both of the people and of the railways themselves; that this supervision has already been too long delayed; that there are wrongs to be righted and corporate abuses to be corrected, and that the pending interstate-commerce bill, when duly amended, will constitute a wise first step in the right direction.

* * * * * * *

Assuming that the section means what its language naturally imports, the consequence of enforcing such a law would, we believe, be gravely injurious to many important interests in all parts of the country, but especially would such enforcement prove destructive in its effect upon the great agricultural section of which our own State forms so important a part.

It would very greatly increase the cost to our people of heavy commodities of all kinds which are brought in from eastern sections, including coal, without which our prairie farms could not be occupied.

It would ruinously depreciate the value of every bushel of wheat and every pound of beef produced in Minnesota by compelling the railroads to adopt a freight tariff on through shipments eastward, which, if not prohibitory, would leave to our farmers no reward for their labor and invested means.

It would depress manufacturing industries and deprive many workingmen of employment.

It would reduce to a minimum the trade of the Northwest by largely destroying the purchasing ability of our producers.

It would drive a large share of the long-distance traffic from American to Canadian lines.

It would cripple, if it did not bankrupt, many railroads by compelling them to relinquish a large part of either their through or their local traffic—both of which are essential to their solvency.

The very people who ought to derive most benefit from legislation of this general character—the farmers and wage-earners of the country—would be the first and greatest sufferers from its injurious effects.

* * * * * * *

Section 5, which arbitrarily prohibits the pooling of railway earnings, is not less objectionable than section 4. It proceeds upon the assumption that an amicable apportionment of traffic among substantially parallel railway lines destroys wholesome competition, creates a "monopoly," results in exorbitant transportation charges, and thus wrongs the general body of producers, shippers, and consumers, who constitute the people. With exceptions so rare as only to prove the rule, this assumption is a fallacy, and legislation based upon it must prove a hurtful blunder. The facts are that such apportionments of traffic are a natural and necessary outgrowth of the development of our national transportation system; that they constitute the only plan of self-preservation for railroads which time, and thought, and experience have been able to evolve from a most difficult and perplexing situation; that they are the only known and feasible alternative for that system of cut-throat competition which foments chronic "rate wars," and which, unless held in check, would end in the bankruptcy, first of the weak lines, and then of the strong ones—for a bankrupt railway, having no responsibility to bondholders or shareholders, is the most reckless and destructive of competitors. These adjustments and divisions of traffic, known as railway pools, do not raise transportation charges above a reasonable level. Almost without exception they have resulted in holding rates steadily at the lowest point at which the business can be done at a living profit. This is illustrated just now, as you are aware, in our own section. Never was there a closer pooling arrangement between trunk lines than that which now exists between the six roads leading from Minneapolis to Chicago, yet never were freight tariffs so low as at the present time, and never were the people better accommodated.

The well-known fact that, concurrently with the development of the railway pooling system, railway rates have steadily, greatly, and everywhere decreased is a summary refutation of the whole theory on which section 5 is founded.

The pooling or apportionment system, besides preserving railways from insolvency, and railway investments from destruction, directly benefits every business community by giving some degree of uniformity and stability to transportation charges, and thus enabling business men to shape their course with greater certainty and safety. A railway rate war, although it temporarily reduces the market price of transportation below actual cost, is universally and justly regarded as a misfortune to all legitimate lines of trade. Obviously it is of no advantage to the public to enjoy any service at less than its reasonable cost, including a fair return upon the capital invested in rendering that service. The rule of unregulated and unreasonable competition, followed by the "survival of the fittest," when applied to railroads, means their own ruin, with resulting calamity to every other business interest which is worth preserving.

The railway pool, honestly administered, is the natural balance-wheel of interstate commerce. Section 5 of the pending bill does not provide or suggest any substitute for this regulative and conservative agency. On the contrary, it would seem to render commercial chaos legally obligatory.

The reasonings here are in the direction which I have already indicated, and in entire concurrence with the views of the Board of Trade of Peoria. We have then, I may say, at least, a creditable manifestation of the feelings and views and interests of commerce itself; and now I propose to point out, I think within reasonable limits, the vicious proposition of these two sections.

I have already said that we do lay down a regulation that belongs to practical administration of the rate of freights. Why do we not make it more definite and more thorough? Because it is impossible or it is inexpedient. If there could be a regulation in the wisdom of man that in advance could determine all these disputable and competing interests it would be very well. It is not thought that we in Congress can do that.

Now, why do we depart in either of these sections from the wise reservation of the exercise of our power of law-making which characterizes all the other provisions? Is it because a judgment has already been formed among the people, among the great mass of the people, among a considerable portion of the people (for I do not speak disrespectfully in the least of this source and measure of interest), that they have made up their minds, under the pressure of mischiefs which they feel, resentments justly, if you please, that they think should call for redress, and that they have made up their minds that they will, by the General Government, settle two propositions of railroad regulation? If we are to look at that as a bearing and a motive, stimulated by feelings and facts, however important, however just in the minds of the people, not bearing upon the carrying of commerce, but only on the regulation of morality, of justice, of equity, if you please, by the railroads, as distinguished from the question whether these perversions on their part have injured commerce, and as a great interest, they have had their attention drawn to something that it does not belong to the United States Government to redress. It belongs to the law and the general administration of justice and the regulation by the States of what is examinable by them. Here we are to act, not by getting, through a subterfuge, a dominion for the Federal Government of what does not belong to it, but we are to confine ourselves to what we are properly accredited and furnished with, the regulation of commerce.

Let me take now the fourth section. It is not a very bold step, it is not a very assuring step that Congress enters upon this proposition. It does not undertake to say it is right that the lineal measurement shall be the commercial rule of equality. Nobody ventures to say that. What has it said? It has said: "We will apply it at least to this, that if the movements of commerce and the interests of commerce impose a rate of transportation for shorter lines, those rules of commerce, those motives, and those interests which should justify and induce a cheapening of the longer transportation shall not be allowed." It is a regulation not for cheapening anything. It is a rule, inflexible so far as Congress imposes it, that nothing shall be cheapened by the laws of trade and the interests of the people. That is a novel proposition to begin with. We are dealing with railroads, dealing with commerce, and we say that cheapening shall not be possible under the circumstances that we state. Is there any denial of that? There are motives and reasons given for it, but nevertheless that is the effect which is to be produced by it.

Is our market to be raised? Is it to be regulated by the shorter hauls included within the lineal transportation of the longer hauls? There are all sorts of long hauls and all sorts of short hauls, the longer long hauls and the shorter short hauls, but lineal measurement shall not be cheapened unless according to lineal measurement, not absolute and universal, but on this line that is drawn. It is one of lineal measurement and nothing else. It is not whether it is up hill or down hill; it is not whether it is on a level; it is not the question whether there is supporting commerce or long gaps of 300 or 500 miles of desert; it does not deal with the question of the whole transportation that the commerce and the people of the United States are interested in transferring from one remote place to another, just as much as in crossing the ocean, where there is no peddling along, as there can be none on the ocean.

Those are all commercial reasons, those are all commercial arguments, those are all reasons which affect cheapness, and this network of reason and freedom and equality is to be subjected to an absolute demarkation, resting upon nothing but lineal distance.

That is a pretty grave responsibility. How do we meet it? First, by limiting it to the same kinds of freight, and under similar circumstances and similar conditions. There are lawsuits enough in that provision to keep us lawyers at work for twenty years on that.

What are freights of the same kind which are to be governed by this lineal demarkation now and forever, unless the law is changed? Let me ask some agriculturist or representative of agriculture. If the rural State of Vermont, where I pass the most of the summer, may be called an agricultural State, let me ask what are freights of the same kind? I will ask my friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] whether oats and corn and wheat are all the same kind of freight?

Mr. ALLISON. They are.

Mr. EVARTS. That is the opinion of that section of the country, and therefore necessarily not only of your own but reinforced by that of your constituents. It is true. In rerum natura it is so. They are products of the soil, they are cereals, and they are food for man and beast.

What does commerce care about that? What is that to commerce? Suppose that in the situation of the commerce of the world which we are to have hereafter and shall have, wheat is competed with abroad under the state of casual crops, already competing with other fertile fields, we are excluded unless we can carry wheat at a cheaper rate than we can carry oats, and do carry oats, and that it is reasonable to carry oats. We are not excluded from Europe in the carrying of oats, and so with corn, but the wheat of India is our rival and our terror. India deals in wheat and not in corn, and not in oats. Russia, in its vast plains and with its abject population, I will say, does not compete with us in corn. It does compete with us in oats and in wheat. Under this rule, in the state of the markets, oats can have the rate thus measured by short hauls and get to Europe, and corn can get there, and wheat can not. What are you going to do about it? What becomes of the lineal rule bearing on commerce? The reasonableness of rates depends upon whether the subject of transportation will bear this or that measure, not an unreasonable measure. That is regulated by the other clauses of the bill; but must we allow India to possess the consumption of Europe, especially England, in wheat, because we can not transport wheat at a cheapness that will comport lineally with the transportation of other articles?

Commerce has its own laws, its own trade, its own views of equality, equality of reasonableness, equality of promoting commerce, of carrying wheat, and carrying oats, and carrying corn, at rates that are necessary to move them. When commerce, in its vehicles, in its managers, in its capital, is ready to carry wheat across the continent and across the ocean to compete with India, who likes to pass a law saying that it shall not be done because it is a long haul? You can not carry wheat at a cheaper rate when that cheaper rate is the only one that will move it all, because it does not conform to the regularity of the lineal measurements of the short haul.

I have taken these absolutely similar articles as showing the impropriety of substituting the rule of lineal demarkation when the state of the markets is the point which determines whether the rate is reasonable or not.

But we do not stop there. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the States can not regulate long and short hauls, because that would burden interstate commerce; it is a tax. We are then undertaking to regulate them, but do we regulate them? We do it sensibly in a general frame; we do it as well as we can if we require an assimilation in their nature of the subjects of transportation; but then look how we draw back, how we really take the position of abdication by the Congress of the United States, the law-making authority, in this demarkation. We will not trust to the laws of trade; we will not trust to the views of managers of railroads and managers of commerce and those interested—not to them, not to all; we will not trust ourselves. We say in this measure, thus condemned by these bodies in different parts of the United States in the interests of commerce for the danger that will come, well, it is very likely it will be so. We are entering into an arrangement of an articulative tissue of commercial interests as extensive as the country and as intricate and manifold as the interests of this vast country are diversified. If these farmers, if these manufacturers, if these merchants condemn us for passing an act that belongs to the law of commerce, only required by law to be made sensible, equal, free, general, we are not going to face the community on that subject. We provide a board to dispense with our folly and to accept regulations that belong to the laws of trade and commerce.

Is that constitutional? Is that what is to come from denying to the States and to their responsibility discrimination, to have five commissioners to make such discriminations as they in their judgment shall think are suitable to the interests of commerce? For that is what it comes to, and just in proportion as this liberality of their discretion and power is restricted it is contrary to the proposition upon which they are trusted. We will not take it, we will not give it wholly to them, but against the accusing laws of trade and commerce, of property, prosperity, equality, and justice, we leave it for each to point to the other, it was the Congress that was at fault; or, on our part, it is the commissioners who did not do their duty. I can not see that that mode of legislation is consonant with the duty of Congressional power and Congressional responsibility.

Mr. President, you will observe that in all the regulative provisions to be supervised and modulated by these commissioners, except in these two clauses, we have given them a guide as clear as is possible, reasonable, just, equal, and a supervision of law to determine what is reasonable, just, and equal. Under the course of commerce developed in Europe or here the words "reasonable, just, and equal" embrace phrases that could be used; and reason, therefore, as far as may be, is adopted as the guide and governor of all these various and competing interests.

Ah, if reason could be supreme, and reason could be omniscient, and reason could be omnipresent and omnipotent, what would be better than to be governed without laws by what was reasonable, and just, and equal?

But there is a practical difficulty in this commission in respect of these undefined powers, in their nature discretionary. Even if we possessed and could possess, and if we should always think so, every measure of equality and justice that can be conceived, such as can be found in the resources of human nature, it takes time for these five men to do justice, not by a dispensing law to repeal the sections but by an examination to be made, judging of each one under its circumstances and not embracing any general propositions.

Besides the burdens of the general framework of the bill which they may discharge, but which will require labor, deliberation, and delay, how long will it be before these five commissioners in dealing with the whole network and the whole area and the whole immeasurable diversity will get around to your constituents and mine? One part of the country will be liberated from this restriction a year and another two years before others. Empowered with all the vigor of the Constitution that may be accredited to it, and with all our confidence in the legislative power of Congress, can we reduce time, and circumstance, and delay, and difficulty? It is said that ten years of agitation have been required to bring these deliberative bodies to the conclusion that we are so near in concurring upon. How long what we find it impossible to settle is it to take these men to settle for the private and particular justice of every neighborhood and every production? There has to be a judicial determination of the particular case. Will they begin with Alabama? I was going to say they will not get down to Alabama, but beginning with Alabama, for aught I know, it will take them about three years before they get to New York. That is not legislation. If it be a demonstration that it is all the legislation we can safely make, then it is regulation that you can not make at all.

Now, about pooling. We have not said so much about pooling. These chambers of commerce have very well pointed out what is the difficulty in the fifth section in making a peremptory, a specific rule on the subject of pooling. There is none of that uncertainty about the regulation that is found in the fourth section, and there is not any suspending power under the fifth section.

What did we do in the original Senate bill? We commit it to this administrative board to examine into the question of pooling and to report to Congress. I thought that was wise. The other House have substituted, in the concurrence of the conference committee, their measure, which is absolute on the subject of pooling.

Pooling is a very general term. It is not in very good repute by itself, and while it carries in this connection, as it does, a combination in the interest of railroads and to oppress commerce, it is regulated by the previous section, and sufficiently. But shall it be said that when by the rules of commerce and the interests of equality, protection against discrimination finds its readiest and its most useful mode in its application to a certain area and operating upon certain interests, from a diversity of points of competition governing and inflaming the zeal and cupidity of competing railroads to reduce rates, are we ready to say that that equalization and a conformity within an area and applicable to competitive roads shall not be allowed if that will produce in the given situation equality and stability?

That pooling, as it is called, does produce uniformity and stability in a certain situation we all know; and we all know that one of the most important interests of shippers, whether Eastern shippers or produce shippers from the West and the South, when they ship under contracts that they make or arrangements with consignees for advances, is to know the rate to be paid, and we have desired to accomplish that by providing that a publication shall be made and that the rates shall not be advanced without due notice. But on one railroad that is literally 20 or 25 miles from another the rate of fare is lowered under the invitation and the rapacious effort of roads either to force a combination or to compel buying out, or which they think they can displace without dishonest means. So when the shippers take themselves to their contracts they find out that although there is rather a preponderance on one railroad the other is going to go on competing, and it will naturally take shipments from this point at such a rate that although they are lineally further off they are commercially nearer. Who cares in transportation about lineal distances? It is what it costs to bring the produce to the markets. Those are the nearest where the rates are cheapest. Those are the farthest off where the line, as such, is destroyed in its nearness by the excessive charges for freight.

People think that to get rid of the mischief of the competition and the tyranny, if you choose, of the railroads over commerce, the States ought to take all the railroads of the States, and the United States ought to take all the railroads that cross the lines between the States, in order that each line and each interest shall have an equality and uniformity and stability, and that equality and justice may be accomplished. Now what is that going to do? Actually you are displacing competition and making a general income from all the railroads, by pooling, into the Treasury of the United States.

I only insist upon this illustration to the extent that it properly goes. Pooling, which is equalizing matters as to receipts, is in the same nature as equalizing lineally, and is right or wrong, useful or mischievous, according as that unification, that stability, that equality, and that reasonableness is accomplished by one or the other; and though pooling is assumed to be unpopular, and the name may carry a measure of disfavor by force of the phrase, and is absolutely worthy of denunciation in all cases, really the effect of pooling, as these chambers of commerce say, is to give reasonable stability and equality. In the experience of the great State of New York they have not only undertaken not to control pooling, but by advisory intimation of the State commission and advisory intervention of the chambers of commerce and of boards of trade at manufacturing centers, as well as at the seaports, they have obtained a rate of transportation that at present meets with very little objection from all the interests in our State. But here the intervention of an authority peremptory, conclusive, and permanent is now proposed.

Mr. President, everything is tending, as everything should tend in this country, to unification and equality in all the intercommunication, the passing of property, of exchange, of commerce in every direction, so that within the periphery of our now vast country there should be no line of discrimination known that the law tolerates, and certainly none that the law defends. We may talk about the mischiefs that have grown out of the exaggeration of wealth and the distribution of wealth under the railroad system; one has been pinched here and one has been inflated there; but I put it to the scope of consideration of the Senate that with all the infirmities, with all the burdens, by whatever phrases they may be described, which the system has caused, progress has gone on in the sense of dispersing population and bringing lands into our fertile and productive system, the commerce ab extra has not been affected injuriously. It has grown and flourished without the aid of intervention, certainly without intervention to constrain. Who shall desire that without investigation we should attempt so vast a disturbance of this equality and these flattering commercial prospects?

Mr. President, to this fortunate land of ours we may apply the description armis potens terra et ubere glebæ; our lands in fertility have not been the inferior means by which this nation has been illustrated. It is these fertile plains, and this free intercourse, and this railroad system, pushed on rashly, losing so much to its investment, that have conveyed to the homes of the consumers that which the land produces so abundantly. And now this very question of ours is at the bottom of the political agitation of Great Britain and Ireland; and restrained by all the impediments there it has brought the landed aristocracy of Ireland to the necessity of yielding to the tenants, and in Germany the soldier can no longer prescribe the method for holding lands, but the measure of their productiveness is that at which our competition places them; and with these vast equals in freedom who shall say that the Congress of the United States desires to lay impediments on transfers between the States or burdens on their foreign commerce? No, Mr. President, whatever we can see in the future, whatever we can read in the past, the greatest and the most classic examples, all warn us to beware of entering on the path now proposed to us.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 7094) to give the consent of Congress to an agreement made between the commissioners appointed on the part of the State of New York and the commissioners appointed on the part of the State of New Jersey respecting the location of the northern boundary-line between the States of New York and New Jersey, and the replacing and erecting of monuments thereon, bearing date the 7th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1883;

A bill (H. R. 9377) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher; and

A bill (H. R. 10040) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City, Miss.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1458) to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan at Bay City, in said district, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills this day received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 2879) to authorize the service of civil and criminal process issued by Territorial courts within military and Indian reservations and the Yellowstone National Park;

A bill (H. R. 5577) to provide that a judgment in the circuit court of the United States upon an interest coupon of a bond by a municipal corporation shall not be conclusive in a question on the bond when the amount gives jurisdiction to the Supreme Court on appeal;

A bill (H. R 10658) to change the lines between the eastern and western judicial districts of North Carolina;

A bill (H. R. 7094) to give the consent of Congress to an agreement made between the commissioners appointed on the part of the State of New York and the commissioners appointed on the part of the State of New Jersey respecting the location of the northern boundary line between the States of New York and New Jersey, and the replacing and erecting of monuments thereon, bearing date the 7th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1883; and

A bill (H. R. 10040) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City, Miss.

The bill (H. R. 9377) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

POLYGAMY AND AFFAIRS IN UTAH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 10) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and ask a conference thereon, and I ask unanimous consent that the Chair appoint the committee and that the House amendment and the Senate bill be printed.

Mr. HOAR. What bill is that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The polygamy bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate disagree to the House amendment and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. PUGH were appointed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the bill itself, which is nearly out of print, and the amendment of the House of Representatives be printed in one body, stitched together, so that everybody can see just how they stand.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FORT SCOTT, KANS.

Mr. MAHONE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1386) for the completion of a public building at Fort Scott, Kans., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1, strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert the word "forty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM MAHONE,
P. B. PLUMB,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
N. D. WALLACE,
W. H. WADE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. It is only 4 o'clock and we have had but one speech to-day. There are a number of other gentlemen desiring to speak, and if we are ever going to dispose of the bill I trust the Senate will continue its consideration at least during the regular hours of the business day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us sit it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] submits a motion, which is not debatable, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. I was going to appeal to my friend from Illinois. There are several Senators who wish to make brief remarks. I am one; but I am not quite prepared to go on to-night, though it is owing to no want of diligence on my part. The Senator can certainly soon have a vote on his bill. There is no purpose, I can assure him, of any delay that will work injury to the bill. He is certain to have a vote within a few hours now, whenever the few hours come that gentlemen can be heard. I do not see why we should be put to the inconvenience of a late session.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope I may be allowed to say a word.

I do not think that I can be justly charged with being disposed to ask any unreasonable thing of the Senate. This report has been before the Senate now for many days. I have asked the Senate to consider it from day to day. I have heard the same statement from the Senator from Massachusetts that he was not quite ready to address the Senate upon this bill two or three days ago and on yesterday. I think the Senator has had a tolerably reasonable time in which to get ready. If he is not ready, perhaps some other Senator who desires to speak is ready.

We certainly are not going to come to a conclusion on this bill, if we run along with one speech a day, before the end of the session, and the result will be, inevitably, the defeat of this measure, a measure in which the people of this country are intensely interested.

I am not in favor of stifling debate; I desire that Senators may have an opportunity to express themselves; but I propose that this subject shall be brought to a conclusion within a time that will give the other House an opportunity of acting upon the report after we dispose of it. If we are in good faith wanting to pass a bill, let us go on with its consideration with a view of coming to the end of the consideration of the subject.

Now, if the Senator and the Senate will give unanimous consent that we vote to-morrow at any hour during the day—I do not care whether it is 4 o'clock or some time before we adjourn—if there is no objection to that arrangement I am content that the consideration of the report shall go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the vote shall be taken on this report to-morrow before adjournment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOM. Now, I have no objection to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 14, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 13th day of January, 1887.

CONSULS.

John T. Campbell, of California, to be consul of the United States at Auckland, to fill a vacancy.

Henry H. Pendleton, of Wheeling, W. Va., to be consul of the United States at Southampton, vice William Thomson, deceased.

POSTMASTER.

W. T. Cox, to be postmaster at McKinney, Tex., vice James W. Thomas, term expired.

WITHDRAWAL.

The nomination of William W. Merritt, to be postmaster at McKinney, Tex., is withdrawn.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate January 13, 1887.

MINISTER RESIDENT.

Hugh A. Dinsmore, to be minister resident and consul-general of the United States to Corea.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 13, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

GRADES OF OFFICES IN ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with inclosures, a draught of a bill to effect a re-arrangement of the grades of offices in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES M'CAFFERTY AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a report of the Secretary of War, stating, in compliance with a provision of the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882, the amounts due Charles McCafferty and D. and C. P. Dull, contractors on locks on the Great Kanawha River, on account of the losses resulting from changes in the contract.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this communication under the rules of the House should go to the Committee on Claims, but the information was called for in a bill reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WILLIAM H. COOK, SR., AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact by that court in the case of William H. Cook, sr., against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2920) amending section 3749 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2791) to provide for an American register for the steamer Nuevo Moctezuma, of Philadelphia, Pa.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DUNN. An exact and identical copy of that bill has been unanimously reported from the Committee of the House on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests. The bill provides simply to grant an American register to a vessel which was wrecked in foreign waters, rebuilt in an American ship-yard, and is owned by American citizens. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. REED. I think that bill had better be laid aside for the present.

Mr. DUNN. It has been considered by the Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, and, as I have stated, is an exact copy of a bill reported by that committee.

Mr. REED. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. This bill has been considered by the committee, and unanimously reported.

Mr. TUCKER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order. The Chair is now presenting to the House bills from the Senate; and on the presentation of the bill (S. 2791) the gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that it be now considered.

Mr. TUCKER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The call for the regular order is equivalent to an objection. The bill will be referred to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were read twice, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 2619) authorizing a settlement of the claim of Hiram Berdan, assignee of the Berdan Fire-Arms Manufacturing Company—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 3052) to extend the time for filing claims in the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to July 31, 1801"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. COMPTON, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. HIRES, for to-day, on account of important business.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. Yesterday the Chair laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas with amendments by the Senate, and a request by that body for a committee of conference. The bill was erroneously referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It should have gone to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In this case a conference is asked by the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and the conference agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to consider the Senate amendments at this time with a view to non-concurrence and agreeing to a conference.

Mr. MORRISON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Public Lands is discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it is referred to the Committee on Claims.

COINAGE OF SILVER.

Mr. BLAND. If in order at this time, I desire to present a privileged resolution from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to the House how many dollars' worth of silver bullion was purchased each month and how many dollars' worth was coined in each month of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886; also, how many dollars' worth of silver bullion was purchased, and how many coined in each of the months of July, August, September, October, November, and December of 1886; also, whether the law requiring the purchase and coinage of not less than two millions' worth of bullion per month has been complied with.

Mr. BLAND. I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILBUR F. COGGSWELL.

Mr. BUCHANAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10661) to increase the pension of Wilbur F. Coggswell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. NEGLEY, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution authorizing the printing of one thousand additional copies of the report of the Board of Managers of the National Soldiers' Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

THE TRADE-DOLLAR.

Mr. SCOTT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That —— —— after the hour for the consideration of bills under clause 5, Rule XXIV, be set apart for the consideration of the bill (S. 199) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand the objection to my request in regard to the bill (H. R. 1413) is withdrawn.

Mr. TUCKER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for by the gentleman from Virginia, and is the consideration of business called up by the Committee on the Judiciary under the special order of the House.

BENJAMIN P. LOYALL.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill (S. 2848) for the relief of Benjamin P. Loyall, of the State of Virginia, and I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be put upon its passage.

Mr. DUNN. I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Regular order.

BOUNDARIES BETWEEN NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY.

Mr. HAMMOND. I call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 7094) to ratify and confirm an agreement made between the commissioners appointed on the part of the State of New York and the commissioners appointed on the part of the State of New Jersey respecting the location of the northern boundary line between the States of New York and New Jersey, and the replacing and erecting of monuments thereon, bearing date the 7th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1883.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Henry R. Pierson, Elias W. Leavenworth, and Chauncey M. Depew, commissioners duly appointed on the part of the State of New York, and Abraham Browning, Thomas N. McCarter, and George H. Cook, commissioners duly appointed on the part of the State of New Jersey, for the purpose of negotiating and agreeing upon the true location of the northern boundary line between the States of New York and New Jersey, and also of replacing any monuments that may have become dilapidated or been removed on said boundary line, and of erecting new ones, have executed a certain agreement in duplicate, which is contained in the words following:

"An agreement made the 7th day of June, in the year 1883, between Henry R. Pierson, Elias W. Leavenworth, and Chauncey M. Depew, commissioners on the part of the State of New York, and Abraham Browning, Thomas N. McCarter, and George H. Cook, commissioners on the part of the State of New Jersey.

"Whereas by the first section of chapter 340 of the laws of the State of New York for the year 1880 it was recited, among other things, that whereas, by an act of the Legislature passed the 26th day of May, 1875, the regents of the University of the State of New York were authorized and directed, in connection with the authorities of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, respectively, to replace any monuments which have become dilapidated or been removed on the boundary lines of those States, and it was thereby declared that the lines originally laid down and marked with monuments by the several joint commissioners duly appointed for that purpose, and which have since been acknowledged and legally recognized by the several States interested, as the limits of their territory and jurisdiction, are the boundary lines of said States, irrespective of want of conformity to the verbal descriptions thereof; and by the second section of the same chapter of the laws of the State of New York the said regents were authorized and empowered to designate and appoint three of their number as commissioners to meet such commissioners as may have been or may be appointed on the part of the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, or either of them, and with such last-named commissioners, as soon as may be, to proceed to ascertain and agree upon the location of said lines as originally established and marked with monuments; and in case any monuments are found dilapidated or removed from their original location, said commissioners are authorized to replace them, in a durable manner, in their original positions, and to erect such additional monuments at such places on said lines as they may deem necessary for the proper designation of the boundary lines of said States; and

"Whereas, also, the above-named Henry R. Pierson, Elias W. Leavenworth, and Chauncey M. Depew have been duly designated and appointed, by the said regents of the University of the State of New York, commissioners on the part of said State for the purposes mentioned in the said act; and

"Whereas, also, by an act of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, entitled 'An act appointing commissioners to locate the northern boundary line between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to replace and erect monuments thereon,' approved April 13, 1876, the governor of the State of New Jersey was authorized to appoint three commissioners, with power, on the part of said State of New Jersey, to meet any authorities on the part of the State of New York who may be duly authorized, and with them to negotiate and agree upon the true location of the said boundary line between the States of New York and New Jersey, and also to replace any monuments which may have become dilapidated or been removed on said boundary lines, and to erect new ones, which agreement it was thereby enacted should be in writing, and signed and sealed by the authorities of the State of New York and the commissioners of the State of New Jersey; and

"Whereas the above-named Abraham Browning, Thomas N. McCarter, and George H. Cook have been duly appointed commissioners on the part of the State of New Jersey under said act; and

"Whereas by a supplement to the last said act, approved on the 25th day of March, 1881, the commissioners under the last said act were, in addition to the authority conferred by the last said act, also authorized, in their discretion, to proceed to ascertain and agree upon the location of the northern boundary line between the States of New York and New Jersey, as originally established and marked with monuments; and in case any monuments are found dilapidated or removed from their original location, said commissioners were authorized to renew and replace them in a durable manner in their original positions, and to erect such additional monuments at such places on said line as they may deem necessary for the proper designation of the boundary line of said States; and

"Whereas the said commissioners, acting for and on behalf of their respective States, have entered upon the performance of the duties imposed upon them by the said acts, and have, in pursuance of the authority to them severally given as aforesaid, agreed, and hereby do agree, as follows:

"First. The line extending from the Hudson River on the east to the Delaware on the west, as the same was laid down and marked with monuments in 1774, by William Wickham and Samuel Gale, commissioners on the part of the then Colony of New York, duly appointed for that purpose in pursuance of an act of the Assembly of the Colony of New York passed on the 16th day of February, 1771, entitled 'An act for establishing the boundary or partition line between the Colonies of New York and Nova Cæsarea, or New Jersey, and for confirming titles and possession,' and John Stevens and Walter Rutherford, commissioners on the part of the Colony of New Jersey, duly appointed in pursuance of the act of the Assembly of the Colony of New Jersey passed on the 23d day of September, 1772, entitled 'An act for establishing the boundary or partition line between the Colonies of New York and Nova Cæsarea, or New Jersey, and for confirming titles and possession,' which said line has since been acknowledged and recognized by the two States as the limit of their respective territory and jurisdiction, shall, notwithstanding its want of conformity to the verbal description thereof, as recited by said commissioners, continue to be the boundary or partition line between the said two States: Provided, That wherever upon said line the location of one or more of the monuments erected by said commissioners in 1774 has been lost, and can not otherwise be definitely fixed and determined, then and in that case, and in every case where it is required to establish intervening points on said line, a straight line drawn between the nearest adjacent monuments whose localities are ascertained shall be understood to be, and shall be, the true boundary line.

"Second. The monumental marks by which said boundary line shall hereafter be known and recognized are hereby declared to be, first, the original monuments of stone erected in 1774 along said line by the commissioners aforesaid, as the same have been restored and re-established in their original positions by Edward A. Bowser, surveyor on the part of New Jersey, and Henry W. Clarke, surveyor on the part of New York, duly appointed by the parties hereto; second, the new monuments of granite erected by the aforesaid surveyors at intervals of one mile, more or less, along said line, and numbered consecutively, beginning from the Hudson River, and severally marked on the northerly side with the letters N. Y., and on the southerly side with the letters N. J.; and, third, the monuments of granite erected by the aforesaid surveyors at intervening points on said line at its intersection with public roads, railroads, and rivers, and severally marked by them on the northerly side with the letters N. Y., and on the southerly side with the letters N. J.; and, fourth, the terminal monuments erected at the western terminus of said line at the confluence of the Delaware and Navesink Rivers, and the terminal monument erected on the brow of the rock called the Palisades, near the eastern terminus, and the rock lying and being at the foot of the Palisades, on the bank of the Hudson River, and marked as the original terminal monument of said line established in 1774, as the same are described in a joint report made to the parties hereto by Elias W. Leavenworth, commissioner on the part of New York, and George H. Cook, commissioner on the part of New Jersey.

"Third. The field-books of said surveyors, containing the descriptions of the locations of the several monuments erected by them, and of the witness marks thereto, the report of said surveyors containing the account of their work in ascertaining and marking said line, together with the topographical map of said line and the vicinity thereof, and the several documents and books of record containing the transactions of the parties aforesaid, having been duly authenticated and attested by the signatures of the said commissioners, and placed on the file in the offices of the secretaries of state of the two States, shall constitute the permanent and authentic records of said boundary line, and are hereby adopted by the parties hereto and made part of this agreement.

"Fourth. This agreement shall become binding on the two States when confirmed by the Legislatures thereof respectively, and when confirmed by the Congress of the United States.

"In witness whereof the said commissioners have hereto set their hands and seals, in duplicate, this 7th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1883.

Therefore—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the aforesaid agreement, and every article, clause, matter, and thing therein contained shall be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed on the part of the United States.

The Committee on the Judiciary recommended an amendment making the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Congress of the United States does hereby consent to the aforesaid agreement, and every article, clause, matter, and thing therein contained.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of great importance that there should be no uncertainty about this boundary. It has been established by the States, and the constitutional consent of Congress is all that is necessary to perfect it. The committee ask that the bill be amended so as to use the constitutional expression "consent" rather than "confirm," which is used in the bill. I am not aware that any one desires to make any remarks upon the subject, and I therefore demand the previous question upon the amendment and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMMOND. The title of the bill was amended so as to read:

A bill to give the consent of the Congress to an agreement made between the commissioners appointed on the part of the State of New York and the commissioners appointed on the part of the State of New Jersey respecting the location of the northern boundary line between the States of New York and New Jersey, and the replacing and erecting of monuments thereon, bearing date the 7th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1883.

Mr. HAMMOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL TERMS OF UNITED STATES COURTS, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 10040) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City, Miss.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the counties of Marion, Perry, Green, Jackson, Harrison, and Hancock shall remain a part of the southern judicial district of Mississippi, and shall be known as the southern division of said district; and courts for the transaction of business pertaining to the persons and property in said southern division shall be held at the town of Mississippi City, in the county of Harrison, on the first Mondays of February and August in each year, and continue four weeks if the business so long requires.

SEC. 2. That the said court to be held at Mississippi City, as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be possessed of and shall exercise all the powers and jurisdiction now possessed or exercised, or which may hereafter be granted to, or exercised by, the court in said district now held at Jackson; and for the purpose of exercising the jurisdiction herein conferred the said southern division shall be a separate judicial district; and all laws regulating and defining how suits against persons or property located or found in judicial districts shall be brought shall be applicable to and govern the bringing of suits in said division, and all laws touching the removal of causes from State courts to United States courts shall apply to said court hereby established.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court now held at Jackson, on demand of either party to any suit now pending in said court and properly belonging to the court at Mississippi City, to make out and certify a copy of the record and proceedings in such suit, and to transmit the same to the clerk of said court at Mississippi City, who shall enter said cause on his docket, and the same shall be proceeded with as if it had been originally brought in said court. The fees for such transcript shall be paid by the party applying for the same.

SEC. 4. That the marshal and clerk of said southern district of Mississippi shall appoint deputies, who shall reside at Mississippi City and act as clerk and marshal of said court.

SEC. 5. That the United States shall not be at any expense in providing for a building or room for the holding of the terms of said court.

Mr. HAMMOND. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. HAMMOND) was read, as follows:

The six counties covered by the bill belong to the southern judicial district, the courts of which are held at Jackson, Miss., causing suitors and witnesses long travel and expense, and heavy costs to the United States in its suits and prosecutions of persons in that territory. Three of the counties border on the Gulf, and their distance from the place of holding courts is a serious obstacle to maritime causes being brought and prosecuted in said courts. The territory is of the lumber sections of the State, and the prosecutions for cutting the timber of the United States in said territory can be prosecuted at the present distance of the court only at heavy expense to persons accused and to the United States for arrests, witnesses' fees, &c.

Your committee therefore think best to locate the court nearer all the business, and report recommending that the bill pass.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose that any one desires to make any remarks upon this bill, unless the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON], who introduced the bill, desires to say something about it. If he does, I will yield him five minutes.

Mr. VAN EATON. I only desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. VAN EATON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding at the close of the second section the words: "All crimes and offenses heretofore committed within said southern division shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed."

Mr. HAMMOND. I have no instructions from the committee with regard to that amendment, but it is obviously proper, and I am informed that its adoption here will speed the passage of the bill elsewhere. Therefore I see no objection to it, and I call for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Before the vote is taken I wish to ask the gentleman how many points there are in the State of Mississippi at which courts are now held.

Mr. HAMMOND. I think there are three.

Mr. MCMILLIN. This makes the fourth.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does it necessitate an increase of the judiciary?

Mr. HAMMOND. Not all.

The amendment of Mr. VAN EATON was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMMOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SERVICE OF PROCESS BY TERRITORIAL COURTS.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 2879) to authorize the service of civil and criminal process issued by Territorial courts within military and Indian reservations and the Yellowstone National Park.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions of the laws now in force relating to the Territorial courts of any of the United States Territories shall be so construed as to authorize the execution and service of any process, civil or criminal, issued out of or by any of said courts, by the officer or person to whom the same may be addressed, within any military or Indian reservation or within the Yellowstone National Park: Provided, That such reservation or park is situated within the exterior limits or bounds of the county or district over which said court has jurisdiction; and when said process, civil or criminal, is executed or served, it shall be with like effect as though such reservation or park was a part of the county or district within which such process is served.

Mr. BENNETT. I call for the previous question on ordering this bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BENNETT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BENNETT. I call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 10658) to provide for terms of the United States district court at Raleigh, N. C., and change the lines between the eastern and western districts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the counties of Chatham, Durham, and Orange, now constituting a part of the western judicial district of North Carolina, shall be, and are hereby, transferred to and made part of the eastern judicial district of North Carolina.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BENNETT. I move to amend the title of the bill so as to read; "A bill to change the lines between the eastern and western districts of North Carolina."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUDGMENTS UPON COUPONS OF MUNICIPAL BONDS.

Mr. TUCKER. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

Mr. CASWELL. I call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 5577) to provide that a judgment in the circuit court of the United States upon an interest coupon of a bond by a municipal corporation shall not be conclusive in a question on the bond when the amount gives jurisdiction to the Supreme Court on appeal.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That where, in any suit that may be brought in the circuit court of the United States against any municipal corporation to recover the amount of any coupon alleged to have been given for interest upon any bond of such municipal corporation, a judgment shall be rendered against such municipal corporation, and the amount of such judgment shall not be sufficient to authorize such corporation to take said cause to the Supreme Court of the United States by appeal or writ of error, then such judgment shall not be conclusive upon such municipal corporation upon any question in any suit brought upon the bond from which said coupon was taken, when such questions shall be raised and presented in any case the amount of which shall be sufficient to bring the same within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States upon appeal or writ of error.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask for the reading of the report on this bill, as it is very short.

The report (by Mr. CASWELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5577) to provide that a judgment in the circuit court of the United States upon an interest coupon of a bond issued by a municipal corporation shall not be conclusive in a question on the bond when the amount gives jurisdiction to the Supreme Court on appeal, report it back to the House and recommend its passage.

The committee think that questions so important as those which often arise in the trial of actions brought in the circuit courts upon municipal bonds should be tried in the circuit and reviewed by the Supreme Court, when the amount involved is sufficient, without the interposition of some former trial and judgment as a bar when the action was not appealable. This bill simply provides that litigants may have that right.

Mr. CASWELL. I demand the previous question on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CASWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JURISDICTION OF CIRCUIT COURTS—REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the first section of an act entitled "An act to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That the circuit courts of the United States shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several States, of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000, and arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, or in which controversy the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners, or in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of different States, in which the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value aforesaid, or a controversy between citizens of the same State, claiming lands under grants of different States, or a controversy between citizens of a State and foreign states, citizens, or subjects, in which the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value aforesaid, and shall have exclusive cognizance of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, except as otherwise provided by law, and concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of the crimes and offenses cognizable by them. But no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a circuit or district court; and no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, or in which he shall be found at the time of serving such process or commencing such proceedings, except as hereinafter provided; and where the controversy is between citizens of different States, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant; nor shall any circuit or district court have cognizance of any suit founded on contract in favor of an assignee, unless a suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover thereon if no assignment had been made, except in cases of bills of exchange; and the circuit courts shall also have appellate jurisdiction from the district courts, under the regulations and restrictions prescribed by law."

That the second section of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That any suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given original jurisdiction by the preceding section, which may now be pending, or which may hereafter be brought, in any State court, may be removed by the defendant or defendants therein to the circuit court of the United States for the proper district whenever it is made to appear from the application of such defendant or defendants that his or their defense depends in whole or in part upon a correct construction of some provision of the Constitution or law of the United States, or treaty made by their authority; and any other suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by the preceding section, and which are now pending, or which may hereafter be brought, in any State court, may be removed into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein: Provided, That such defendant or defendants are non-residents of the State in which the suit is pending; and when in any suit mentioned in this section there shall be a controversy which is wholly between citizens of different States, and which can be fully determined as between them, then either one or more of the defendants actually interested in such controversy may remove said suit into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district. And where a suit is now pending, or may be hereafter brought, in any State court, in which there is a controversy between a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought and a citizen of another State, such citizen of another State, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, may remove such suit into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district, at any time before the trial thereof, when it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in such State court."

That section 3 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That whenever any party entitled to remove any suit mentioned in the next preceding section, except in such cases as are provided for in the last clause of said section, may desire to remove such suit from a State court to the circuit court of the United States, he may make and file a petition in such suit in such State court at the time, or any time before the defendant is required by the laws of the State or the rule of the State court in which such suit is brought to answer or plead to the declaration or complaint of the plaintiff, for the removal of such suit into the circuit court to be held in the district where such suit is pending, and shall make and file therewith a bond, with good and sufficient surety, for his or their entering in such circuit court, on the first day of its then next session, a copy of the record in such suit, and for paying all costs that may be awarded by the said circuit court if said court shall hold that such suit was wrongfully or improperly removed thereto, and also for their appearing and entering special bail in such suit if special bail was originally requisite therein. It shall then be the duty of the State court to accept said petition and bond, and proceed no further in such suit, and any bail that may have been orignally taken shall be discharged; and the said copy being entered as aforesaid in said circuit court of the United States, the cause shall then proceed in the same manner as if it had been originally commenced in the said circuit court; and if in any action commenced in a State court the title of land be concerned, and the parties are citizens of the same State, and the matter in dispute exceed the sum or value of $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value being made to appear, one or more of the plaintiffs or defendants, before the trial, may state to the court, and make affidavit if the court require it, that he or they claim and shall rely upon a right or title to the land under a grant from a State, and produce the original grant, or an exemplification of it, except where the loss of public records shall put it out of his or their power, and shall move that any one or more of the adverse party inform the court whether he or they claim a right or title to the land under a grant from some other State, the party or parties so required shall give such information, or otherwise not be allowed to plead such grant or give it in evidence upon the trial; and if he or they inform that he or they do claim under such grant, any one or more of the party moving for such information may then, on petition and bond, as hereinbefore mentioned in this act, remove the cause for trial to the circuit court of the United States next to be holden in such district; and any one of either party removing the cause shall not be allowed to plead or give evidence of any other title than that by him or them stated as aforesaid as the ground of his or their claim; and the trial of issues of fact in the circuit courts shall, in all suits except those of equity and of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, be by jury.

"That the circuit courts of the United States shall not take original cognizance of any suit of a civil nature, either at common law or in equity, between a corporation created or organized by or under the laws of any State and a citizen of any State in which such corporation at the time the cause of action accrued may have been carrying on any business authorized by the law creating it, except in cases arising under the patent or copyright laws, and in like cases in which said courts are authorized by this act to take original cognizance of suits between citizens of the same State; nor shall any such suit between such a corporation and a citizen or citizens of a State in which it may be doing business be removed to any circuit court of the United States, except in like cases in which such removal is authorized by the foregoing provision in suits between citizens of the same State."

That section 10 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That section 640 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That this act shall not affect the jurisdiction over or disposition of any suit removed from the court of any State, or suit commenced in any court of the United States, before the passage hereof."

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill has passed the House of Representatives in the last three Congresses, in substantially the same form as the present. I propose, however, to state briefly what will be the effect of the amendments which the bill proposes to make in the existing law.

The object of the bill is to diminish the jurisdiction of the circuit courts and the Supreme Court of the United States, to promote the convenience of the people, and to lessen the burden and expense of litigation. The methods employed by the bill are, first, to raise the minimum amount giving the circuit courts jurisdiction from $500 to $2,000. In the second place, we propose to take away from the circuit courts of the United States all jurisdiction of controversies between the assignees of promissory notes and the makers thereof, unless suit could have been maintained in such courts had no assignment been made. In the next place, the bill proposes to take away wholly from the circuit courts the jurisdiction now exercised by them over controversies in which one of the parties is a corporation organized under the laws of one State and doing business in another State. We propose to provide that the circuit courts shall have no jurisdiction over controversies of that sort; that whenever a corporation organized under the laws of one State shall carry on its business in another State, the corporation shall, for judicial purposes, be considered as a citizen of the State in which it is carrying on business.

These are the three methods by which the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, in respect to the subject-matter, is proposed to be diminished. There is another provision in the bill, in relation to the removal of causes from State to Federal courts. The provisions of the bill take away all right on the part of the plaintiff in a suit to remove his cause from a State to a Federal court after he has elected the forum in which to bring suit. The bill further provides that wherever the cause of action arises under the Constitution of the United States, or a law or treaty thereof, the defendant who is sued in a State court upon such a cause of action may remove the cause to a Federal court, provided he shall make it appear to the court in which the case is pending that his defense depends upon a proper construction of the Constitution of the United States, or some law or treaty thereof.

I desire to call attention to another feature of the bill, in relation to the removal of causes. The bill does not propose to repeal the act of 1867, which authorized either the plaintiff or the defendant in a suit pending in a State court to remove the cause from that court into a Federal court upon the ground of prejudice. That act is re-enacted, with a provision to this effect: that the plaintiff or the defendant, before he can remove the cause from the State to the Federal court, must satisfy the judge or court having jurisdiction of the cause of the truth of the matters alleged in his application for removal.

This embodies, substantially, all the changes in the act. The effect of these changes I beg to refer to for a moment. The minimum jurisdiction of $500 was placed in the original judiciary act in 1789, and it has been the law ever since. The population of the country then was 4,000,000, and now it is over 54,000,000. The amount of business of the country in the courts then and now sustain no comparison whatever.

The next proposition is to deny the right of an assignee of a promissory note to bring suit in a Federal court. That was the law from 1789 until 1875. For ninety years the assignee of a promissory note, or any other chose in action, could not bring suit in a Federal court, unless a suit could have been maintained had no assignment been made.

The increase of jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, from that change of law in 1875, has multiplied the business in that court enormously, while it diminishes the business in the circuit courts, which are overloaded everywhere now. It also diminishes the business in the Supreme Court of the United States, which is three years behind upon its docket.

The withdrawal of the right to remove causes from State to Federal courts in the manner provided in this bill, after the plaintiff has selected his forum, will largely diminish the business in the circuit courts of the United States, and also the business in the Supreme Court of the United States in cases over $5,000.

The other proposition is to take away from the circuit courts of the United States jurisdiction over controversies between corporations created by the laws of a State and which go into other States and open offices and carry on business. For judicial purposes we make such corporations citizens of that State, and compel them to sue in the forum or in the courts of the State in which they carry on their business. Over one-third of the business now in the circuit courts of the United States and in the Supreme Court of the United States spring from this very jurisdiction to which I call your attention.

And we deprive such corporation of the right to transfer that case or change it from a State to a Federal court.

There is another provision in the bill to which I wish to call attention, and that is, it repeals section 640 of the Revised Statutes, which empowers or authorizes a corporation created under an act of Congress, whenever sued in a State court, to remove the cause from such court to a Federal court upon a mere suggestion that the defense of such corporation to the cause of action arises under an act of Congress, or under the laws of Congress. We repeal that statute, and the bill provides whenever a corporation, or any one else, is sued in a State court and the defense of such corporation or individual depends upon a right construction of the laws of Congress, or of the Constitution of the United States, then such cause may be removed. And the bill does not attempt to interfere with the right of appeal in the last resort from the supreme court of a State to the Supreme Court of the United States.

These, Mr. Speaker, substantially are the changes made by the bill, and this, very briefly and substantially, will be the effect if the amendments shall become the law. I demand the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. Before that is done, I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas a question in regard to this bill. I find, on page 6 of the bill, a clause that either party to an action pending in the circuit court of the United States may require the other party to show all of their defense, and on the failure of the party thus asked to show the title upon which they rely they are deprived of the subsequent plea in reference to that right.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the law now.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; that is the old law.

Mr. TAULBEE. My question is as to why it is proper to put that in this bill. If that is the law now why should we re-enact it?

Mr. CULBERSON. It only gives the whole section, as it is amended. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULBERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS, BAY CITY, MICH.

Mr. ROGERS. I call up for consideration from the House Calendar the bill (S. 1458) to provide for holding terms of the circuit court and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan at Bay City in said district, and ask for the reading of the bill and the majority report.

The report (by Mr. ROGERS) was read, as follows:

At an early day in the present session this committee reported a similar bill, for the purposes contemplated by this bill, and recommended its passage. The committee refer to that report as furnishing ample reasons for the passage of this bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] for eighteen minutes.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of making any factious opposition to this bill, but simply to enter my protest against its passage in its present form.

This bill, reported from the Judiciary Committee of this House, is one which practically divides the judicial circuit of the eastern district of Michigan. The district which I represent lies within that judicial circuit. It is proposed by this bill to establish a circuit and district court at the city of Bay City, in what is known as the Saginaw Valley.

I come from the Saginaw Valley, and from a city which is only 13 miles away from the place designated in this bill as the location of this new court.

I assume, sir, that if it is proper to divide that circuit at all, the place designated for the holding of the court ought to be that place within the district which is most accessible for the litigants and witnesses to reach. The place from which I come, East Saginaw, as I have said, is but 13 miles from the point where it is proposed to establish the court, and yet a glance at the map of Michigan will show that East Saginaw is the great railroad center for all the central portion of the State of Michigan. Railway lines lead into it from all directions, and railways radiate from it to all points of the compass. It is not so with the city below; and the only point that can be urged in that respect in favor of Bay City, as the point for the location of the court, is that it is nearer to the mouth of the river and more accessible to navigation. But, Mr. Speaker, I point you to the fact that we, too, are located upon the same river, and that the same boats that pass their docks and through their bridges come to us and take our commerce and carry it to them.

The business of our city is being done now upon wheels largely instead of by water, and our city, East Saginaw, is the commercial metropolis of the great Saginaw valley, the great salt and lumber producing region of the State of Michigan.

I make, Mr. Speaker, this point: if we are to divide the eastern district of the State of Michigan at all, let us locate the court at that point where it will be most accessible to the people who have business to transact with it. Let me call your attention for a few moments to the situation as it now exists as between these two points, and see exactly where we stand. I shall not occupy very much time. I take it that the statistics of the country from official sources offer a fair index to the relative commercial importance of these two places. They are classed together, as you will observe. Let me say to you that during the year 1885 there were handled at the post-office in East Saginaw, 2,123,000 pieces of mail matter, as against 1,300,000 in the city of Bay City.

The net revenue of the post-office during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, was at Bay City $8,461.49; while in East Saginaw it reached $14,717. This year—and I take these figures from the official report of the Postmaster-General, which lies on my desk—the revenues of the post-office in East Saginaw reached $16,691.65 against $9,819 in the other city, where they propose to locate the court.

In our city we did a business in our banks of loans of $3,512,184.94, as against $1,963,832.21 in the city where they propose to locate this court.

Mr. Speaker, I could pursue the same line of contrast between these two places in all other branches of business, and all of their details; but I have not the time, neither have I the disposition to weary the House. But from the statistics of our business, both financial and commercial, I will guarantee to you that the business of East Saginaw exceeds by 25 per cent. that done at this point 13 miles below us, where, according to the report of the Judiciary Committee, it is proposed to locate the court.

I understand, sir, that I am fighting against odds. I understand that the Judiciary Committee, for whom I have the most profound respect, have made this report recommending the location of this court at Bay City; but let me say to you, with all due deference to the committee, I think that a grave mistake has been made. Unfortunately for us, there is no member upon the Judiciary Committee from the State of Michigan; and the gentleman who made this report and examined the subject has taken it, as we all do generally, on representation, the examination of maps, histories, and reports; and our Bay City friends have hitherto not been idle in this respect, but have been extremely vigilant, active, energetic, and enterprising.

Mr. RANNEY. Both sides were well heard.

Mr. TARSNEY. Well listened to; thank you; yes. [Laughter.]

Twice before, as you have learned from the reading of this report, reports have been made in favor of the location of the court at Bay City; but never before have the interests of East Saginaw been presented either to the Judiciary Committee or to the House; and I stand here to-day as an humble representative of that great valley simply to enter my solemn protest against the passage of this bill, and to ask the House, seeing that there will be a mistake in making this location at Bay City, to let us either postpone the consideration for the present or else let it not pass the House at all.

A report has been read which was made in the Forty-eighth Congress by one of my colleagues from Michigan, who at that time was a member of the Judiciary Committee—I refer to my friend Mr. MAYBURY—relative to the location of a United States court at Bay City. That report, which I hold in my hand, he made as a representative of the State of Michigan, in the interest of the great Saginaw Valley, and not in favor of Bay City, as against East Saginaw, for, as will be seen, there was no bill pending for the establishment of a court at East Saginaw; hence there was no representation made of the great commercial importance of East Saginaw, or its facilities for doing business as compared with Bay City. The report is only a general recognition of the commercial importance of the Saginaw Valley as indicating the necessity for a court at some point within it. But I quote the language of the report.

He says:

Bay City, with its immediate surroundings, embraces a population of 35,000. Within 15 miles distance therefrom are the two rapidly growing cities of East Saginaw and Saginaw.

Mr. Speaker, these two rapidly growing cities that are referred to in this report comprise to-day, with their suburbs, over 50,000 inhabitants. I have here in my hand a report, and I am giving you statistics and giving you figures from the record that show that our vote, our population, our commercial importance far exceed those of this town down the river. I refer with pleasure to this report, and I refer to my colleague from the State of Michigan, who will stand ready—I say this by authority—who is ready to stand here on this floor to-day and say that, had the interests of the Saginaws been represented to the committee two years ago when that report was made, the report would have been made in favor of East Saginaw and against Bay City.

What, then, are we to do? Are we to sit here and simply say that because this great committee, for which, as I have said, I have the most profound regard, have relied, I fear, too strongly upon the previous reports that have been made in favor of this place down the river instead of upon the facts and conditions as they exist to-day, that we shall pass this bill? One of these reports was made ten years ago, at a time when East Saginaw—and I was a member of the committee that did it—protested against the establishment of a court at Bay City. We did not present East Saginaw, but we did say to this House and to the Committee on the Judiciary that when the time came that the demands of business required the establishment of a United States court in the Saginaw Valley we of Saginaw desired to be heard. No bill was presented, no report was made in favor of East Saginaw, and its interests were never represented, as I have before said, and I am only trying in my poor, mild, and meek way to represent our people here to-day, and to place this matter before this House and to caution you not to make the mistake of establishing the court where it will be a matter of inconvenience instead of convenience for litigants to go to transact their business.

I oppose this bill, Mr. Speaker, for another reason. It is too indefinite in its terms to accomplish results. I say so with all deference to this great committee. Now, mark you, the language of this bill simply provides for the holding of terms of court in the eastern district of Michigan at Bay City. What does that mean? The court to-day is held in the city of Detroit, 108 miles away. Two separate and distinct lines of railway connect the Saginaw Valley with Detroit. It simply means that the judge and the United States marshal and his deputies shall go on a junketing tour from Detroit to Bay City to hold a term of court. But within what district? Within what jurisdiction? Where, I ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], do you fix the line of this jurisdiction? How many counties will you take in? Will you say from Hillsdale, in the extreme southern limit of the State, people may be summoned to go past the city of Detroit and 108 miles further to this Bay City court? Or do you propose to carve out from the eastern district of Michigan a certain number of counties and make them a distinct district by itself? You do not do it by this bill; and under the terms of the bill, if I read it aright, a citizen from the extreme limit of that district might be summoned away from where the court is held now and subjected to all these inconveniences by the whim and caprice of somebody who did not like him—and litigants generally never like one another. I point that out as one imperfection in the bill. If you had said you would take a certain number of counties out of the district, specifying the territory and saying that shall be the district, it would not be open to the objection I here urge to it.

Now, as I said, I am not here for the purpose of making a factious opposition to this bill. I will not do it. But I caution this House against making a grievous mistake. It is not so much a matter of importance to me as it is to the people of the eastern district of Michigan, who will be inconvenienced by the passage of this bill and by the emasculation of a district which has now fixed and definite limits. I protest therefore against the passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, if in order, I desire to submit a motion. Is it in order to move that the further consideration of this bill be indefinitely postponed?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Arkansas has yielded the floor for debate only that motion would not be in order.

Mr. TARSNEY. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield for that motion?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not yield.

Mr. TARSNEY. The gentleman from Arkansas does not yield, and of course I must accept the situation as I find it; and I say, standing here as a Representative of a district within the eastern judicial district of Michigan, I enter my protest against the passage of this bill.

Mr. CALDWELL. Can you not move to amend?

Mr. TARSNEY. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to move an amendment to this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman the rule and the practice of the House. When a gentleman who is entitled to the floor, and has control of a bill, yields a part of his own time for the purpose of debate only to another gentleman, the gentleman to whom the time is yielded can make no motion in regard to the bill; that is to say, he can not take the control of it away from the gentleman who is entitled to it.

Mr. TARSNEY. I observe, Mr. Speaker, that the rules of the House are very elastic.

Mr. ROGERS. The only controversy here is between two rival cities, Bay City and East Saginaw. This question has been before Congress for the last sixteen years in one form or another, and this is the first time that the Senate and the House have agreed as to just how this bill should be passed. As early as 1870 the Judiciary Committee of the House and the House itself passed a similar bill. In the present session of the present Congress the Senate of the United States have passed the bill now under consideration. During the last session of the present Congress the Judiciary Committee gave both these rival cities, through their delegations, present here, ample and full hearing upon every question that could possibly be raised in the discussion, and the Judiciary Committee of the House agreed that this court ought to be established at Bay City.

Now the reasons for it. There are three important classes of business to be disposed of by this court—the commercial business, the land business, and the admiralty business. So far as the commercial business is concerned, it will be as well provided for at Bay City as it would be at Saginaw, the distance between the two cities being only about 13 miles, and the schedule, as published in the Saginaw papers, showing that there is railroad transportation every hour in the day between the two cities. So far as the land business is concerned, the great bulk of it lies nearer to Bay City, where we propose to locate the court, than to Saginaw, and the facilities for parties to get to either of these places are practically equal. But for the admiralty business, which is the most important of all the business of the court, Bay City is much more convenient, and that has been the controlling consideration in establishing this court at the city nearest to the lake, and where there is deep water for the accommodation of all classes of shipping.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is the distance between the two places?

Mr. ROGERS. Only 13 miles; Saginaw being that much farther south and that much farther away from the lake than Bay City, and the water between the two places being so shallow during a considerable portion of the year that it shuts out from Saginaw a large proportion of the tonnage which reaches Bay City. As I have said, the controlling object has been to give the greatest possible facility for the transaction of the admiralty business upon that great lake shore. I need not say that the tonnage of Bay City is infinitely larger than that of Saginaw, because the largest steamers do not reach Saginaw at all during a very considerable portion of the year. Having said this much, I have nothing further to say, and am now ready to have a vote upon the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. I know nothing about the relative merits of these cities, and my only interest in the bill is in having it perfected. Is it contemplated by the first section of the bill that additional terms of this court shall be held in the district?

Mr. ROGERS. In the same district.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; but are these terms of court which are to be held at Bay City additional to the number of terms now held in the district?

Mr. ROGERS. They are.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They will then entail additional expense?

Mr. ROGERS. Only so far as the court is concerned.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Precisely so, and so far?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes. That is all.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let me ask another question. As I read the bill, the jurisdiction of the court at these different points is not determined. In other words, whether the term is held at Bay City or at Detroit the territorial jurisdiction is the same?

Mr. ROGERS. Precisely. The bill does not change the districts at all.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then, can any person in the district be sued at either place?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes. That, however, is left to be regulated, as in a great many other places, by the district and circuit judges, as I understand.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But by the bill I see no such power of regulation given to the judges.

Mr. ROGERS. That is the general law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have no objection to this bill except that it seems to me that the object sought to be accomplished by the committee is, to say the least, enveloped in fog.

Mr. ROGERS. In response to that, Mr. Speaker, I have only to say that this bill has had the careful consideration of both the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, from which it comes, and the Judiciary Committee of the House, with due reference to the existing law, and they believe it to be amply sufficient. I now demand the previous question upon the third reading of the passage of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They, however, are not infallible.

Mr. ROGERS. Not at all. I do not know anybody but one person that is.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And he is not a member of this House.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now to offer an amendment to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas has demanded the previous question upon the third reading of the bill.

Mr. TARSNEY. I hope it will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is not ordered by the House, amendments will be in order.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ROGERS. I call for a division.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 63, noes 70.

So the previous question was not ordered.

Mr. TARSNEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to consume time upon this bill. I simply desire to move an amendment, which is this: Strike out in the fifth line the words "Bay City," and insert instead the words "East Saginaw."

I say that, Mr. Speaker, because if this bill, which I deem now imperfect in its provisions, is to pass this House it should pass in such a shape that it will accommodate the community that deserves to be accommodated, so that this court shall not go to a by-place, entailing inconvenience upon litigants.

As I have already stated, our city is the commercial metropolis of the central portion of the State; it is the great railway center of Central Michigan; and our friends down the river, for whom I have the highest regard, are simply, as we term them, a suburban population.

I move to amend the bill by striking out, in the fifth line, the words "Bay City" and inserting "East Saginaw."

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. TARSNEY.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR addressed the Chair.

Mr. TARSNEY. On this amendment I demand the previous question.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] retained the floor until the amendment had been reported. Under the rules a proposition to amend is not considered before the House until it has been stated by the Chair or read by the Clerk. The gentleman from Michigan retained the floor until his amendment had been read, and then demanded the previous question.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I understood myself to have been recognized by the Chair as occupying the floor, before the previous question was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman; but the gentleman from Michigan retained his place on the floor and demanded the previous question as the Chair thinks he had the right to do under the practice of the House. The Chair when he recognized the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] was not aware that the gentleman from Michigan was retaining the floor.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 62, noes 75.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I propose to occupy a single moment because, having considered this question, I believe the merits are with the bill as reported. The main part of the business coming to this court must come from the lake. Bay City is on deep water, and is where the business of the lake is. Saginaw is up a shallow stream, away from the lake. There is no occasion for a court of the United States at Saginaw. The court had better be left where it is now than be located there against the convenience of suitors, the interests of business, and everything else but a personal demand.

Mr. SOWDEN. The gentleman will allow me to ask which of these two cities has the larger population; and are they not commercially, so far as this navigable stream is concerned, on an equal footing?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. They constitute practically the same community; but one is on deep water, and is so situated that the business comes to it, while the other is up a narrow stream.

Mr. SOWDEN. Which has the larger population?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I cannot tell; but they are practically the same community.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of reluctance that I differ with my friends on the Judiciary Committee touching this bill. But I reserved the right to oppose it, and I do not think I should be doing my duty as a member of the subcommittee that carefully considered this subject should I fail to express my honest conviction that, if a court is to be established in that part of the country at all, it should be at East Saginaw, and not at Bay City. My friend from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] says there is deep water at Bay City, and that the stream extending up to Saginaw is shallow. But we have a very able and generous Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and if the stream is shallow it can be improved. Some of the surplus in the Treasury of the United States may be used in that way. [Laughter.]

Mr. TARSNEY. It not only may be improved, but it has been.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] will allow me to suggest that this amendment be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not care about that matter. If the gentleman from Ohio desires that it be so referred I shall not oppose the proposition.

I venture to say that I understand this subject just as well as does the gentleman from Ohio; I have given it as much thought and attention. In my judgment the railroad center determines where the court should be, for the convenience of the general public. The railroad center is East Saginaw, not Bay City; and the fact that a few lumber barges and little steamers run out from the wharves at Bay City does not, to my mind, determine that as the place for this court. Moreover, the time is coming when that whole region will be denuded of timber, and when Bay City will cease to have any commerce at all, while Saginaw will grow and thrive as a prosperous manufacturing place. Therefore, though it may be a little bold for me to do so, I set my judgment against the judgment of those who reported this bill, and I believe that the public convenience, as well as justice to the people of Michigan—suitors, witnesses, and jurors—will be best subserved by establishing this court at East Saginaw.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY].

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, my only reason for rising now is because the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] has referred to the character of the river upon which these cities are situated. I desire to say to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio that he does not understand the character of the Saginaw River. There is not a boat that comes to Bay City that can not come to East Saginaw. The largest vessels upon the lakes which enter the mouth of that river can follow its circuitous route a distance of 16 miles, and come to East Saginaw. They not only can, but do.

Mr. LONG. What is the distance between the two cities?

Mr. TARSNEY. Thirteen miles by rail, and 16 miles by the river.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Is there water in the river at all seasons of the year?

Mr. TARSNEY. There is, except when God freezes it.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Or dries it up.

Mr. FISHER. How much water is there in the river?

Mr. TARSNEY. Thanks to nature and the Congress of the United States there is sufficient for all purposes. There is a bar in the river which has sometimes been referred to, upon the removal of which the Government of the United States has expended over $700,000, so that there is a perfectly good channel; and while the depth of water at East Saginaw is not equal to that at Bay City, yet the largest boats that float upon the lake, after loading at Saginaw, will come down the river and clear from Bay City; and this fact has been used in order to show that Bay City is a place of greater commercial importance than East Saginaw, when, in point of fact, vessels simply clear there upon the commerce derived from the Saginaws.

Mr. BRUMM. Are both these cities in the same Congressional district?

Mr. TARSNEY. They are not, sir.

Mr. BRUMM. So I supposed; and this is a fight between the members as to which district shall have this court.

Mr. TARSNEY. I should like to have my colleague from the other district make his explanation.

Mr. ROGERS. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FISHER] as much time as he may desire.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us, for which I appear and others who may follow me in the interest of the bill, is one which has been pending before Congress, since the Forty-first Congress, at which time it passed the House (see CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE, page 4223), and again passed the House in the Forty-fourth Congress (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, second session, page 293). It was also favorably reported to the House by the Judiciary Committee in the Forty-eighth Congress, and has always met with the same opposition that it meets with here to-day, namely, the opposition of a rival city. But while being met with this opposition it has always been decided in favor of locating this Federal court at Bay City, Mich. It has now already passed the Senate during the first session of this Congress, and while it received the unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee of the House, it seems useless on my part to occupy the time of this body in discussing the merits of the measure.

Bay City, the city chosen by the Judiciary Committee for the location for the holding of terms of the Federal courts, is the third city in our State in point of population and commercial importance. Its population, as shown by the last census (June, 1884), including its suburbs, is upwards of 40,000 people, while the country adjacent that will be benefited by the location of these courts at this point is nearly 400,000 people. That this section of our State is rapidly increasing in population, I would merely state that at the time of the passage of this bill by the House in the Forty-first Congress Bay City had a population of but a trifle over 7,000 people, while the country adjacent, and to be benefited by this measure, was not to exceed seventy to eighty thousand people. This was in 1870, which shows an increase of nearly 25 per cent. annually in population.

POPULATION AND GROWTH—COMPARATIVE.

The increase in the population of Bay City has been unequaled by any city in Michigan, which demonstrates that it is the natural location for the future commercial center of Northern Michigan. Its present shipping interests exceed that of any city in the State, and its population exceeds that of any city in Michigan, except Detroit and Grand Rapids, making it justly entitled to the name it has obtained—the "third city" in population as well as manufacturing interests. The following figures show its rapid and unrivaled growth, as compared with East Saginaw:

	Bay City.	East Saginaw.
1860	700	3,000
1865	3,359	.....
1874	13,676	.....
1876	17,000	.....
1880	20,693	19,016
1882	24,500	.....

It will be observed that while Bay City in 1860 had only 700 population to East Saginaw's 3,000, or just one-quarter, in 1870 Bay City had 7,064 to East Saginaw's 14,000, or just one-half, and in 1884, fourteen years later, she had outstripped East Saginaw and had 315 in excess of that city, as is shown by the census of 1884.

The percentage of increase also marks Bay City as certain to remain the metropolis of Northern Michigan as she is to-day. Since 1860 her percentage of increase has been 4,123, while that of East Saginaw has been but 871. Since 1870 Bay City's percentage of increase has been 322, while East Saginaw's has been but 108; or in other words, Bay City has forty times the population she had in 1860, while East Saginaw has only ten times her population of 1860; and Bay City has four times the population she had in 1870, while East Saginaw's population is only twice as great as it was in 1870.

Bay City is the county seat of Bay County. East Saginaw is not the county seat of Saginaw County. Congress will always allow the States to establish seats of justice where they see fit; and when the States establish them Congress in locating United States courts always follows the lead of the States. In my judgment, to do otherwise would be to treat the States with disrespect; and I do not know of a case in the whole history of the country where a United States court has been established at any place other than at county seats.

The tenth Congressional district, which I have the honor to represent, shows a remarkable growth. In 1880 the census showed a population of 111,151, while on the 1st of June, 1884, the date of the last census it showed a population of 156,294, a gain of 45,143. Compare this with the eighth Congressional district, represented by my distinguished friend. In 1880 the population of his district was 160,290, and on June 1, 1884, it was 189,285, showing a growth of only 28,995; a gain in favor of the tenth Congressional district of 26,148.

I desire to call your attention to the growth and the date of organization of Bay and Saginaw Counties. Saginaw County was organized in 1835, and in forty-nine years shows a population of only 75,813. Her area is more than double that of Bay County. Bay County was organized in 1857, twenty-two years later, and in the twenty-seven years of her organization has a population of 51,265.

The following figures, taken from the census report, will show the respective growth of the two counties during the period of the last twenty years:

Year.	Bay County.	Saginaw County.
1864	5,517	19,683
1870	15,900	39,098
1874	24,832	48,409
1880	38,081	59,095
1884	51,265	75,813

The above figures show a gain for Saginaw County during the past ten years of about 51 per cent., while for Bay County they show the remarkable growth and increase for the same period of time of 120 per cent.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the important fact that the object of this bill is to have the court come to the business and where the business of the court is, and by so doing to save the expense of attendance to clients, witnesses, &c. Now, where does the business of a court of this character come from? I submit, Mr. Speaker, if it does not largely come from the marine interests, the admiralty, and land cases. I can not better express this important feature of the bill than by using the exact words of the worthy member from Michigan, who served upon this committee in the Forty-eighth Congress, in reporting this bill favorably to the House. He is a resident of the city of Detroit, and he knew at the time that he made this report, from his own personal knowledge and from the papers heretofore filed in this case, which enabled him to make so full and truthful a report, what the true state of facts was. He says:

The State of Michigan is divided into two judicial districts, designated as the eastern and western districts, respectively. The division line of the respective districts in the southern peninsula of the State extends through the center thereof in a course due north and south from the southerly boundary of the State to the Straits of Mackinaw. The United States court for the eastern district holds its sessions at the city of Detroit, near the southerly boundary of the State, and at the city of Port Huron, in the same general geographical division, distant about 60 miles from the said city of Detroit. By reference to the annual reports of the Attorney-General of the United States it will be seen that for years the aggregate of business transacted in the United States court for the eastern district of Michigan in its sessions at Detroit, both in the multitude of suits and the importance of interests involved therein, is exceeded by but few courts in the United States.

Much of this litigation arises in the rapidly growing portion of the State in the valley of the Saginaw and northerly therefrom. It is with great expense of time and money that litigants come from this remote region to either Detroit or Port Huron, while special hardship is necessarily imposed on those under indictment in their removal for trial to a forum so distant from their homes and witnesses. The bill under consideration provides for a session of the circuit and district courts of the United States at least twice in each year, at Bay City, on the Saginaw River, and distant 108 miles northerly from Detroit. Bay City, with its immediate surroundings, embraces a population of 35,000. Within 15 miles distant therefrom are the two rapidly growing cities of East Saginaw and Saginaw City, with a joint population of 30,000 and upwards. Tributary to the commerce of these cities and the valley in which they are established is a population of at least a quarter of a million. Railroad communication is established between these points and all parts of the State, especially that portion extending northerly therefrom.

The lake commerce gives rise to much litigation which is now disposed of at the sessions of the courts held in Detroit. No expense will attend the establishment of sessions as desired, except that of leasing suitable quarters for the court, which expense will be but a moiety of that which will be saved in mileage fees in the summoning of jurors and witnesses.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill herewith reported do pass.

While our population has so largely increased, our commercial interests have also increased, manufacturing and shipping the past year the enormous amount of nearly 600,000,000 feet of lumber, while the entire output of lumber from the territory benefited by the passage of this bill will exceed 1,000,000,000 feet, and a large amount of shingles and lath. There is also manufactured on the river and the territory known as the Saginaw valley nearly or quite one-third of the entire salt consumed in the United States, it having reached the past year the enormous amount of nearly 4,000,000 barrels.

The citizens of our city are also largely interested in ship-building and ship-owning, and are among the largest owners of vessel and floating property in our State, and it is also the largest in our State as a ship-building point, having constructed and put afloat there in the past five years twenty-five of the largest sized propellers and vessels that float in fresh water, besides a large number of smaller sized and a large amount of repairing at a total cost of two and a half millions of dollars, and they are at the present time building seven propellers, of a tonnage of 2,500 to 3,000 tons each, and that will cost upwards of $1,000,000. These, with the necessary adjuncts pertaining to ship-building and the repairing of a large number of lake craft and the enormous production of lumber and salt, make more or less litigation that necessitates the need of Federal courts.

That there is pressing need of terms of these courts being held in that portion of our State known as the Saginaw valley, there can be no question, as the business of lumber and salt alone has amounted to not less than $15,000,000 annually for the past ten years, and for the past year it will reach the enormous amount of $25,000,000. This large amount is all disposed of outside of our State, and with the immense capital required to carry on the lumber and salt business of the Saginaw valley; therefore partnerships are formed with and a large amount of capital is furnished by residents of other States. Hence, to enforce collections much of the litigation that may and does arise necessitates this measure. The district court is especially necessary to enforce liens on vessels and to try cases of crime against the laws of the United States. Many cases arise of great hardship for cutting timber on homesteads by the homestead settlers on Government lands, and these homesteads in this district are all north of Bay City, and accessible thereto by railroad.

During the year 1885 there were commenced in the United States circuit court at Detroit cases in which one of the parties resided in one of the counties named, and which would be benefited by the passage of this bill, namely:

Saginaw County, eleven cases; the people of Saginaw City, the county seat of this county, petition for this bill.

Isabella County, six cases; Isabella County petitions for the court at Bay City.

Midland County, four cases; Midland County petitions for the court at Bay City.

Bay County, eleven cases; the same number of cases that Saginaw County has.

Cheboygan County, seven cases; it is north of Bay County, and petitions for the court at Bay City.

Tuscola County, three cases; it adjoins Bay County on the east, and petitions for the court at Bay City.

Alcona County, four cases; it asks that the court be established at Bay City.

Alpena County, four cases; it asks that the court be held at Bay City. It is north of Bay City.

Iosco County, three cases; it asks that the court be established at Bay City.

Shiawassee County, four cases; it asks that the court be located at Bay City.

Gratiot County, four cases; making in all fifty-eight cases in the circuit court of the United States for this part of this district commenced in one year and involving over $2,000,000 in money. In every case the suitor had to attend a court which was from 100 to 300 miles distant from his residence to the place of trial. Besides these there were criminal and maritime cases, the number of which I have been unable to obtain.

Besides the above-mentioned, the following counties, each of which is more than 150 miles from Detroit, had no cases, but are liable to have them at any time: Arenac, Ogemaw, Oscoda, Otsego, Presque Isle, Clare, Roscommon, Crawford, and Montmorency.

RAILROADS AND STEAMBOAT NAVIGATION.

The accessibility to Bay City by both water and railroad communication, coupled with its manufacturing and commercial interests, is such as to insure its unflagging and permanent growth and development into a large and important city. Its shipping and other interests have been heretofore set forth; and we now proceed to give its railroad and steamboat facilities, which are unequaled by any city in the valley, and unsurpassed by any city in the State.

Bay City has direct railroad and steamboat communication with all points on the Huron shore, an advantage not accorded to any other city in the State. A shore line of steamers furnish communication with all the cities and villages en route to Alpena, to and from which city these steamers make daily trips.

There is also railroad communication daily each way between Bay City and Alpena. The Michigan Central road also furnishes direct railroad communication to Cheboygan, Mackinaw, Saint Ignace, Marquette, and all intermediate points, the business along the line of which is at present enormous, and constantly increasing. We have also the Michigan Central direct to Jackson, thence to Chicago, and also the same road direct to Detroit; and the Flint and Pere Marquette road as a competing line to the same place, running through East Saginaw as an intermediate point on the line, all passenger trains for which are made up in this city. The Flint and Pere Marquette road runs also direct to Toledo.

The roadbed is also nearly completed, and a company formed to build a road from Bay City, through Midland, Isabella, and other counties west, and having its terminus on Lake Michigan.

It will be observed that the Detroit and Bay City branch of the Michigan Central to Detroit accommodates Tuscola, Lapeer, and Huron Counties by transverse roads.

Thus it will be observed that Bay City is open by railroad communication and made conveniently accessible to every point that would be accommodated by a United States court in the Saginaw Valley, besides having daily communication by water with the vast business, commercial, and maritime interests of the Huron shore.

These points are all connected with Bay City by railroad and by a daily line of boats.

Bay City is the entree port of the Saginaw River, and at the head of deep water, and the largest craft that float our great chain of lakes enter and clear from here, and can not, on account of lack of depth of water go above this port. This point alone ought and has settled the location of this court. As the needs of the court grow largely from suits in admiralty and other marine business, I will read the comparative statement of the two ports, namely, Bay City and East Saginaw, as furnished by the Treasury Department Bureau of Statistics in February, 1886, during the pendency of this measure before the Judiciary Committee:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Washington, D. C., February 23, 1886.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your recent verbal request, I have the honor to transmit to you herewith such information as I have been able to procure in regard to the coastwise trade, &c., of Bay City and East Saginaw, Mich., subports of the customs district of Huron.

Respectfully,

J. N. WHITNEY,
Acting Chief of Bureau.

Hon. SPENCER O. FISHER, M. C.,
House of Representatives.

More than ten times in foreign entries and over double in domestic entries in favor of Bay City.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I inclose to you a copy of the telegram just received from the collector of customs at Port Huron.

I will telegraph to-day for the complete information and will forward it to you as soon as received.

Very respectfully,

WM. F. SWITZLER, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. SPENCER O. FISHER, M. C.,
House of Representatives.

PORT HURON, MICH., January 11, 1887.

Total number of vessels entered East Saginaw, 512; tonnage, 129,762. Bay City, 1,138; tonnage, 334,969. Impossible to distinguish those engaged in foreign trade without more time, but very few.

CHAS. A. WARD, Collector.

I also submit, Mr. Speaker, a petition from large owners of vessel property from the city of Cleveland, State of Ohio, and Buffalo, N. Y. Also a copy of resolutions which were unanimously adopted by the Lumberman's Exchange, of the city of Chicago, Ill.:

CHICAGO, February 25, 1886.

At a regular meeting of the board of directors of the Lumbermen's Exchange of Chicago this day held, it was

Resolved, That this board of directors, representing nine-elevenths of the 11,057 vessels entering the port of Chicago during the year 1885, understanding that a division of the judicial district of Michigan, known as the eastern district, is in contemplation, hereby express our approval of the same and recommend that

Bay City, at the mouth of the Saginaw River, being the most convenient position or location for vessels plying upon the lakes, having business with the courts of such new district as is contemplated, should be selected as the headquarters of such new district.

Adopted by unanimous vote.

Attest—a true copy of record.

GEORGE W. HOTCHKISS,
Secretary.

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States:

Your petitioners, residents and vessel-owners of the city of Cleveland, in the county of Cuyahoga, State of Ohio, respectfully petition your honorable bodies to provide by law for holding the Courts of the United States at Bay City, in Bay County, Michigan, and set forth the following reasons:

First. We are largely interested in vessel property and of the largest crafts that float the great lakes, and are engaged in the through trade between Chicago and Buffalo, and on our return trips stop at the port of Bay City, Mich., and load for Milwaukee, Racine, Chicago, and other ports, with lumber or salt.

Second. Our vessels being the class known as steam-propellers, and when light draw 10 to 12 feet of water aft; hence our inability to go above Bay City on account of the depth of water.

Third. It has often happened that much loss of time and money has occurred to vessel-owners by not having Federal courts at the port of Bay City, Mich. The nature of our business and the conducting of the same put us wholly in the hands of men who are irresponsible and do at times commence actions against our vessels for wages as seamen or stevedores; hence the need of establishing said courts at Bay City, Mich.

W. M. Egan, Chicago, interested in 3,500 tons; Moore, Bartow & Gilchrist, interested in 18,000 tons; A. S. Pierson, interested in 1,000 tons; H. J. Webb & Co., large interest in 5,750 tons; Philip Miner, interests large in 8,900 tons; Palmer, Benham & Johnson, large interests in 15,600 tons; M. A. Bradley, interested in 27,000 tons; Thomas Wilson, managing owner, 14,000 tons; Upson, Walton & Co., ship chandlers and owners; Thos. Quayle's Sons, ship-builders and owners; Mix, Noble & White, proctors, Cleveland, Ohio.

CLEVELAND, February 17, 1886.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your petitioners, residents and citizens of the city of Buffalo, in the county of Erie, State of New York, respectfully petition your honorable bodies to provide by law for holding the courts of the United States, at Bay City, in Bay County, Michigan, and your petitioners will ever pray.

Youghiogheny River Coke Company, Erie, Pa.; W. L. Scott & Co., Erie, Pa., D. Bullard, general manager; The Union Steamboat Company, F. D. Caldwell, general manager; The Western Transit Company, Wm. P. Henny, general manager; Lehigh Valley Transportation Company, Geo. McLeod, manager; Smith & Davis Line; Brown & Co., vessel-owners; James McKenzie, vessel-owner; J. J. H. Brown, vessel-owner; M. J. Galvin, vessel-owner; C. H. Woodruff, vessel-owner; R. Fitzgerald; Donaldson Bros.; F. L. Danforth, vessel-owner; James Davidson, of Davidson Transportation Line.

I also wish to submit, Mr. Speaker, the letters of the United States district attorney for eastern district of Michigan, for the year 1877, and during the pendency of this same measure at that time, and also one from the present United States district attorney for eastern district of Michigan, and would especially call the attention of the House to the language of each.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY'S OFFICE,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF MICHIGAN,
Detroit, January 25, 1877.

MY DEAR SIR: I notice a bill has passed the House providing for the holding of two terms each year of the United States district and circuit courts at Bay City with such conditions as will impose no additional cost to the Government. As there is a large amount of admiralty business at Bay City and especially a portion of it of the claims of seamen and others which are comparatively small, the expense of doing it at Detroit is onerous and burdensome. I have received letters from a number of prominent citizens saying they understood that I had some opposition to the bill. I desire at once to correct this impression if it has the slightest influence upon anybody, and to say that I should be glad to see the bill become a law. Our district judge has conversed with me on the subject and I think he has no objections to the passage of the bill.

Very respectfully yours,

A. B. MAYNARD.

Hon. N. B. BRADLEY,
Washington, D. C.

CARO, MICH., February 15, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I have received a copy of your bill to provide for holding two or more terms of the United States court at Bay City, and your request for my opinion in relation to it.

Inasmuch as the establishment of such a court at Bay City will not materially add to the expense of the same, and as there is a large amount of business done in the United States court that comes from the northern part of the lower peninsula, including a class of admiralty business, that will be eaten up in attempting to collect in Detroit, and as Bay City has a much larger shipping interest than any other city outside of Detroit in the eastern district, it would seem that this is an important matter to be considered in favor of your bill.

Again, I find that a great portion of the internal-revenue cases come from north of Bay City. In many of these cases the defendants are poor and the cost and expense to them of having their cases tried in Detroit is very burdensome. If a court could be held at Bay City, not only costs to them but expense to the Government could be saved. Personally, to me as district-attorney, your bill would be of no benefit. But as there seems to be so much interest manifested in favor of it by the people generally, I hope it will pass.

Truly, yours,

C. P. BLACK.

Hon. S. O. FISHER.

I also wish to submit the letter of Messrs. Pratt & Gilbert, of Bay City, Mich., prominent attorneys there:

PRATT & GILBERT, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Bay City, Mich.

DEAR SIR: We feel greatly interested in the passage of the bill introduced by you, providing for a session of the United States courts at Bay City. It is a matter of great importance to us in our business. To our own knowledge there is a large amount of business for those courts here, especially the admiralty court. There is probably not a merchant here doing business with those engaged in the shipping interests who does not lose more or less every year, some of them large amounts in the aggregate, by reason of the inconvenience of resorting to the United States courts at Detroit to collect their claims. The general practice amongst lawyers here has been to decline to take admiralty cases, for the reason that we have no court here. In our own practice these applications have constantly increased, in spite of the fact that we have followed the general rule and declined to take such cases. In a multitude of cases persons who have honest claims are practically without any remedy, and in some cases the losses met with are great hardships.

In addition to the admiralty business, there are a large number of cases, many of them important, brought by non-residents against parties living in Bay City and vicinity in the United States courts, compelling the defendants to go to Detroit at a greatly increased expense to defend their cases. In our own practice since the 1st day of January, there have been five cases in which parties have been compelled to prosecute or defend in the United States courts, the expenses in each case being at least doubled thereby.

Very truly, yours,

PRATT & GILBERT.

Hon. S. O. FISHER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the above while only a very small portion of the reasons that I might give for the location of these courts at Bay City, they are sufficient to justify and warrant our asking for the establishing of the same. And I most earnestly appeal to each and every member to stand by the report of the Judiciary Committee, and by so doing give to this great and prosperous portion of our fair State this much needed, long delayed facility for the transaction of her largely increasing business, and also that a long delayed act of justice may be finally meted out to us.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield now for three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I have very few words to say on this bill. One of the most ludicrous descriptions given by the great Spanish novelist is that of a struggle between two villages. I trust this House will not to-day imitate that ridiculous performance and indulge in any such controversy.

Now, it is admitted on all hands a court should be established, that its term should be held near this locality, and we have these two cities, one represented by Mr. TARSNEY, of Michigan, and the other represented by Mr. FISHER, of Michigan, one district having one city and the other having another city. They present their rival claims here, and it appears to me it would be a great misfortune to all concerned, certainly to the people of that locality, if we should allow the contest here to result in giving them no court at all.

The Judiciary Committee considered this matter, and would have been satisfied with either city if the other had been; yet all the proofs decided this court should be located at Bay City. Other committees have done the same before. We followed the precedent set us. We justified the arguments by the facts.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY], I understand, says his city was not represented before the committee. Why was it not? Because they did not think it advisable and important enough. Therefore they should not come in at this late hour to prevent that city having any court facilities.

Mr. TARSNEY. Conditions change from day to day.

Mr. PARKER. Conditions change from day to day, and I would like to have this changed so that the population of that region should have that court at their doors, instead, as suggested, that the bill should be defeated and the same old trouble and expense and injury should be gone over by suitors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have this further to say. Considerable business must of necessity be admiralty business, and naturally it will come to Bay City, and, all things being equal, it is nothing but fair and just in the judgment of the Judiciary Committee this court should be located at that place.

Mr. ROGERS. I have a few observations to make in conclusion. This report I had the honor to present at the request of the Judiciary Committee. It was drafted by a Representative on the Judiciary Committee from Michigan, in the Forty-eighth Congress, and I will quote some passages from it.

Mr. MAYBURY says in that report:

The bill under consideration provides for a session of the circuit and district courts of the United States at least twice in each year, at Bay City, on the Saginaw River, and distant 108 miles northerly from Detroit. Bay City, with its immediate surroundings, embraces a population of 35,000. Within fifteen miles distant therefrom are the two rapidly growing cities of East Saginaw and Saginaw City, with a joint population of 30,000 and upwards. Tributary to the commerce of these cities and the valley in which they are established is a population of at least a quarter of a million. Railroad communication is established between these points and all parts of the State, especially that portion extending northerly therefrom.

The lake commerce gives rise to much litigation which is now disposed of at the sessions of the courts held in Detroit. No expense will attend the establishment of sessions as desired, except that of leasing suitable quarters for the court, which expense will be but a moiety of that which will be saved in mileage fees in the summoning of jurors and witnesses.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill herewith reported do pass.

No substantial change has taken place between those two rival cities since that report was made. One has only to glance at the map of Michigan to see these two cities are only 13 miles apart on the same river. The important and controlling point is the fact that Bay City is only 3 miles from Saginaw Bay, and has larger tonnage and immensely larger admiralty business than its rival city.

No longer than yesterday came the following report from the collector at Port Huron:

PORT HURON, MICH., January 11, 1887.

Total number of vessels entered East Saginaw, five hundred and twelve (512); tonnage, one hundred and twenty-nine thousand seven hundred and sixty-two (129,762). Bay City, eleven hundred and thirty-eight (1,138); tonnage, three hundred and thirty-four thousand nine hundred and sixty-nine (334,969). Impossible to distinguish those engaged in foreign trade without more time, but very few.

CHAS. A. WARD, Collector.

Mr. TARSNEY. That only illustrates the point I made a while ago, that they get the benefit of the entries and clearances at Bay City of the vessels which take cargo at Saginaw.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, what difference, so far as the railroad interests are concerned, would there be between establishing this court at Bay City or East Saginaw? There is but a very short distance between them; only 13 miles apart, on the same river; the trains run every hour between these points, one railroad on each side of the river, and so far as that question is concerned it amounts to nothing, while so far as the admiralty question is concerned it becomes a matter of very great importance that the court should be established at Bay City.

The statement which my friend on my left, Mr. FISHER, read—and that is the burden of all of the testimony which was presented to the committee—is that there is a large amount of commerce at Bay City and up to that point which never reaches Saginaw at all, and can not reach it during a large portion of the year, I do not know for exactly how long, at certain stages of the water. I might have gone into all of these points in the report in detail, where all of these matters might have been embodied and made clear before the House; but I assumed that when a Representative of that great State in this body, a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, made that report, that the State of Michigan had been properly represented, and I might safely assume to adopt the language of the report in submitting this question to the House.

Now, sir, I demand the previous question upon the bill and amendment.

Mr. MAYBURY. I ask consent, inasmuch as a report I had the honor to present to the House has been quoted here, to be heard for one or two minutes in reference to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP in the chair). The gentleman from Arkansas has demanded the previous question, and unless that demand is withdrawn the Chair must submit the question to the House.

Mr. TARSNEY. Will the gentleman from Arkansas not yield one or two minutes to my colleague?

Mr. ROGERS. I am very anxious to dispose of this matter without further debate, if possible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

The question was taken; the House divided, and there were—ayes 71, noes 61.

Mr. BLAND. There is no quorum. I make that point simply because the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAYBURY], whose report was read, desired to be heard for a few minutes; and I think he should have that privilege. It will save time if the House will allow him that privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorom has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may be permitted to have a few moments. I want to add that the Judiciary Committee are exceedingly anxious about other matters which they wish to present to the House to-day; and the only reason I had for objecting a moment ago was that I did not wish to take up any time that could possibly be avoided. I hope the gentleman will be heard.

[Cries of "All right."]

Mr. MAYBURY. Mr. Speaker, I simply enter this debate because reference has been repeatedly made to a report submitted by me upon this question in the last Congress; and I do not wish that that report should be misunderstood. I have an equal number of friends in each of these two cities. I have no choice as between them, so far as a friendly interest is concerned. My home is at Detroit, where the court now holds its sittings.

In the last Congress a bill was submitted by Mr. Hatch, then a member of the Bay County district, for the holding of a session of the United States courts at Bay City. That bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee, and by the chairman, assigned to me for examination and report. In the investigation of the question as to whether the public convenience would be promoted by a sitting of the court at the point named, I was influenced by a desire to find out the business of the Saginaw valley, and made a thorough investigation of the question in that respect. I was satisfied then, as I am now, that the public business would be expedited and justice more economically administered by having a sitting of the court somewhere in that valley, and I so found and so reported. As Bay City was the only point suggested for a sitting of the court, the conclusion was, of course, in favor of the pending bill. There was no contest whatever between the two cities at that time, but the entire argument of my report will demonstrate that I had no intention of saying in what particular point of the valley this sitting of the court should be held, but that there should be a sitting of the court somewhere in that valley; and, as I have already said, Bay City being the point named, the conclusion was in favor of that point as being the only one suggested at that time. Further than that I have nothing to say in this controversy.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to say in response to what the gentleman from Michigan has said, except that in my opinion he came to a correct conclusion in that report.

I now move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri withdraw the point of no quorum?

Mr. BLAND. I do withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being withdrawn, the Chair will announce the result of the vote previously taken by which the previous question was ordered.

The result of the vote was again announced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY].

The question was taken; the House divided, and there were—a es 79, noes 69.

Mr. ROGERS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 113, not voting 89; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. DANIEL with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. WILSON with Mr. MCCOMAS.

Mr COX, of New York, with Mr. PAYSON.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. GALLINGER.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. BURLEIGH.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. WEST.

Mr. HOLMAN with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. KING with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. GILFILLAN.

Mr. REAGAN with Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. REESE with Mr. WEAVER, of Indiana.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York.

Until Monday next:

Mr. BARBOUR with Mr. ROCKWELL.

For this day:

Mr. NEECE with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. HIRES.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. FUNSTON.

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. WAKEFIELD.

Mr. BARRY with Mr. JACKSON.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. HOUK.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. COLLINS. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TARSNEY. I desire to state to the House that the words "Bay City" occur several times in the bill. I ask that it be so amended as to strike out those words wherever they occur, and insert "Saginaw."

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. FISHER and others objected.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Is it in order now to move to recommit the bill with instructions?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the previous question on the passage of the bill; and pending that the gentleman from Ohio moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question being taken there were—ayes 65, noes 84.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was not agreed to.

The bill was passed.

Mr. TARSNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WEST, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOUK, indefinitely, on account of important business.

CHARLES E. CREECY.

Mr. TUCKER. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS. I ask that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9930) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims and Supreme Court of the United States to finally determine the case of Charles E. Creecy, assignee in Congressional case No. 71, reported to the House of Representatives by said Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, and that the same be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill he has indicated, and that the same be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claim of Charles E. Creecy, assignee of the Schillinger patent, numbered 105599, reissue numbered 4364, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims of the United States, with jurisdiction to enter final judgment for the sum of $66,239.88, in accordance with the findings of fact heretofore made in said case, the same being numbered 71 of Congressional cases in said court; and said judgment shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to Charles E. Creecy, assignee, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the court shall have power to grant a new trial, within sixty days from the passage of this act, upon the application of the Attorney-General; and if said court, upon such new trial, finds against the United States, it shall enter judgment thereon, and the same shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury as aforesaid: Provided also, That an appeal may be taken by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the rules of said court, within sixty days after judgment by the Court of Claims; and if appealed, the case shall have precedence; and should said court give judgment against the United States, the same shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, as aforesaid.

Mr. COLLINS. I offer the amendments which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the third line, after the word "Creecy," insert "as administrator of Charles M. Roberts and Francis A. Roberts, deceased, and as."

In the eighth and ninth lines, strike out the words "for the sum of $66,239.88."

In the thirteenth line, after "assignee" insert "and administrator."

Mr. COLLINS. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest that the report be read or that some explanation be given before the previous question is ordered.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is ordered before any debate occurs, then thirty minutes are allowed for debate after the ordering of the previous question, under the rules of the House.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It seems to me it would be well to have the report read, so that it may be determined what debate may be necessary.

Mr. COLLINS. I am satisfied that ten minutes will not be required for debate; and the time allowed after the ordering of the previous question will be sufficient. I will be willing to yield five minutes to any gentleman who wishes to discuss the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, thirty minutes are allowed for debate—fifteen minutes in support of the measure, and fifteen minutes in opposition.

Mr. COLLINS. I now ask for the reading of the report, that this matter may be perfectly understood.

The report (by Mr. COLLINS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Charles E. Creecy, praying that the findings of the Court of Claims in his favor, under the act approved March 3, 1883 (22 Stats., 485), be returned to said court, with jurisdiction to hear and finally determine the questions involved, have considered the same, and find that the petitioner presented a claim to the Forty-eighth Congress for compensation for the use of the patent of John J. Schillinger in laying the sidewalks in the Capitol Grounds. This claim, together with all the papers in the case, was transmitted to the Court of Claims by the Committee on Patents March 26, 1884, under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883. The Court of Claims returned its findings of fact to the House of Representatives on February 6, 1886, and they were referred to the Committee on Patents. The Court of Claims finds the patent to be valid, and that it had been infringed by the United States in laying 236,571 feet of sidewalk in the Capitol Grounds. The court finds also that the owner of the patent would have realized as his profit, under his bid to lay the sidewalk, the sum of $66,239.88, had he been permitted to do the work. The court further found the price bid by the owner of the patent was reasonable. The documentary evidence transmitted by the court in its findings shows the petitioner to be the owner by assignment of the patent and rights of action thereunder.

The court cited in support of its findings the opinions of Associate Justice Blatchford, of the Supreme Court, and Judges Shipman, of New York, and Sawyer, of California, United States circuit judges, who have passed upon this patent. Judges Wallace, of Pennsylvania, Morris, of Maryland, Sage, of Ohio, and Blodgett, of Illinois, have also given judgments in favor of Schillinger's patent.

The Committee on Patents made an adverse report on the findings of the Court of Claims, and report as the opinion of the committee that there was no infringement of the patent in laying the sidewalks in the Capitol Grounds, and in support of its report cites the opinion of the local court of the District of Columbia in the case of Schillinger vs. Cranford, delivered by Judge Hagner, and concurred in by Judges Merrick and James. This case was an appeal from Judge Cox's decision, who decided Cranford had infringed. The petitioner has been to great trouble and expense in trying his case before the Court of Claims, and he is entitled in equity and good conscience to a judicial and final settlement of his claim.

Your committee therefore report a bill remanding the findings of the Court of Claims to that court for final disposition, with the right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States, and recommend its passage.

Mr. COLLINS. This is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary after a careful consideration of the facts and of the law involved in the case. The bill simply refers this claim for final adjudication to the Court of Claims, where I believe every citizen who has a claim against the Government, even a groundless claim, should be entitled to have it litigated. Then the bill provides that the Supreme Court shall have final jurisdiction in case any question of law arises that may be disputed. I think the bill should pass without any question.

The amendments were adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question being taken, the SPEAKER stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 9.

Mr. LEHLBACH. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] to act as tellers.

The House again divided.

Mr. LEHLBACH (before the count was completed). Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum, in order to allow the report of the Committee on Patents to be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. COLLINS (before the reading was completed). Mr. Speaker, it is manifest that it is difficult to get a quorum here at this time, and it is also manifest that considerable time would be consumed in reading this report which might be more usefully employed. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over informally, not losing its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

J. E. PILCHER.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9377) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher, and that the bill be considered in the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized, out of the Texas indemnity fund, to pay to J. E. Pilcher the sum of $905, being the amount of one bond of $100 and $805 in paper money of the Republic of Texas: Provided, That he shall find that said claims are within the class of claims heretofore paid by the United States out of the said fund: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that said bond and money are genuine.

Mr. CULBERSON. Unless some one desires an explanation of this bill, I demand the previous question upon ordering the bill to be read a third time and passed.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULBERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 933) for the relief of M. C. Mordecai; and

A bill (S. 909) for the relief of the personal representatives of Henry H. Sibley, deceased.

SUITS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up the bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for bringing suits against the Government of the United States.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire as to the time supposed to be necessary for the discussion of this bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I do not see any necessity for taking much time, and I was about to ask the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. It is a bill of so much importance that I think the House ought know all about it. If it is the bill that I understand it to be, it is one which actually disposes of $13,000,000.

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman is mistaken. This is a general bill (in the reporting of which I think the gentleman himself concurred) to provide for bringing suits in cases of claims against the Government, thus removing those claims from Congress.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I was in error as to the bill called up.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, as to this bill I would say that it is one which was very carefully matured by the Committee on the Judiciary nearly a year ago. The committee took all the bills with this general object that had been referred to it, as well as one reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and from those bills matured this one, which was reported, I think, from the committee with entire unanimity. The object of the bill is this: It extends the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims beyond the mere contract obligations of the Government to obligations of all kinds, as well those that could be asserted in a court of law as those which could be asserted in a court of equity or in admiralty. The bill also gives concurrent jurisdiction to the circuit court of the United States in the locality where the claim originates or where the party plaintiff resides, to consider all claims concurrently with the Court of Claims up to the amount of $10,000. The Court of Claims has jurisdiction with the circuit courts as to all claims, and under this bill the circuit courts will have concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims in all cases up to the amount of $10,000.

Mr. REED. Is the bill sufficiently broad to cover all claims against the United States? Does it give the right to sue the United States in all cases?

Mr. TUCKER. Not in all cases.

Mr. REED. I mean in all cases where there is a claim of right in law or equity, technically so called.

Mr. TUCKER. Yes; equity and admiralty. The only cases not provided for are suits upon the use of a patent right by the Government and suits in reference to captured and abandoned property which are now barred by the statutes of limitations. This bill extends the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to all cases which arise, not only ex contractu but ex delicto, and to cases in admiralty, so that it will take the whole mass of these claims away from Congress.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Is the judgment of the court final, or does it simply determine the amount?

Mr. TUCKER. The judgment of the court is final.

Mr. REED. Does the bill apply to cases that arose out of the existence of hostilities?

Mr. TUCKER. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for asking that question.

The committee was so anxious to exclude any possibility of war claims coming in under this bill, that we provided there should not be asserted under it any claim that had arisen more than six years prior to the time of its assertion. Therefore no claim which arose during the period of hostilities can come in under the bill.

As the committee is anxious to get through as much business as possible to-day, I will, unless the reading of the bill be insisted upon——

Mr. REED. As this is a somewhat long bill, I desire to ask another question. As I understand, the effect of the bill is that the United States can be made a party defendant in any suit where an individual could be made a party defendant.

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me one moment?

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the passage of this bill. It will relieve Congress from much of the private business that is imposed upon it under the present system. It does not, however, go far enough. There is pending in the House a bill from the Committee on Claims which provides for referring certain cases to the Court of Claims for judicial ascertainment of the facts. I desire, on some future occasion, to have that bill also passed. If these two bills can be enacted, the entire subject of private claims will be taken from Congress and referred to the courts. In the cases covered by the present bill the court will make final adjudication and enter judgment. In cases barred by the statute of limitations, and which are not based upon any contract, express or implied, or upon any law of Congress, the Court of Claims will have jurisdiction simply to ascertain the facts and report them to Congress for further action. I hope that the provisions of the present bill, as well as those of the other bill to which I have referred, will become law, so that this whole matter of private legislation may be removed from Congress.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad to have the House consider, at a proper time, the provisions of the bill to which my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] refers; but I trust he will not embarrass this bill by seeking to incorporate in it the provisions of the bill to which he refers.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not ask that. I stated that at some future time I desired to have the other bill taken up.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman from Virginia will allow me to ask him why the term of six years has been fixed as a limitation? That term, it occurs to me, does not reach far enough back to relieve Congress to the extent relief is desirable.

Mr. TUCKER. At one time the committee thought of a limitation of ten years; but after a good deal of consideration we agreed upon six years. As to the old claims which will not be covered by the limitation, I suppose we must get along in the best way that may be possible.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. One trouble is that the passage of this bill in the present form may militate against the passage of other bills pending before Congress providing for cases where the cause of action originated more than six years prior to the bringing of the suit.

Mr. TUCKER. They may be considered by the Court of Claims under the Bowman act.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. They can not be considered, I believe, under that act; they will be barred by the limitation which that act contains.

Mr. TUCKER. Of course a claim barred by statute can not be considered by the court.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will ask the gentleman from Virginia whether it is not true that the Secretary of the Treasury has several times recommended a limitation of six years for a measure of this kind.

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir; six years is the usual limitation upon these claims against the Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I call for the previous question upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman does not propose to call the previous question without having the bill read?

Mr. TUCKER. Well, if the gentleman desires to have the bill read I have no objection.

Mr. BURROWS. This is an important matter, and I think the bill ought to be read. It is unusual to pass a bill without reading it.

Mr. REED. It must be read, unless the reading is waived by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

First. All claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States, or any law of Congress, or any regulation of an executive department, or upon any contract, expressed or implied, with the Government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty if the United States were suable, and of all other claims which may be referred to it by either House of Congress.

Second. All set-offs, counter-claims, claims for damages, whether liquidated or unliquidated, or other demands whatsoever on the part of the Government of the United States against any person making claim against the Government in said court: Provided, That no suit against the Government of the United States shall be allowed under this act unless the same shall have been brought within six years after the right accrued for which the claim is made.

SEC. 2. That the circuit and district courts of the United States shall have concurrent jurisdiction, as to all matters named in the preceding section, with the Court of Claims, where the amount of the claim shall not exceed the sum of $10,000 in money value.

SEC. 3. That the jurisdiction of the respective courts of the United States proceeding under this act shall be governed by the provisions of statutes now in force, in-so-far as the same are found applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act; and the course of procedure shall be in accordance with the established rules of said respective courts, and of such additions and modifications thereof as said courts may adopt.

SEC. 4. That the plaintiff in any suit brought under the provisions of the second section of this act shall file a petition, duly verified, with the clerk of the respective court having jurisdiction of the case, and in the district where the plaintiff resides or where the cause of action arose. Such petition shall set forth the full name and residence of the plaintiff, the nature of his claim and a succinct statement of the facts upon which the claim is based, the money or other thing claimed or the damages sought to be recovered, and praying the court for a judgment or decree upon the facts and law.

SEC. 5. That the plaintiff shall cause a copy of his petition filed under the preceding section to be served upon the district attorney of the United States in the district wherein suit is brought, and shall mail a copy of the same, by registered letter, to the Attorney-General of the United States, and shall thereupon cause to be filed with the clerk of the court wherein suit is instituted an affidavit of such service and the mailing of such letter. It shall be the duty of the district attorney upon whom service of petition is made as aforesaid to appear and defend the interests of the Government in the suit, and within sixty days after the service of petition upon him, unless the time should be extended by order of the court made in the case, to file a plea, answer, or demurrer on the part of the Government, and to file a notice of any counter-claim, set-off, claim for damages, or other demand or defense whatsoever of the Government in the premises; and the issue shall be tried in accordance with the ordinary rules of the court governing the trial of like issues in other causes: Provided, That should the district attorney neglect or refuse to file the plea, answer, demurrer, or defense as required, the plaintiff may proceed with the case under such rules as the court may adopt in the premises; but the plaintiff shall not have judgment or decree for his claim, or any part thereof, except on satisfactory evidence.

SEC. 6. That all issues of fact arising in suits at law prosecuted under the second section of this act shall be tried by a jury, unless a trial by jury is expressly waived by the parties to the suit or their attorneys. After verdict has been rendered in the suit at law in the district or circuit courts of the United States, it shall be the duty of the court to cause a written opinion to be filed therein, setting forth the specific findings by the court or jury on the facts alleged in the petition, and the conclusions of the court upon all questions of law involved in the case, and to render judgment thereon. If the suit be in equity or admiralty, the court shall proceed with the same according to the rules of such courts.

SEC. 7. That in the trial of any suit brought under any of the provisions of this act, no person shall be excluded as a witness because he is a party to or interested in said suit; and any plaintiff or party in interest may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government.

Sections 1079 and 1080 of the Revised Statutes are hereby repealed.

SEC. 8. That the plaintiff or the United States, in any suit brought under the provisions of this act, shall have the same rights of appeal or writ of error as are now reserved in the statutes of the United States in that behalf made, and upon the conditions and limitations therein contained. The modes of procedure in claiming and perfecting an appeal or writ of error shall conform in all respects, and as near as may be, to the statutes and rules of court governing appeals and writs of error in like causes.

SEC. 9. That when the findings of fact and the law applicable thereto have been filed in any cause as provided in section 6 of this act, and the judgment or decree is adverse to the Government, it shall be the duty of the district attorney to transmit to the Attorney-General of the United States certified copies of all the papers filed in the cause, with a transcript of the testimony taken, the written findings of the court, and his written opinion as to the legality and justice of the verdict or finding; whereupon the Attorney-General shall determine and direct whether an appeal or writ of error shall be taken or not; and when so directed the district attorney shall cause an appeal or writ of error to be perfected in accordance with the terms of the statutes and rules of practice governing the same: Provided, That no appeal or writ of error shall be allowed after six months from the judgment or decree in such suit. From the date of such final judgment or decree interest shall be computed thereon at the rate of 4 per cent., until the time when an appropriation is made for the payment of the judgment or decree.

SEC. 10. That the Attorney-General shall report to Congress, and at the beginning of each session of Congress, the suits under this act in which a final judgment or decree has been found adverse to the Government, giving the date of each, with a statement of the costs taxed in each case.

SEC. 11. That whenever there shall be pending before the Department of State a claim in behalf of any alien against the United States, founded on or growing out of any treaty with a foreign power or any international obligation, the Secretary of State may, with the consent of the representative of the Government of such alien, refer such claim to the Court of Claims, which shall thereupon have jurisdiction to hear and determine the same upon the principles of justice and international law, and to render such judgment as those principles shall require. From any such judgment either party may appeal to the Supreme Court in the manner provided by law in other cases of appeal from the Court of Claims.

SEC. 12. That when any claim or matter may be pending in any of the Executive Departments which involves controverted questions of fact or law, the head of such Department, with the consent of the claimant, may transmit the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to said Court of Claims, and the same shall be there proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts and conclusions of law shall have been found, the court shall enter judgment thereon, and shall report its findings and judgment to the Department by which it was transmitted.

SEC. 13. That in every case which shall come before the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, upon the facts established, that it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon under existing laws or under the provisions of this act, it shall proceed to do so, and report its proceedings therein to either House of Congress or to the Department by which the same was referred to said court.

SEC. 14. That the costs of court in proceedings under this act shall be taxed in favor of the prevailing party therein, unless otherwise specially ordered by the court. For failure to prosecute a petition filed under this act with reasonable diligence, the same may be dismissed, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 15. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire whether there is a report accompanying this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If so, I ask that it be read. This is a bill of far-reaching importance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] yield for the reading of the report?

Mr. TUCKER. I have called for the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In view of the importance of this bill, I ask the gentleman from Virginia to permit the report to be read.

Mr. HAMMOND. It will take too much time.

Mr. TUCKER. And we have other business.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then, if we can not hear the report, I give notice that a bill so important as this, and having such far-reaching results, can not be passed without the presence of a quorum.

Mr. HAMMOND. We have a quorum.

Mr. TUCKER. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] chooses to "filibuster" against the passage of the bill, he has the right to do so.

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. TUCKER). Call the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. I notice that one provision of this bill repeals sections 1079 and 1080 of the Revised Statutes. I would like to understand the effect of that repeal.

Mr. TUCKER. I send those two sections to the desk, that they may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 1079. No claimant, nor any person from or through whom any such claimant derives his alleged title, claim, or right against the United States, nor any person interested in any such title, claim, or right, shall be a competent witness in the Court of Claims in supporting the same, and no testimony given by such claimant or person shall be used except as provided in the next section.

SEC. 1080. The court may, at the instance of the attorney or solicitor appearing in behalf of the United States, make an order in any case pending therein, directing any claimant in such case to appear, upon reasonable notice, before any commissioner of the court, and be examined on oath touching any or all matters pertaining to said claim. Such examination shall be reduced to writing by the said commissioner, and be returned to and filed in the court, and may, at the discretion of the attorney or solicitor of the United States appearing in the case, be read and used as evidence on the trial thereof. And if any claimant, after such an order is made, and due and reasonable notice thereof is given to him, fails to appear, or refuses to testify or answer fully as to all matters within his knowledge material to the issue, the court may, in its discretion, order that the said cause shall not be brought forward for trial until he shall have fully complied with the order of the court in the premises.

Mr. TUCKER. The effect of the repeal of those two sections is merely to give full effect to the provision of the law which enables the party interested in a claim to testify in the Court of Claims as in other cases.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Why compel the Commissioner to send to the Attorney-General a copy of the pleadings in each case?

Mr. TUCKER. I do not understand that is in here.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Yes, I understand that it is in this bill.

Mr. TUCKER. No, we do not do that; but where a judgment is in favor of a claimant the district attorney is required to send to the Attorney-General a copy of the record, so that he may determine whether or not it is proper in behalf of the interests of the United States to take an appeal.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I understand the bill requires a claimant, at the time he files his petition, to transmit a copy of his petition to the Attorney-General, and also a copy of the pleadings.

Mr. TUCKER. The reason for the provision in this bill is this: It is lest the district attorney should be negligent of his duty in reference to a claim against the United States that it was provided the commissioner should be required to give notice to the headquarters of the Attorney-General himself. It is done in the interest of the safety of the United States.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I desire to ask the gentleman a question or two.

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I did not hear distinctly the reading of that portion of the bill which gives jurisdiction to the Court of Claims, and therefore I would like to know exactly its purport and effect. Would this bill embrace within its provisions what are known as Indian depredation claims?

Mr. TUCKER. It is hard for me to say unless I understood the character of those Indian depredation claims.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. They are claims which arise under treaties between the Government and the various Indian tribes.

Mr. TUCKER. If they are more than six years old they are debarred under the provisions of this act.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Some are thirty-five years old.

Mr. TUCKER. They are debarred under the provisions of this act.

Mr. RYAN. They are all more than six years old.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. No, I think not.

Mr. TUCKER. If they are over six years old, then they are excluded and barred under the provisions of this act.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I would like to submit an amendment to the bill, if the gentleman from Virginia will yield me the floor for that purpose, to exclude these Indian depredation claims from coming within the provisions of this act. And I will state the reason why Congress has, from time to time, passed laws authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and different Indian agents, to investigate these claims, to take testimony in reference to them, and to decide on them. In other words, Congress has made the Department of the Interior, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, after examination and testimony of whites and Indians through the Indian agencies, judges in reference to those claims, at least to the extent of rejecting, or reporting amounts found due for the action of Congress. They are being continually reported to Congress for payment upon the evidence in each case by the Secretary of the Interior.

A bill has been reported favorably, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, making it the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a board of commissioners, to investigate and pass upon all this class of claims separately. Therefore those interested in such claims do not want them mixed up and confused with the claims which are sent by this bill, if I understand its provisions, to the Court of Claims. They believe if they should go to the Court of Claims on account of the great mass of business which this bill will force before that tribunal, they would never be resurrected, that Gabriel would blow his horn before these $15,000,000 of Indian depredation claims would be taken up and adjudicated. [Laughter].

Mr. BLOUNT. Would they not come up as audited claims, to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to be provided for in appropriation bills?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. The bill provides, as I understand——

Mr. BLOUNT. But how does it conflict with this?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. It takes away jurisdiction from the Interior Department and sends these claims to the Court of Claims, where they may never be passed upon. I wish to move an amendment to the bill providing for the exclusion from the operation of this act of these Indian claims.

Mr. TUCKER. I can not give way to that amendment. I think it is better the bill should pass in its present form.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Why is it that in the first section of the bill the jurisdiction of the circuit and district courts of the United States is limited to such sums as do not exceed $10,000? Why is it that jurisdiction should not be made so all claims should be filed in the circuit and district courts?

Mr. TUCKER. Upon full consideration by the committee it was thought where a claim exceeded $10,000 it would be better and safer for the Government it should be where the head of the Department may be present to protect the Government.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That throws on the Court of Claims the entire business—a glut of cases—including the $15,000,000 of Indian claims—all claims exceeding $10,000. In the second place, if the gentleman allows me, I will make the suggestion it takes a claimant far away from his home, and before a court which must be very much crowded with business.

Mr. TUCKER. My friend from Kentucky will remember this bill is in relief of claimants. If the claims are under $10,000 he has to come there to-day.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think as far as it has gone it is in the right direction. I wish to see if we can not get it to go further than it does.

Mr. TUCKER. We tried to make a fair compromise.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. In the fourth section it is provided the costs shall be taxed in favor of the prevailing party unless there is special order of the court. Is not that a departure from the practice that the sovereign power shall not be mulcted in costs? Is that not going too far in behalf of the claimant, that the Government shall pay the costs?

Mr. TUCKER. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Government is never mulcted in costs in these suits?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No; I do not mean to say that; but I ask if this is not a departure from the general rule? I am not prepared to say, of course, that it is; but it strikes me as being something of a departure.

Mr. TUCKER. We leave it to the option of the court to decide the question as to the costs.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But you make it a rule that they shall be allowed to the prevailing party in the suit, unless specially otherwise ordered by the court. It seems to me you throw upon the court the duty to give costs against the Government in all cases, unless there is some special laches or other reason on the part of the claimant whereby the costs should be taxed against him.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is right. If the Government refuses to pay, and the court decides that it ought to pay, then it ought to pay the costs of the prosecution of the claims.

Mr. PETTIBONE. The man is forced to go to court in order to obtain relief, and the Government ought to pay the costs.

Mr. TUCKER. I demand the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division, there were—ayes 113, noes 8.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. TOWNSHEND and Mr. TUCKER.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 152, noes 11.

So the previous question was ordered; under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for a division on the question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 150, noes 9.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No quorum has voted.

Mr. TOWSHEND and Mr. TUCKER were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 103, noes 1.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of no quorum?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do insist upon it. If we can have a vote by yeas and nays I will withdraw the demand.

Mr. TUCKER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will resume their places and continue the count.

The tellers reported—ayes 166, noes 3.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 127) for the relief of H. K. Belding;

A bill (S. 228) for the erection of a public building at Camden, N. J.;

A bill (S. 634) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 1577) to amend the third section of an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the Sac and Fox and Iowa Indian reservations in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885;

A bill (S. 1614) granting a pension to Sarah C. Wright;

A bill (S. 1844) granting a pension to Orrin P. Cooley;

A bill (S. 1882) to repeal parts of an act relating to the tax on the business of real-estate agents in the District of Columbia, approved June 20, 1872;

A bill (S. 1997) granting a pension to Mrs. Abbie B. Heath;

A bill (S. 2029) granting an increase of pension to Elvira Bliss Sheldon;

A bill (S. 2037) for the relief of Mary Anna Egan;

A bill (S. 2132) granting a pension to Fridoline Glastetter;

A bill (S. 2144) granting an increase of pension to Grace F. Edes;

A bill (S. 2173) granting a pension to Benjamin Obekiah;

A bill (S. 2321) granting an increase of pension to Clara B. Davidson;

A bill (S. 2330) for the relief of Anthon Eitapence;

A bill (S. 2334) granting a pension to Isaac Ransom;

A bill (S. 2587) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ward;

A bill (S. 2600) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to make police regulations for the government of said District; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 90) appointing James B. Angell a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

ANDREW A. KELLY.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (by request), by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10662) for the relief of Andrew A. Kelly; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ELIAS C. WELDON.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (by request), by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 10663) granting a pension to Elias C. Weldon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. NELSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10664) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

INVESTMENT IN UNITED STATES BONDS.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10665) to provide for the investment of certain funds in the Treasury in bonds of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

ALLOWANCE OF CERTAIN CLAIMS.

Mr. RICHARDSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10666) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTURED AND ABANDONED PROPERTY.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I now ask to call up the bill (H. R. 7883) on the House Calendar—a bill in relation to the claims arising under the provisions of the captured and abandoned property acts, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the right of action in the Court of Claims under the provisions of the captured and abandoned property acts be, and the same hereby is, revived and extended for one year from and after the passage of this act, including all cases of seizures under said acts, or under color thereof, either before or after June 30, 1865, without regard to any statute of limitations; and all claims for such property not filed in said court within that period shall be forever barred: Provided, however, That where any of such claims have been filed before the Secretary of the Treasury, and proof taken in relation thereto, under the provisions of the fifth section of the act of May 18, 1872, the proof so taken, whether upon the part of the Government or the claimant, where it is made to appear by affidavit that the witnesses are dead or can not be found, shall be used in evidence in the said Court of Claims as though taken in pursuance of the rules of said court; and the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the call of said court, on the motion of either party, shall transmit said proofs and all the papers in the case to the said Court of Claims; and all judgments rendered in favor of the claimants shall be paid out of the captured and abandoned property fund, as provided by section 3689 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 2. That in the trial of causes before the Court of Claims no person shall be excluded as a witness because he is a party to or interested in the same; and any claimant or party in interest in any suit may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government, and when refusing so to testify, or willfully testifying falsely, shall not be entitled to relief; and the testimony of such witness may be used by either party.

SEC. 3. That if it shall appear to the court, in any case, that testimony has been duly taken by either party prior to the passage of this act, or that testimony taken in any other case under the rules of the court is pertinent to the issues involved, the same, so far as relevant, may be used in other cases pending in said court.

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman signify what time he proposes to allow for debate?

Mr. CULBERSON. How much time will satisfy you?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. This bill is of vast consequence in its effects, but there is nothing about it that requires any great length of time for discussion. I hardly think, however, you will be able to get it to a vote this evening.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think so; we have an hour yet. I am willing to give you forty minutes and we will take but twenty of the hour.

Mr. TUCKER. Why take up all the time with this bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. Or you may take twenty minutes and we will take ten, if that will be satisfactory.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I hardly think we will be able to get through this evening. Several gentlemen have signified a desire to be heard briefly in opposition.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, and I ask the attention of the House for a few moments only, until I can explain its provisions and the reasons for its introduction. My statement must necessarily be brief and hurried, as the committee desire to dispose of as much business as possible in the remainder of the time allotted to it.

Under the captured and abandoned property acts passed in 1863 and 1864 there was property seized sufficient to make the proceeds amount to something over $31,000,000. It will be remembered that under the act of 1863 and the act of 1864 the Treasury agents of the Government of the United States were authorized to seize in the insurrectionary districts all property designated as abandoned. Under those two acts of 1863 and 1864, the latter being a mere supplement of the other, a large amount of property was seized from the time of the passage of the act of 1863 until August, 1866. The act of 1863 provided that any person whose property had been seized and sold and the proceeds placed in the Treasury might bring his suit in the Court of Claims and recover the proceeds of the sale of the property, provided the suit should be brought within two years after the close of the war.

Suits were instituted in the Court of Claims under that provision of the statute and over $12,000,000 were paid out in judgments of the Court of Claims. On special acts of relief $290,000 were paid out. Paid on judgments against Treasury agents, $60,000 and over. Paid on judgments under the act of March, 1863, $9,800. Paid by the Secretary of the Treasury under act of May, 1872, $195,000. Disbursed for expenses under the joint resolution, $75,000. Other amounts were paid out, leaving in the Treasury of the United States $10,512,000.96.

It will be observed—and I want to make my statement as brief as possible—that the war of the rebellion closed on the 20th day of August, 1866; for all judicial purposes it was so declared by the Supreme Court in the case of Cline against the United States, 13 Wallace. Therefore, on the 20th day of August, 1868, the statute of limitation provided for in the act of 1863 had made a bar. In 1872 Congress opened the bar and authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to take proofs in favor of any claimant who might make application for any part of the money. Under that resolution, however, no claim was to be entertained after five months from the passage of that act. Under that act the Secretary of the Treasury paid out $195,000, leaving ten million and odd dollars in the Treasury. That amount still remains in the Treasury.

Congress is in the habit every session of passing private bills allowing persons to bring suits in the Court of Claims and prove their title to this property. This bill under consideration provides a general remedy. It allows every person who has or claims any interest in this fund to institute his suit in the Court of Claims within one year after its passage, and if he can make his claim to any part of property good, then he is entitled to receive such proceeds of the property as may be found in the Treasury. If there are no proceeds in the Treasury to the credit of the property then, as a matter of course, he is not to be paid. The claimant must not only prove that his property was seized and sold by the officers or agents of the Government, but must also prove what amount of the proceeds of the sale was paid into the Treasury. It is not the object of the bill to make the Government responsible for any more money than it received.

The reason why this money remains in the Treasury I now propose to state. The act of 1863 provided that the claimants, in addition to ownership and deposit of the money, should prove loyalty; failing in that, the Court of Claims could not enter a judgment in their favor for any part of this money. As a matter of course the bulk of the property now in the Treasury to the credit of this fund belongs to persons who have been classed as disloyal, and who, under the act of 1863, because of disloyalty, could not make the proof necessary in order to obtain a judgment and secure their interest in the fund. The loyal claimants, or those who have been able to convince the court of their loyalty, have all been paid. As a matter of fact many persons at the South, in the insurrectionary districts, who were clearly entitled to an interest in this fund, understood all the while that they were required to prove loyalty before they could receive the money for which their property had been sold. But in 1869 the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Cline, 13 Wallace, which I have not the time to read, decided that after the President's proclamation of general amnesty the disability on account of disloyalty was removed, and that a plaintiff in such case in the Court of Claims was not required to prove loyalty in order to obtain judgment in his behalf.

It will be remembered that there were several proclamations in 1863, in 1864, and in 1865, all of them conditional proclamations, all of them excepting classes of Southern men from their operation. The Supreme Court held, in the case referred to, that all of those embraced within those proclamations who had complied with the conditions of the proclamation were entitled to receive the proceeds of their property upon proper proof; and in the case referred to the court decided that after the general proclamation of amnesty and pardon there was no necessity at all to prove loyalty in order to set up a right and claim to this fund.

The court held that the money does not belong to the Government of the United States; that neither the property nor its proceeds had been confiscated, and that the Government held the fund in trust for those to whom, of right, it belonged.

It will be remembered that this statute of limitation commenced to run on the 20th day of August, 1866, the day on which the war closed. Those at the South especially who were entitled to make this claim never filed their suits, because they did not know what the effect of the President's proclamation or proclamations in regard to amnesty and pardon might be; and the result was that until the decision of the Supreme Court in 1869 was promulgated our people did not know that they had a standing in court.

Mr. REED. Did not know that they were pardoned?

Mr. CULBERSON. Oh, yes; they knew that; but they did not know that they had any standing in court under the act of 1863. That information came too late, for the statute of limitations had made a bar against their claims. The bar was complete on the 20th of August, 1868.

Mr. LONG. And the object of this bill is to let them in?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes, sir; the object of this bill is to remove the bar and let in all those who claim an interest in this fund on account of property taken from them—to let them come in and make proof of their claims.

Mr. RANNEY. Simply to get rid of the limitation.

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes, to get rid of the statute of limitation.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to ask my colleague whether this bill provides that these claimants shall prove that their property went into the Treasury.

Mr. CULBERSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. MILLS. Then it does not stop at the mere taking of the property by the agents of the Government.

Mr. CULBERSON. No. The judgments of this court are to be made according to the permanent appropriation provision of section 2689 of the Revised Statutes. That provides that the returns of the proceeds of the sales of captured and abandoned property shall be paid out on the judgments of this court, and unless a claimant can prove that his property, seized as he alleges, was sold by the Treasury agent, and the proceeds placed in the Treasury, he can not recover a cent under this bill; and if he can make such proof, he can take out of the Treasury only as much as the Treasury agent saw proper to put in.

Mr. MILLS. And they did not put in one-tenth of it, either.

Mr. CULBERSON. I regret to say that much of the proceeds was misappropriated.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If I understand the statement of the gentleman from Texas, it is that this is a trust fund in the Treasury?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And that the beneficiaries are those who owned the property which was sold out of which this fund was realized?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And that nobody else is entitled to the money, and that it is only a question whether the money shall remain there in the Treasury or be distributed to those for whom it is held in trust?

Mr. CULBERSON. That is it.

Mr. BURROWS. Is this money kept as a separate fund, distinct from other funds in the Treasury?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think not.

Mr. HAMMOND. It is in the Treasury, and the Supreme Court says that it is held as a trust fund.

Mr. BURROWS. I did not know but that the passage of this bill might settle the surplus question. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. It would eventually.

Mr. CULBERSON. It does not affect the surplus at all, the money does not belong to the Government. I wish to have read an extract from the decision of the Supreme Court.

The Clerk read as follows:

That it was not the intention of Congress that the title to these proceeds should be divested absolutely out of the original owners of the property, seems clear upon a comparison of different parts of the act.

We have already seen that those articles which became by the simple fact of capture the property of the captor, as ordnance, munitions of war, and the like, or in which third parties acquired rights which might be made absolute by decree, as ships and other vessels captured as prize, were expressly excepted from the operation of the act; and it is reasonable to infer that it was the purpose of Congress that the proceeds of the property for which the special provision of the act was made should go into the Treasury without change of ownership. Certainly such was the intention in respect to the property of loyal men. That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, then hostile, might subsequently become loyal, appears probable from the circumstances that no provision is anywhere made for confiscation of it, while there is no trace in the statute book of intention to divest ownership of private property not excepted from the effect of this act otherwise than by proceedings for confiscation.

It is thus seen that, except as to property used in actual hostilities, as mentioned in the first section of the act of March 12, 1863, no titles were divested in the insurgent States, unless in pursuance of a judgment rendered after due legal proceedings. The Government recognized to the fullest extent the humane maxims of the modern law of nations, which exempt private property of noncombatant enemies from capture as booty of war; even the law of confiscation was sparingly applied. The cases were few indeed in which the property of any not engaged in actual hostilities was subjected to seizure and sale.

We have recently decided in the case of Armstrong against the United States that the President's proclamation of December 25, 1868, granting pardon and amnesty unconditionally and without reservation to all who participated, directly or indirectly, in the late rebellion relieves claimants of captured and abandoned property from proof of adhesion to the United States during the late civil war. It was therefore unnecessary to prove such adhesion or personal pardon for taking part in the rebellion against the United States. The judgment of the Court of Claims dismissing the petition is reversed.

These extracts show that the Government never undertook to divest the title to these proceeds out of the original owners. Mingling this fund with the surplus I trust will not be regarded as confiscation.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the gentleman from Texas will permit me, I wish to ask another question. As I understand this bill it provides that a judgment rendered shall be paid out of the fund. Now, suppose that a hundred bales of cotton belonging to a particular person were captured and sold, but the proceeds of only fifty bales were turned into the Treasury; there is nothing on the face of this bill to prevent recovery for the value of the hundred bales. The bill provides, as I understand, that the judgment rendered shall be paid, not out of the proceeds of the particular cotton which may have been seized, but out of the entire fund. If that is so, the proceeds of one lot of cotton may be appropriated to pay for cotton the proceeds of which were not, in fact, or only in very small part, paid into the Treasury.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the bill taken as a whole is subject to the gentleman's criticism. If it is, however, I desire to say to him that I am perfectly willing to have the bill amended. If the gentleman will turn to that provision of the bill extending from line 22 to line 26 he will find this language:

And all judgments rendered in favor of the claimants shall be paid out of the captured and abandoned property fund, as provided by section 3689 Revised Statutes.

That section, I think, fixes as the mode of payment that the judgment shall be paid out of the proceeds of the claimant's own property.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have not examined that section of the Revised Statutes, but on the face of the bill we are not advised as to whether the result I have described might not follow.

Mr. MILLS. Can the party recover any more than was paid into the Treasury for his cotton?

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the point which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] raises.

Mr. MILLS. The bill, as I understand, provides that the party can recover only the amount of money that has gone into the Treasury as the proceeds of his property.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No; the bill appears to provide that the claimant may recover the value of the cotton, whatever it is.

Mr. MILLS. May recover the amount paid into the Treasury. Does not the bill so provide?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No, sir.

Mr. CULBERSON. The provision of the bill—

All judgments rendered in favor of the claimants shall be paid out of the captured and abandoned property fund, as provided by section 3689 of the Revised Statutes.

Upon an examination of section 3689 I find this provision:

UNDER THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Return of the proceeds of captured and abandoned property:

For the return of proceeds from the sale of captured and abandoned property in insurrectionary districts, to the owners thereof, who may, to the satisfaction of the Court of Claims, prove their right to and ownership of said property.

Now the provision of the bill is that judgments shall be paid according to that section.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman from Texas will allow me to suggest that the suitor must aver that the United States Government has in its possession certain trust property. The suit is simply for the recovery of that particular property.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But I desired to know whether under the captured and abandoned property acts the suit must be prosecuted for the fund in the Treasury, or for the value of the property.

Mr. HAMMOND. Only for the fund in the Treasury. The suit undertakes to pursue that fund as the proceeds of the suitor's property.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE].

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] for the opportunity he has so kindly given me of saying something for this bill, in which many of my constituents have a direct and personal interest. The explanation furnished the House by him, though brief, is as fair as the bill is just to the United States. In my opinion there has been no measure considered by this House presenting stronger equitable claims. The purpose of it is to provide for the recovery in the Court of Claims by actions in the names of the proper owners certain moneys had, received, and held by the Government for their benefit, the net proceeds of the sale of property seized under the act approved March 12, 1863 (12 Statutes, page 820), and the acts amendatory thereof. For reasons that I will state further on in my remarks, I do not think that the bill offers the owners of this fund all the relief that they are entitled to; but, believing that it is impossible to secure more during this Congress, adhering to the old maxim that "a half loaf is better than none," I cheerfully accept it and hope that it may become a law. If the claimants had been citizens of the Northern States I think their demands would have been settled years ago. Yea, many doubtful claims of citizens of such States were paid out of the fund by the Secretary.

The following statement is supposed to show the amounts paid in, paid out, and remaining in the Treasury:

Whole amount of abandoned and captured property sales		$31,722,466 20
Cost of collecting, sale, and other expenses	$6,551,000 00
Transferred to Freedman's Bureau	243,000 00
Internal-revenue taxes and commercial-intercourse fees	1,406,000 00
Released to claimants by Secretaries Chase, Fessenden, and McCulloch	2,550,675 24
		10,750,675 24
Balance covered into Treasury under resolution of March 30, 1872		20,971,790 96
Paid on special acts of relief	$290,906 32
Paid on judgments against Treasury agents	64,557 27

That the character of the fund sought to be reached by this bill may be understood thoroughly, I desire to refer to the several statutes under which the seizures and sales were made in connection with the confiscation acts, as well as to the collection and management of the fund.

NOT CONFISCATION.

There appears to be an impression in the minds of some who evidently have not studied the acts in question that the property, a part of the proceeds of which are involved in this bill, was confiscated. Such is not the case. There was no intention on the part of Congress, and no attempt on the part of the Government at confiscation. It is well settled, as Congress alone has power to make "rules concerning captures," that without an act of Congress there can be no forfeiture or confiscation of the private property of non-combatants on land. The only acts of confiscation passed by Congress affecting citizens in the seceding States are those of August 6, 1861 (12 Statutes, page 319), and July 17, 1862 (12 Statutes, page 590), and these only provide for the condemnation and sale of property belonging to officers and soldiers of the Confederate Government, and such of the property of disloyal persons as might be found in any loyal State or Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia, and then only after a proceeding in rem on the part of the United States in the proper courts, and at the end of this proceeding the property or fund is to be "disposed of as the court shall decree." There is nothing in this statute inconsistent with the abandoned and captured property acts. They can both stand.

COMPENSATION FOR PROPERTY OF NON-COMBATANTS.

Judge Kent, in the first volume of his commentaries, in treating of the rights of belligerent nations in relation to each other, says that "the general usage now is, not to touch private property upon land without making compensation."

The Supreme Court in Klein's case, in referring to these laws and the policy of the United States in the late war, said: "The cases were few indeed in which the property of any not engaged in actual hostilities was subjected to seizure and sale." This modern doctrine, so well founded in humanity, is also in keeping with the practice of this Government in its war with the republic of Mexico.

We learn from the history of that war that Mr. Marcy, the Secretary of War, by an order of September 22, 1846, directed General Taylor in his invasion of that country, then at war with this, not to appropriate private property to public use without compensation. Will our friends who have evinced a disposition to oppose this bill tell me why the same principle should not be applied to the Southern States? To insist upon another and a harsher rule would be indicative of a want of liberality and fairness on their part, and the enforcement of such would be inconsistent with the dignity of this Government, of which they insist the Southern States have always been a part. Do they propose to nullify and disregard the celebrated resolution of July 22, 1861, which declared that the war was not to be prosecuted "in any spirit of oppression nor for any purpose of conquest or subjugation?"

These were no idle, meaningless words. They were expressive of the feeling of a large majority of the Union people of the United States and particularly of the Union Democrats—announced at the most critical period of the war amid intense excitement. They meant an earnest call for help when the enemy was "in arms around the capital." They went out to the country on the day after the two contending armies had met in battle array at Bull Run. In that, the first important and ever-memorable fight, the Union forces lost and the well-equipped army of General McDowell was "dispersed in rout." With that official declaration on the part of Congress at that important juncture the patriotism of the North was aroused and unified. Democrats and Republicans alike joined in the fight "to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired." Opposition to this bill is nothing less than a disregard of this resolution. As an humble Representative of a small part of this restored and indissoluble Union of independent States may I not ask the Union soldiers of this House to see that the pledges made by that resolution are redeemed and that this private property, taken without compensation, be restored as far as possible to the rightful owners.

AUTHORITY FOR AND EFFECT OF THE SEIZURES.

By the first section of the act under which the seizures were made the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized "to appoint a special agent or agents to receive and collect all abandoned or captured property" in any of the States in rebellion. The second section requires that "all sales of such property shall be at auction to the highest bidder, and the proceeds thereof shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States."

In the third section it is provided that "any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property may, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof in the Court of Claims; and on proof to the satisfaction of said court of his ownership of said property, of his right to the proceeds thereof, and that he has never given any aid or comfort to the present rebellion, to receive the residue of such proceeds," after the deduction of all expenses attending the seizure and disposition thereof.

The act approved July 2, 1864 (13 Statutes, 375), declared that property "shall be regarded as abandoned when the lawful owner thereof shall be voluntarily absent therefrom and engaged, either in arms or otherwise, in aiding or encouraging the rebellion."

Although Congress failed to define "captured" property, it is very clear to my mind that it did not include property that the agents might see fit to take, because they had no power of capture. The Secretary of the Treasury, in a circular dated July 3, 1863, correctly defined it as property "which had been seized or taken from hostile possession by the military and naval forces of the United States."

It is manifest that under the last-named act all cotton, sugar, rice, and tobacco received by the military officers or soldiers, as well as the Treasury agents, ought to have been treated as "captured or abandoned property," and should have been disposed of and dealt with as the second section of the act provides; that is, sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury for the owners to await the decision of the Court of Claims.

THE PARDON OF THE PRESIDENT RESTORED PROPERTY RIGHTS.

The first and most important question to be settled is, whether persons who gave aid or comfort to the rebellion are entitled to the benefits of the acts in question. If not, then the people who were at the time residing in the South, and from whom the property was taken, have no interest, because I am free to admit that those of them who did not take up arms submitted to the confederate states, obeyed their laws, and in some way contributed to the support of the government. They followed the State rather than the National Government. It was natural that they should, and it is no disgrace that they did. While in some cases the property of children too young to take any part in the war or to know anything about the issues between the two sections of the Union was taken, generally the seizures were of the property of persons who in some way aided in the rebellion or sympathized with it. But I respectfully submit that so much of the statute as made proof of loyalty necessary to a recovery was nullified by the several proclamations of pardon and amnesty at various times issued by the President of the United States. By section 2 of Article II of the Constitution, the President is given "power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment;" besides, Congress, in the act of July 17, 1862, made an authoritative suggestion that he should do so, "with such exceptions and at such time and on such conditions" as he might deem expedient for the public welfare.

Acting upon this suggestion President Lincoln, on the 8th day of December, 1863, by a public proclamation, pardoned all persons, with a few exceptions, who had participated in the rebellion, "with restoration of all rights of property except as to slaves," upon the condition that they would take what is commonly called the amnesty oath.

In his annual message to Congress at the same time he gave his reasons for his action in the following words:

> Laws and proclamations were enacted and put forth for the purpose of aiding in the suppression of the rebellion. To give their fullest effect there had to be a pledge for their maintenance. In my judgment they have aided and will further aid the cause for which they were intended. To now abandon them would not only be to relinquish a lever of power, but would also be a cruel and astounding breach of faith. For these and other reasons it is thought best that support of these measures shall be included in the oath, and it is believed the Executive may lawfully claim it in return for pardon and restoration of forfeited rights, which he has clear constitutional power to withhold altogether or grant upon the terms which he shall deem wisest for the public interest.

Continuing the policy commenced by Mr. Lincoln, President Johnson published several proclamations, each reducing the list of exceptions, until finally, on the 25th day of December, 1868, he made the pardon universal and unconditional. I give it in full:

A PROCLAMATION.

> Whereas, the President of the United States has heretofore set forth several proclamations, offering amnesty and pardon to persons who had been or were concerned in the late rebellion against the lawful authority of the Government of the United States, which proclamations were severally issued on the 8th day of December, 1863, on the 26th day of March, 1864, on the 29th day of May, 1865, on the 7th day of September, 1867, and on the 4th day of July, in the present year; and
> Whereas the authority of the Federal Government having been re-established in all the States and Territories within the jurisdiction of the United States, it is believed that such prudential reservations and exceptions as at the dates of said severa proclamations were deemed necessary and proper may now be wisely and justly relinquished, and that a universal amnesty and pardon for participation in said rebellion extended to all who have borne any part therein will tend to secure permanent peace, order, and prosperity throughout the land, and to renew and fully restore confidence and fraternal feeling among the whole people, and their respect for and attachment to the National Government, designed by its patriotic founders for the general good.
> Now, therefore, be it known that I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, by virtue of the power and authority in me vested by the Constitution, and in the name of the sovereign people of the United States, do hereby proclaim and declare unconditionally, and without reservation, to all and to every person who directly or indirectly participated in the late insurrection or rebellion, a full pardon and amnesty for the offense of treason against the United States, or of adhering to their enemies during the late civil war, with restoration of all rights, privileges, and immunities under the Constitution and the laws which have been made in pursuance thereof.
> In testimony whereof I have signed these presents with my hand, and have caused the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, the twenty-fifth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight, and of the In-[SEAL.] dependence of the United States of America the ninety-third.
ANDREW JOHNSON.

By the President:
F. W. SEWARD,
Acting Secretary of State.

It will be observed that no oath was required in this.

On the 30th day of April, 1870, the decision and judgment of the court in the case of Padelford, in 9 Wallace, 531, was announced, to the effect that participation in the rebellion was no bar to a recovery. The court, referring to a previous decision, said:

In the case of Garland this court held the effect of a pardon to be such "that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense;" and in the case of Armstrong's foundry we held that the general pardon granted to him relieved him from a penalty which he had incurred to the United States.

And, continuing, used this language as to the effect of the pardon upon property rights:

If, in other respects, the petitioner made the proof which under the act entitled him to a decree for the proceeds of his property, the law makes the proof of pardon a complete substitute for proof that he gave no aid or comfort to the rebellion. A different construction would, as it seems to us, defeat the manifest intent of the proclamation and of the act of Congress which authorized it. Under the proclamation and the act the Government is a trustee, holding the proceeds of the petitioner's property for his benefit; and having been fully reimbursed for all expenses incurred in that character, loses nothing by the judgment, which simply awards to the petitioner what is his own.

This was sound law and strictly in keeping with the policy upon which Congress and the President had acted, but was not satisfactory to the Congress as made up at that time, and so a scheme was set on foot to nullify the effect of the pardon and this decision as well after the terms had been accepted and the conditions faithfully performed on the part of the Southern people, whose property had been taken from them, the result of which was the passage of the following proviso to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1871, which became a law July 12, 1870:

Provided, That no pardon or amnesty granted by the President, whether general or special, by proclamation or otherwise, nor any acceptance of such pardon or amnesty, nor oath taken, or other act performed in pursuance or as a condition thereof, shall be admissible in evidence on the part of any claimant in the Court of Claims, as evidence in support of any claim against the United States, or to establish the standing of any claimant in said court, or his right to bring or maintain suit therein; nor shall any such pardon, amnesty, acceptance, oath, or other act as aforesaid, heretofore offered or put in evidence on behalf of any claimant in said court, be used or considered by said court, or by the appellate court, on appeal from said court, in deciding upon the claim of said claimant, or any appeal therefrom, as any part of the proof to sustain the claim of the claimant, or to entitle him to maintain his action in said Court of Claims, or on appeal therefrom; but the proof of loyalty required by the abandoned and captured property act, and by the sections of several acts quoted, shall be made by proof of the matters required, irrespective of the effect of any executive proclamation, pardon, amnesty, or other act of condonation or oblivion. And in all cases where judgment shall have been heretofore rendered in the Court of Claims in favor of any claimant, on any other proof of loyalty than such as is above required and provided, and which is hereby declared to have been and to be the true intent and meaning of said respective acts, the Supreme Court shall, on appeal, have no further jurisdiction of the cause, and shall dismiss the same for want of jurisdiction.

And provided further, That whenever any pardon shall have heretofore been granted by the President of the United States to any person bringing suit in the Court of Claims, for the proceeds of abandoned or captured property under the said act, approved 12th March, 1863, and the acts amendatory of the same, and such pardon shall recite in substance that such person took part in the late rebellion against the Government of the United States, or was guilty of any act of rebellion against, or disloyalty to, the United States, and such pardon shall have been accepted in writing by the person to whom the same issued, with an express disclaimer of and protestation against such fact of guilt contained in such acceptance, such pardon and acceptance shall be taken and deemed in such suit in the said Court of Claims, and on appeal therefrom, conclusive evidence that such person did take part in, and give aid and comfort to, the late rebellion, and did not maintain true allegiance or consistently adhere to the United States; and on proof of such pardon and acceptance, which proof may be heard summarily, on motion or otherwise, the jurisdiction of the court in the case shall cease, and the court shall forthwith dismiss the suit of such claimant.

The effect of this law, if valid, would have been to have made the acceptance of a pardon without disclaimer conclusive evidence of the offense pardoned, but of no value as evidence of the benefits secured by it in any of the courts—in short, to take away the effect which the court had adjudged that it had. The Supreme Court in Klein's case, 13 Wallace, held this proviso to be null and void. I quote the following from the decision upon that point:

Now it is clear that the Legislature can not change the effect of such a pardon any more than the Executive can change a law. Yet this is attempted by the provision under consideration. The court is required to receive special pardons as evidence of guilt, and to treat them as null and void. It is required to disregard pardons granted by proclamation on condition, though the condition has been fulfilled, and to deny them their legal effect. This certainly impairs the executive authority and directs the court to be instrumental to that end.

In the same opinion the doctrine announced in Padelford's case was reasserted with such force by the Chief-Justice that it ought to be regarded as settled. I make a few citations from it upon that point:

1. That it was not the intention of Congress, by the enactment of that statute, that the title to property seized under it should be divested from the loyal owners.
2. That the proceeds of the property should go into the Treasury without change of ownership.
3. That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal.
4. That it was for the Government itself to determine whether those proceeds should be restored to the owner or not.
5. That the President's proclamations of pardon and amnesty, with restoration of rights of property, and particularly that of July 4, 1868, was a decision on the part of the Government which decided affirmatively the right of all the owners of such property to the proceeds thereof in the Treasury; and the restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned.
6. And that "the Government constituted itself the trustee for those who by that act were declared entitled to the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, and for those whom it should thereafter recognize as entitled."

Continuing, the court say:

That it was not the intention of Congress that the title to these proceeds should be divested absolutely out of the original owners of the property seems clear upon a comparison of different parts of the act.

And concludes with this strong language:

The title to the proceeds of the property which came to the possession of the Government by capture or abandonment, with the exceptions already noticed, was in no case divested from the original owner. It was for the Government itself to determine whether these proceeds should be restored to the owner or not. The promise of the restoration of all rights of property decided that question affirmatively as to all persons who availed themselves of the proffered pardon. * * * The restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned, on application within two years from the close of the war. It was, in fact, promised for an equivalent. "Pardon and restoration of political rights" were "in return" for the oath and its fulfillment.

To refuse it would be a breach of faith not less cruel and astounding than to abandon the freed people whom the Executive had promised to maintain in their freedom.

So I insist that when the act is considered in the light of the pardon and these decisions of the Supreme Court, that it should be read as if the words "and that he has never given any aid or comfort to the present rebellion," in the third section, were stricken out.

The offer of pardon and amnesty by the lawful authority of the Government and its acceptance by the people to whom tendered was in the nature of a contract. It was made by the concurrent action of Congress and the President. It had all the elements of a national agreement. The consideration was received; the conditions performed on the part of the people. They have kept faith with the Government, but it yet remains to be seen whether the Government will perform its part of the agreement. Many of the people interested in this fund died in their allegiance, and the real beneficiaries of the trust are their widows and children, against whom not even the charge of disloyalty can be made, and thus we see how great the wrong and unjustifiable the perfidy. No government can afford to permit so manifest a wrong without invoking the curses of all Christendom upon it.

In olden times the people who would repudiate their agreements received the censure of the civilized world. For many centuries "Punic faith" has been referred to as expressive of all that is false and faithless in nations, but there can not be found in Carthaginian history a more utter disregard of plighted national faith than the refusal to pay this money over to the people from whom it was taken and for whom it is held in trust. There is nothing in either ancient or modern history that equals such injustice, unless it be the collection from the Southern farmers of the illegal and unequal tax upon raw cotton by the same Government after peace.

THE MODE OF SEIZURES AND SALES.

On the 31st day of March, A. D. 1863, after the passage of the first act above referred to, the Secretary of the Treasury authorized and directed the agents theretofore appointed under the intercourse laws to execute the provisions of the act of March 12, 1863, and orders were issued by the Secretaries of War and the Navy requiring the officers of their respective Departments to turn over all captured and abandoned property in their possession to said agents. Under these arrangements, by which the agents were paid a salary and the Army officers prohibited from disposing of such property as they might capture or find, but little property was seized, and, in the language of the then Secretary of the Treasury, it was "necessary to provide more adequate means of securing the cotton." And so he, on the 11th day of September, 1863, made and promulgated, with the approval of the President, regulations by which "the cotton" could be secured; one of which was to allow as much as 25 per cent. of the proceeds of the property for collecting, preparing, and delivering the same.

Under this system, which, as he says, was "generally adopted in these collections," the country was soon filled with a set of unscrupulous twenty-five-per-cent. agents, who, although ostensibly appointed to gather up and seize "abandoned" property, insisted that it was their duty to take all cotton without reference to whether it was legally exempt from seizure or not. Acting under a law which only authorized them to take "abandoned" property, they made contracts with the owners of property for voluntary abandonment, under a promise in writing that the same would be forwarded and disposed of for the use and benefit of the owners.

This plan was held out to the owners as the surest and safest plan to protect their property. If it failed to get the cotton, then the charge of disloyalty was at once made and the property taken, although the owner might not be "voluntarily absent therefrom," but present protesting against the seizure. It made but little difference to these contractors, because they received their 25 per cent. and in many cases appropriated the whole of the proceeds. If any such chanced to be reported and was ordered to be released it was upon the condition that the owner "first pay or cause to be paid all costs, charges, or expenses paid or incurred by them in any way on account of said cotton, and execute and deliver, also, to any agent from whom any of it is received, a certificate of probable cause of seizure, which will protect and hold harmless the Government and all its officers and agents against any claim for loss or damage sustained on account of its seizure, detention, or removal."

The amounts deducted from the proceeds under such circumstances comprised the expenses of collection, rebaling, transportation, insurance, freight, expenses of sale, commissions, &c., which were paid to the many persons employed to perform the services and labor, supervising and assistant agents. So that it made no difference to the Government contractor whether the cotton was, in fact, abandoned property or not, nor whether the owner was loyal or disloyal, since he got his part of the booty and protection "against any claim for loss or damage." Was there ever before such a premium upon robbery by a Government? This much, Mr. Speaker, was either allowed or authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury during the war.

But the grand scheme of general plunder commenced after the South had surrendered, when there was no one "absent" from his property engaged either in arms or otherwise in aiding or encouraging the rebellion. The rebellion had been suppressed, and the decision of the sword accepted as final by the people of the Southern States. They were anxious to return to self-government in the Union at once. While there were absentees from nearly every household in that beloved land, they were not engaged in arms or otherwise in aiding or encouraging the rebellion. No, but sleeping far away in "the temple of silence and reconciliation," while their friends and families, in the midst of want and waste, with hearts full of sorrow and sadness, were beginning the work of restoration, realizing the truth of the statement that "the only cure for grief is action." The military forces had been withdrawn from the districts where such property was situated. In this condition of affairs, and under the pretext of gathering up cotton that belonged to the confederate government, agents were sent among the people of the South to vex, annoy, and plunder them. Many of these agents "regularly documented" by the Department, in base collusion with lawless men of the South, organized a regular system of pillage, and, as has been said by a prominent Republican official, "every species of intrigue and peculation and theft were resorted to."

The Secretary, in one of his reports, says:

> While thus engaged in making collections of the aforesaid property contractors frequently seized the property of private individuals, who complained to the Department for redress, which upon clear proof was fully afforded.

But we are assured by the same official that—> in no case, however, it is believed was the property or its proceeds restored to any unpardoned rebel.

No proof was sufficiently strong to secure a release for a resident of the South, while little or no proof of ownership was required of a Northern man known to be loyal.

THE MANAGEMENT OF THE FUND AFTER SALE.

Instead of paying the proceeds thereof "into the Treasury," as the act required should be done, it was placed to the credit of F. E. Spinner as special agent, and large sums and various amounts paid out of it by him without any order or judgment of the Court of Claims. In some cases he refused to obey the orders of this court. The sum of $10,750,675.24 was paid out in this way, and of this only the sum of $2,550,675.24 was paid to the claimants, the remainder, $8,200,000, was paid for costs, expenses, taxes, &c., it being more than one-fourth of the amount of money reported as realized from the sales of all property under these acts.

There was little or no check upon the agents. Although the law required "books of accounts to be kept, showing from whom such property was received, the costs of transportation, and proceeds of the sale thereof," the different lots were so mixed and the books so imperfectly kept that it is difficult to get reliable information about particular transactions. Some claims were paid twice, while others were allowed and paid after the limitation had expired. Attorneys' fees and clerk-hire due from the Government were freely paid out of it. The management of this fund by the Treasury officials is only equaled by the measures adopted for its collection. A clerk in that Department, under oath as a witness, says that the fund was "held by F. E. Spinner as special agent, and it was lying there loose, and whoever could rake up a little claim could get it." The records show that many were raked up, and much of the money wasted.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Having seen that the title to the property was not divested and that it is held for persons who aided in the rebellion, as well as those who did not, there is nothing left except the limitation of two years to be disposed of.

Claimants were allowed two years after the suppression of the rebellion to present their claims, but it was not known when this commenced until the limitation had expired; at least it was a question to be determined, and was not decided until 1869 (see Anderson vs. U. S., 9 Wall., p. 56), when the day was fixed for judicial purposes as August 20, 1866. The limitation of two years expired August 20, 1868.

The effect of the pardon was not understood until after this, because the Court of Claims had held that proof of loyalty was necessary, and also that no appeal from their judgment was authorized under the act. Hence a large majority of claimants did not file their claims, and many of those who did had adverse judgments on the question of loyalty, and the time for appeal had expired before it was known that they had such right in these cases. In view of all this, let me ask if the great Government of the United States, against which the statute of limitations never runs, shall itself be allowed to plead it so as to appropriate to its own use trust money? In ordinary individual trusts the statute of limitations does not operate in favor of trustees. As this is a trust arising from an act of Congress, by which the Government itself has appointed itself and assumed to act as trustee for its citizens, it ought not to do less than grant that measure of justice which it would demand and enforce if the positions were reversed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask the gentleman from Texas whether he will be willing to accept as an amendment a motion to insert, after the word "acts," in the third line of the fourth section, "and acts amendatory thereof?"

Mr. CULBERSON. I decline to accept that amendment. I reserve the remaining portion of my time.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I suppose I am now occupying the floor in my own right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. And that I have the disposal of an hour.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I have but very few words that I wish to speak on this subject of my own, and I do not know of but one or two on this side who wish to occupy time in regard to it. The statement of the case made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is substantially as I understand the facts to be, and that leaves but this question now, practically, whether we are prepared now, whether we are prepared on either side of this House to remove the disabilities under which the claimants under this bill are now laboring.

There was property captured and abandoned; property which was abandoned and other property which was captured. We are not aware here now of what precise use was being made of the property captured, or of any considerable portion of this property resulting in the money in the Treasury of the United States. A law was passed by which every loyal claimant might have two years after the war in which to pursue his remedy, recover his judgment, and receive his pay. As has been stated by the distinguished gentleman from Texas, those in that category made use of the time, commenced their suits, and recovered their money, and have been paid. There was a class, unfortunately, who then were not in condition to take advantage of that legislation. Neither did they attempt for the most part to do so. They recognized the situation in which they were placed by the law, and by their own acts, and remained silent, asking nothing at the hands of the Government. They had taken arms in their hands, knowing they must abide by the consequences of rebellion against the United States, and they acquiesced in the position in which their act and the law placed them. Afterward the President, on the 20th of August, 1866, made his proclamation of amnesty and pardon, and afterward the Supreme Court of the United States decided the effect of that proclamation was to restore the civil rights of these parties. It was only that, and nothing more. If they had been meritorious in their disloyalty that merit was still theirs, and if they had been criminal in that disloyalty that demerit and that sin was theirs. No President of the United States could add to one or take away from the other.

That is the moral aspect of the question, and the same reasons existed in 1863, when this original law was passed, by which a distinction was made between those who bore arms against the Government and those who aided the United States under it. The pardon, the amnesty related only to the punishment. It did not change the condition of things or remove one iota from the responsibility of the parties engaged.

Now, sir, it may be that no demerit was attached to persons who found themselves in that condition. It is not for me here to say. But I say we did; and do say every reason then is a reason now, unless there be some other circumstance intervening which changes it.

Nay, more, Mr. Speaker, there is, to this day, a statute, referred to incidentally, I take it, by my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], which denies the right—prevents the officers of the Government of the United States from paying money to those who were disloyal.

It comes right to this, and there is nothing more in it, and nothing more of it. This law existed once for the benefit of these parties who are now making claim to this money. They were not aware of the condition of the law, or its existence, and are not responsible for the neglect of failing to avail themselves of its benefit. But, still it existed. The time passed within which suit might be brought. They brought no suit. Now, is there anything in the history of this whole matter—is there anything which will warrant or demand of us, in justice, taking in view the whole situation, to say to them, we will take you out of this difficulty in which you placed yourselves?

There was a time and a way whereby you could have been and remained in a position not antagonistic to the Government of the United States. You chose, from whatever reason actuated you, to take the other course, and having taken it, for myself, I am bound to say, as a representative of my own people, and for myself individually, that I dare not interfere in this matter. I am not called upon to interfere. It might as well be understood now, it ought to have been understood earlier, that rebellion, causeless and unsuccessful rebellion against a good Government, is not only an offense but a crime. That consequences are liable to flow from it injurious to the parties engaged; that such consequences have issued from their own acts, and may hereafter issue from their own acts is the natural sequence of their own views and position; and the parties standing guilty have no right to demand from me or from him who did not sin in that direction to put them back in the position they might have occupied if they had been loyal and true men and actual American citizens.

Mr. Speaker, for myself this is all there is of it. I would have avoided saying this, for it does me no pleasure to say that which may be unpleasant to any. I could not say less and do justice to my own convictions and represent my own people.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me a few minutes in order that I may make a statement in this connection for him to reply to?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I have no disposition to get into a controversy with any person.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman can reply to the statement if he will permit me to occupy the floor for a few moments.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I shall have no occasion to reply to any gentleman. I have no anxiety about the vote of anybody else; but simply desired to state my own position and convictions.

Mr. Speaker, there are ten millions of dollars in the Treasury, a separate fund in trust, they say. Not so. Ten millions of money is in the Treasury like all and any other money in the Treasury, but about which there is a separate account kept. If this bill passes it will go out; if this bill does not pass it will stay there and be used like any other money in the Treasury.

Now, may I inquire how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied seven minutes of his hour only.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I yield to my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HEPBURN was recognized.

Mr. MORRISON. If the gentleman from Iowa will allow me, I would like to make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HEPBURN. I shall occupy but a few moments; but will yield to the gentleman if he desires to make that motion, retaining the floor.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. You will retain the floor, of course.

A MEMBER. This question will go over as unfinished business, and may not come up again if you yield.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House do now adjourn, if the gentleman from Iowa yields the floor.

Mr. OATES. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, on reflection I will not yield just at this moment.

I want to call the attention of the House to some of the provisions of this act, and shall occupy but a very little time. The first provision of the bill to which I call attention is:

That the right of action in the Court of Claims under the provisions of the captured and abandoned property acts be, and the same hereby is, revived and extended for one year from and after the passage of this act.

I would like to ask if that is not a clear revival of the original act conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims; and if the jurisdiction will not be as it was prior to the time when it was limited by the act making proof of loyalty a prerequisite for jurisdiction? The object I had in view, therefore, in asking the gentleman from Texas to accept the amendment to insert the words "and the acts amendatory thereof," fater the word "acts," in the fourth line of the first section, was to preserve as far as might be the present status and jurisdiction of that court. Under the provisions of this act the court will have jurisdiction without regard in any sense to the question of loyalty.

Another objection that I have is this: Very many questions of this kind have been decided by the Treasury Department. Under the terms of this law they will again be adjudicated in the Court of Claims. In the second adjudication all the ex parte testimony that was taken in this prior investigation will be competent testimony. It seems to me that ought not to be so.

Again, the third section of the bill provides not only that such testimony—the testimony taken when the case was pending before the Treasury Department—may be used, but the testimony taken in any other case may be used in a given case as well. No matter how fraudulent, no matter how irregular, no matter whether the United States was represented or not in the taking of the testimony, any of the testimony taken in any of the cases preceding may, under the terms of this bill, be used in any case that may be brought up.

Mr. CULBERSON. Testimony taken according to law.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is an express provision in regard to such cases. The section I refer to reads as follows:

That if it shall appear to the court, in any case, that testimony has been duly taken by either party prior to the passage of this act, or that testimony taken in any other case under the rules of the court is pertinent to the issues involved, the same, so far as relevant, may be used in other cases pending in said court.

Mr. CULBERSON. It provides the testimony regularly taken may be used in another case if pertinent.

Mr. HEPBURN. But suppose it is entirely ex parte. I am informed that testimony taken in these prior investigations is used in certain instances in the Court of Claims without cross-examination or any of the usual tests.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does the gentleman think testimony taken without cross-examination is duly taken?

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand in certain cases it is so regarded by the courts and so used now.

Mr. HAMMOND. Duly taken means being taken according to law.

Mr. HEPBURN. It depends entirely on a matter of construction of the individual court, I take it.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I yield now for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. OATES rose.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I yield only for a motion to adjourn, and for no other purpose.

Mr. OATES. I do not propose to make any speech. It is not often I have desired to make a speech here, and I have never desired to do so more than now. But as I can not do it for want of time, I ask unanimous consent that I may print my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1386) making appropriation for the completion of a public building at Fort Scott, Kans.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 59, noes 25; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Petition of the J. C. Ayer Co. for the repeal of internal-revenue taxes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SCOTT: Petition of 347 citizens of Venango, North East, Cornplanter, Irvine, Albion, and Swerly Borough, Pa.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 14, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COURTS IN MICHIGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1458) to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan at Bay City, in said district, which was in line 3, to strike out the words "Bay City," and insert in lieu thereof the words "East Saginaw."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to move non-concurrence in the amendment, and to ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate non-concur in the amendment proposed by the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents proceedings and resolutions of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, in favor of the passage of such laws as will furnish the benefits of the Signal Service to the farmers of the country; also, favoring the bill for the establishment and maintenance of agricultural experiment-stations. As the memorial is brief, if there be no objection, it will be printed in the RECORD, and ordered to lie on the table.

The memorial is as follows:

NATIONAL GRANGE, PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Under the instructions of Hon. Put Darden, worthy master of the National Grange, I have the honor to forward to you the following resolutions and reports unanimously adopted at the twentieth session of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, held in the city of Philadelphia, from November 10 to 18, and to ask your favorable attention to the same:

Whereas it is of more importance to farmers than to any other class of citizens to know what changes are likely to occur in the weather; and

Whereas the farmers furnish three-fourths of the exports of the country, and are the largest tax-payers in support of the General Government: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be respectfully requested to pass such laws as shall furnish the benefits of the Signal Service to the farmers of the country.

On motion, the committee on education made a special report, under a suspension of the discussion of the report of the committee on agriculture, as follows:

Reference of the measure now pending in Congress, as formulated in what is known as the "Hatch bill," providing for the establishment and maintenance of agricultural experiment-stations, having been made to this committee, its members have made critical examinations of the provisions therein embraced, and they unite in the conclusion that the work contemplated is a proper subject for which cost should be met by the General Government.

There is also unanimous agreement by the committee to the proposition that such work should be delegated to experiment-stations, already established under State control, where such institutions are now in operation, and the committee, therefore, recommends that this body advise such change in the bill as will give it this effect. Manifestly, it is in accord with the spirit and purpose of the bill that the work be deputed to those stations where they have already been proved worthy of confidence and support. Your committee, therefore, deems it a matter of economy and wisdom that this appropriation for such States as have independent agricultural experiment-stations be given to them rather than to new stations. Without this change, it is very plain that the full purpose of the bill will not be attained.

Another change desired by the committee is, that the appropriation for any State in which there is no experiment-station under State control, and in which a college has been established under the provisions of the land grant act of 1862, and has departed from the purposes of that act, by neglecting agricultural education, and in which State there is a duly organized board of agriculture, the appropriation be made subject to direction by such board for the uses contemplated in the bill, and that upon the establishment in any such State of an independent agricultural experiment-station, the appropriation shall go thereto without the intervention of authority exercised by any college, board, or faculty.

It is, therefore, recommended that this National Grange endeavor to make such representations to the House Committee on Agriculture as will result in the changes herein proposed.

Resolved, That the worthy master of the National Grange be instructed to bring this matter before Congress, in such a manner as will plainly set forth the views of our national order.

Resolved, That the worthy master of the National Grange is hereby instructed and empowered to enforce the legislative provisions of this body, as embraced in the various reports and resolutions submitted at the present session, by committees or otherwise, as he may deem necessary.

Very respectfully,
[SEAL.]

JOHN TRIMBLE,
Secretary, National Grange.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
President United States Senate.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of the State of New Hampshire, officially signed, praying for the enactment of the educational bill into a law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLAIR. I present resolutions adopted by the Colored Baptist State Convention, held at Opelika, Ala., favoring an appropriation in aid of the Colored People's World's Exposition; also a petition of the colored and white citizens and county officials of Greenville, Ala., praying Congress to make an appropriation in aid of the Colored People's World's Exposition, and a petition of citizens, business men, and county officials of Mobile, Ala., praying Congress to make an appropriation to aid the Colored People's World's Exposition. These petitions were sent to me by the committees of these organizations, and I move their reference to the Committee on Appropriations, to accompany a bill on the same subject now pending there.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by the Peoria Improvement Association, of Peoria, Ill., remonstrating against the short-haul section of the interstate-commerce bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMERON presented petitions of citizens of Philadelphia, Allentown, and Bloomsburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for a reduction of internal taxes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of J. F. Bennett and 18 other citizens of Tunbridge, N. H., praying for the passage of the Hatch experiment-station bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a petition of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, signed by the president, Miss Frances E. Willard, and all the executive officers, in which they set forth the alarming frequency of assaults upon women and the frightful indignities to which even little girls are subject; that the statutes of the country are insufficient for their protection, and praying for the enactment of such statutes as shall provide for the adequate punishment of crimes against women and girls; also other legislation bearing upon the same subject. As the petition contemplates general legislation, I move its reference to the Committtee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of Laura A. Wright, of Langdon,

N. H., praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SABIN presented a petition of citizens of Hutchinson, Minn., praying for the passage of the Hatch experiment-station bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of the Duluth (Minn.) Board of Trade, praying for the extension and enlargement of harbor facilities at the port of Duluth; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7083) to incorporate the trustees of the Young Woman's Christian Home in Washington, D. C., reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 3134) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Foster; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 3135) granting a pension to Catherine E. Babcock; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANDERSON. On behalf of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], and at his request, I introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 3136) granting a pension to Richard R. Jacobs was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 3137) granting arrears in certain cases to those pensioned by special acts of Congress; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 3138) to amend "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BOWEN introduced a bill (S. 3139) granting an increase of pension to George W. Blake; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 3140) granting a pension to Joseph Scholfield and Sarah N. Giese; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 3141) providing for reference of causes in the courts of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3142) granting a pension to William H. Carte; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MANDERSON (in behalf of Mr. HARRISON) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EUSTIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That Capt. William W. Ivory have leave to withdraw the papers in his case from the files of the Senate, subject to the rules of the Senate.

Ordered, That Judson S. Post have leave to withdraw the papers in his case from the files of the Senate.

DISTRICT LIQUOR LICENSES.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to report to the Senate the number of licensed dealers in intoxicating liquors, wholesale and retail, respectively, in the District, the rate of license charged, and the authority under which the licenses have been granted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of "An act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875; and

A bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 127) for the relief of H. K. Belding;

A bill (S. 228) for the erection of a public building at Camden, N. J.;

A bill (S. 634) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 766) for the relief of Francis Denmead;

A bill (S. 1130) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (S. R. 90) appointing James B. Angell a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions the morning business is closed. Pending the consideration of the Calendar, which is now in order, as there is no motion pending, the Chair will lay before the Senate the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the report?

Mr. CULLOM. I have nothing to say if we are ready to vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the question pending before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. What has become of the Calendar?

Mr. CULLOM. The pending question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announced that the morning business was over and business under the Calendar was in order. No motion having been made, the Chair laid before the Senate the conference report.

Mr. HOAR. Does it require a motion to proceed with the Calendar in the morning hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announced that business on the Calendar was pending, and no motion was made to proceed with any case on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed the cases on the Calendar were to be taken up in their order without a motion.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope we shall proceed at once with the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts ask that cases on the Calendar be reported in their order?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first case on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the interstate-commerce bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the Calendar, the Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the interstate-commerce bill. The question is on that motion. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. HOAR. I call for a division.

Mr. CULLOM. If I may be allowed to say a word——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

The question being again put, there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 12; no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. INGALLS. Pending that, I ask leave to offer a resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The want of a quorum is disclosed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum voting, the Chair can not receive any morning business.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] is paired upon all questions connnected with the interstate-commerce bill with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. Were the Senator from West Virginia present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired on the bill with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. BECK. I have received a dispatch from the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] announcing that he is paired upon all questions connected with the bill with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. The Senator from West Virginia would vote "yea" on the pending motion if he were present.

Mr. COKE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MAXEY] is paired on all questions growing out of the bill with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. If my colleague were here he would vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired for the day with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], but I do not understand that the pair affects this vote; so that I shall vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES (after having voted in the negative). I am reminded that I voted while paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY]. I desire to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote is withdrawn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. VEST], not expecting a vote to come up so early in the day in regard to this question, is unavoidably detained by business away from the Senate for a few moments. My colleague would vote "yea" if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Allison,	Conger,	Hale,	Pugh,
Beck,	Cullom,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Walthall,

Call,	George,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Payne,
Coke,	Gorman,	Platt,
Colquitt,	Gray,	Plumb,

NAYS—12.

Blair,	Cheney,	Hoar,	Sewell,
Cameron,	Frye,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Chace,	Hawley,	Sawyer,	Spooner.

ABSENT—26.

Aldrich,	Jones of Florida,	Miller,	Teller,
Butler,	Jones of Nevada,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Van Wyck,
Camden,	Kenna,	Morgan,	Vest,
Dawes,	McMillan,	Ransom,	Voorhees,
Evarts,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.
Hampton,	Mahone,	Sabin,
Harrison,	Maxey,	Stanford,

So the motion of Mr. CULLOM was agreed to.

BUREAU CONTINGENT FUNDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of the Interior; which was read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, January 13, 1887.

SIR: This Department is in receipt of Senate resolution of January 11, 1887, as follows:

"Resolved, That the heads of the several Departments of State, the Treasury, Interior, War, and Navy, the Department of Justice and of Agriculture are directed to transmit to the Senate the estimates for the contingent fund of each bureau in each of said Departments respectively, showing the sum of money required for the contingent fund of each of said bureaus respectively."

In response to the foregoing resolution I beg leave to state that no estimates for the contingent fund of each of the bureaus of this Department have been made since the consolidation of the contingent funds for the whole Department into one common fund, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883 (United States Statutes at Large, volume 22, page 558).

In this connection, I beg leave to further state that said consolidation has resulted in a large saving to the Government on account of contingent expenditures.

Very respectfully,

H. L. MULDROW,
Acting Secretary.

PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. MORGAN subsequently said: I desire to ask that the order may be changed in respect to the report which came in from the Secretary of the Interior a moment ago, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask that it be laid upon the table, and I desire to state very briefly my reasons for this.

I am quite surprised to hear that an estimate for the contingent expenses of the Interior Department has been sent in to the Senate of the United States or to Congress without any subdivision of the estimate from the different bureaus upon which that is based. We are informed by the Secretary of the Interior that there is no evidence, no report in his office from the bureau chiefs, upon which is founded this estimate for the contingent expenses of the Department. I am very much at a loss to know how they could ever have arrived at a proper estimate otherwise than by mere guess-work, unless they have some evidence upon which to predicate that general estimate.

I wish to investigate the subject a little more thoroughly, and therefore I ask that the order be changed, and that the report lie on the table for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. I will suggest to the Senator from Alabama that he call for the details of the estimate. I do not know whether his resolution contemplates that or not, but if the details of this estimate were called for they certainly must be found in the Interior Department, because the bulk estimates must be made upon some detail.

Mr. MORGAN. That was precisely the purpose of my resolution, and I can only regard this as an evasion in not having answered the resolution candidly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the communication will lie on the table, and not be referred.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether the surveyor-general of the Territory of New Mexico, or the surveyor-general of the Territory of Arizona, has taken any action in the nature of a readjudication or otherwise respecting any private land claim in either of said Territories, which has been acted upon by his predecessor in office in the manner contemplated by the eighth section of the act of Congress approved July 22, 1854, or the act of Congress approved July 15, 1870, and has been and is now pending in Congress for confirmation or recognition, and if so, to furnish the Senate with a list of all such claims so acted on, and the authority of law under which such officer assumes to have acted.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator from Kansas wish the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. INGALLS. If there is no objection. If there is objection it may go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the first part read again.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope we shall proceed with the consideration of the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. INGALLS. This is merely morning business—a resolution calling for information. It will cause no debate.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senate has voted to proceed with the consideration of the interstate-commerce bill, and we are to finish it to-day.

Mr. COCKRELL. This will only take a moment.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection, if it will only take a moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the resolution read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ARMS, ETC., FOR THE MILITIA.

Mr. SEWELL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives as follows: Insert "four" instead of "six" in first line of first section, so as to read "four hundred thousand dollars," and agree to the same.

W. J. SEWELL,
JOS. R. HAWLEY,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WM. McADOO,
A. J. HOPKINS,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2791) to provide for an American register for the steamer Nuevo Moctezuma, of Philadelphia, Pa.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the following bills:

A bill (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon; and

A bill (S. 1386) for the completion of a public building at Fort Scott, Kans.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing, with pamphlet covers, of 7,000 copies of the volumes of the reports from the consuls of the United States on the trade guilds of Europe and the laws and regulations by which they are governed, published by the Department of State.

COURTS IN MICHIGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. GEORGE as the conference committee on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1458) to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan at Bay City, in said district.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the bill as it came from the committee in the beginning was the result of a popular movement which had been in progress for nearly twenty years. It is a movement which has had my hearty sympathy and my official support from the beginning. So far as it was in favor of cheap transportation and of regulating the conduct of the great railroad carriers of the country in those things which affect the convenience of the people, while it was a matter deeply interesting to the rest of the country, it was essential to the very life of the community to which I belong. I do not think any candid person will question the sincerity of any representative of a New England State when he professes a desire to accomplish the object proposed by this legislation. We have in many of our populous cities, as in the city where I live, no considerable water-power. The State to which I belong, the most populous of that group, it is sometimes said produces nothing but granite and ice. We have to bring coal, which is the chief motive power for our industries, by an interstate transportation to the seaboard. We have to bring from other States and from Canada the lumber and the brick which compose our dwellings. The food which feeds our workingmen comes from the West—from a constantly receding center—while the iron, the wool, the leather, the cotton, are brought half-way across a continent and by the skill of our working-people are wrought into machinery, cloth, shoes, and other articles for the comfort of men, and then carried back again to be sold in their new form to the people who have produced the material.

There is not an hour of the day's life of a Massachusetts workingman in which he does not feel the pressure of the unjust demands of the railroad when those unjust demands exist anywhere. There is not an article of his necessity or of his luxury into the cost of which the price of transportation over the continent does not enter. There is not a product of his skill, there is not an ambition of his life, whether for wealth, for honor, or for usefulness, which is not affected by the railroad and upon which it does not press as a burden when it is permitted to make an unjust charge.

I myself helped in 1874 to frame the first important bill on this subject which passed the House of Representatives. It is somewhat amusing, as I listen to the gentlemen who think the resistance to the unjust provisions of the conference report comes from the railroads, to remember the history of that legislation. We were encountered by the old State rights doctrine, by the representatives of the Democratic party, and by a strict party vote. A bill which contained all the wholesome provisions of this bill was resisted on the old State rights doctrine.

When I heard the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], who resisted with all his might this legislation when the men who were advocating it were standing at the beginning of a reform and trying to bring public sentiment up to it, who resisted it with all his might and recorded his vote against it on every occasion—when I heard him taunting those who desire to make this legislation just and reasonable and effective of its professed object with acting in the interest of the railroads, I felt like applying to him the remark of a worthy old deacon who was spurred up by a new zealous convert for his want of Christian zeal, who said he had noticed "that young Christians were a good deal like young bumble bees, much the largest when first hatched." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I wish to be permitted to repeat the argument which satisfies me without question of the national authority to pass such legislation as is proposed in the main features of the bill. The argument is all in a nutshell. The Constitution gives to Congress the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the States.

The regulation of commerce is the regulation of the exchange of commodities. The exchange of commodities is commerce. The regulation of commerce with foreign nations is the regulation of the exchange of commodities with foreign nations. The regulation of commerce among the several States is the regulation of the exchange of commodities among the several States. An essential part of such an exchange is the conveyance of the commodity from the seller to the buyer. Regulation is the prescribing of a rule or law, or fixing the condition. To regulate the exchange of commodities is to prescribe the rule, or law, or condition under which such an exchange shall take place. An essential part of the regulation of commerce, therefore, is the prescribing rules, or laws, or conditions of the conveyance of commodities from the seller to the buyer. The fixing or regulating of tolls, or charges, or imposts for conveying commodities from the seller to the buyer is the prescribing of a condition of that conveyance. It is therefore a regulation of commerce.

Now, whenever the fixing or regulating of such imposts and tolls properly comes within the domain of the law-making power, or whenever such imposts or tolls should be regulated by law, the power which regulates commerce should properly regulate them. This is the settled and unquestioned understanding with reference to foreign commerce. The legislature does not ordinarily regulate rates of freight charged by public carriers for merchandise brought from abroad; not because such regulation would not be a regulation of commerce, but because such carriers are engaged in a business open to unrestricted competition, and it is deemed inexpedient to regulate commerce in that respect. But it exercises the power to regulate foreign commerce for the protection of the interests of the public in many respects where competition does not afford such protection.

I have therefore no difficulty in supporting this bill in its main and principal features. I think these imperial forces which the genius of the American people in modern times has created may be and must be rightfully curbed by imperial restraints. I am willing to go, therefore, with the authors and framers of this bill as far as they have gone in the protection of the internal transport interstate trade of the country, wherever that protection is not afforded by unrestricted competition. But I object to two features of the report of the conference committee, because I regard those features as intended to strike down and deprive the people of the protection created by healthy competition and as calculated to raise and not to diminish the burden which the railroads already have placed upon the commerce of the country. If this legislation be defeated, the gentlemen are responsible who will not do all the good which this bill contemplates except upon condition that they also may be permitted to do what seems to some of us unmistakably and clearly evil.

It was said the other day by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] that the Senate might take it for granted that if this conference report were recommitted or rejected nothing could be accomplished. Well, I do not see upon what the Senator from Tennessee based that statement. I suppose it is not proper to speak of the proceedings of the House of Representatives. But I may say that I have read in a publication upon our table that there is a body somewhere which considered this bill, nearly one-half of which preferred the original Senate bill without these amendments. There was only 24 majority for the present proposition. In other words, there was a majority of only 24 for the changes in legislation which were proposed by the majority of that assembly, and I am informed on very high authority indeed that a very considerable number of those 24 have already changed their mind. Now, does anybody believe, if the question were stated to the members of that assembly whether they would accomplish everything that the original Senate bill proposed to accomplish, or nothing, that they would insist on a demand to have these objectionable clauses retained? No, Mr. President; the question is not between this conference report or nothing. The question is between the bill as it was framed and adopted by the Senate and passed by a majority, including all, I think, but four members of this body, and inserting, against the original opinion of the Senate, of clauses which some of the great interests of the country feel will be fatal to their prosperity and to their very existence.

There are four great objects which this bill accomplishes which I heartily favor. It extends the common law—which does not exist in our national jurisprudence without affirmative legislation, as the Supreme Court has decided—to interstate commerce. It establishes the great principle of reasonableness—to be enforced by law, by judges and juries, and other tribunals that may be created, as the rule to prevail everywhere between the carrier and the customer.

Second. It establishes a commission, a constant supervisory national authority, which has worked so favorably wherever the experiment has been tried in the States.

Third. It requires publicity. It lets in the daylight on every transaction between the carrier and the customer.

Fourth. It prohibits unjust discrimination, whether that discrimination be between persons or between places or between transporting lines.

Mr. President, the opposition to this report does not come from railroad managers principally or originally. I have received many letters and many communications on this subject, and of these all but two have come from persons not interested in railroads, and one of these was from the receiver of a bankrupt railroad, who is heartily in favor of this report. It comes from men who are alarmed lest under its operation the rates at which they are now able to do large and profitable branches of business must be raised, and must be raised to the ruin of that business.

Now, what have we been aiming at in our public policy in this country? We withstood the whole railroad clamor of this country two years ago in order to improve our rivers and harbors, that competition with the water-ways might enable our Western farmers to send their grain to Europe.

The Western farmer in this new business, which, within the past fifteen years, this railroad policy at which this deadly blow is now aimed, has created, has become a merchant, whose competitors are the Ganges and the Bosphorus. The problem of our statesmen to-day is to maintain the Western farmer in comfort, in honor, and in wealth by a business in which he is to underbid the naked Oriental, fed on rice and living on 5 cents a day; in which he is to underbid a producer, the subject of the power which is to be his principal customer—a power which is pouring out its wealth by the hundred and the thousand million in order to compete with our through transportation of wheat and corn and pork to the English market. What is to happen under the policy which has grown up within the last twenty years?

We have got at this moment the best and cheapest railroad service on the face of the earth, with all its inconveniences, with all its imperfections. Suppose that with $7,500,000,000—I think that is the capital invested in railroads—it is quite likely that in a free country, especially one peopled by the English race, whose constitutional privilege and whose constant delight is grumbling, we may hear complaints of wrongs and injustice; but we have got, as the statistics show, at this moment the best, cheapest, most reliable, most convenient railroad service on the face of the globe.

The result has been a balance of trade continually in our favor for the past ten years, a thing never known in the history of this Government before, and I think never known in the history of any government for so long a period of time together before—a thing which the writers on economy declare to be impossible in the nature of things to be maintained by any one country for any large period of time; and yet this balance of trade by the very business which you are now striking at by this conference report has been maintained in our favor during all these years.

I wish, among many objections to this report, to occupy my time in pressing upon the attention of the Senate one, and one only. It is to a provision which, while it will affect railroads, strikes a fatal blow at the commerce of the great State and the great city that honor me with their confidence, and whom I represent in this Chamber. It injures, n my opinion, all pa rts of the country.

The exports of Boston have gone up from $10,000,000 in 1859 to $61,-000,000 in 1885. It was $72,000,000 in 1881, the apparent reduction being chiefly due to the decline of prices, and not to the diminution of quantity. The imports, which, of course, the exports largely create—for the ships that carry out sixty or seventy million of products from Boston Harbor to Europe will not come back empty—were $53,000,000 in 1885. It is the second port in the country in its foreign commerce. It exceeds New Orleans by $39,000,000; Philadelphia by $48,000,000; Baltimore by $69,000,000, in the total of imports and exports. In tonnage it is also the second port, having 1,152,415 tons burden entering from foreign ports, 975,495 clearing to foreign ports in 1885.

If you will look at the character of these exports it will be seen that they are very largely the products of sections of the country considerably more remote from Boston than from other important exporting cities, especially New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New Orleans, to say nothing of Montreal.

Among the exports of Boston for the year ending June 30, 1885, were:

	Value.
Wheat flour and wheat	$13,558,070
Indian corn and corn meal	2,465,566
Cattle	5,399,260
Raw cotton, gathered from North Texas, and Alabama, and Georgia, (some of the sea island cotton, from South Carolina, goes that way to European markets)	7,749,090
Beef—fresh, salted, and canned	2,821,327
Tallow	663,496
Mutton	11,446
Bacon	5,002,947
Ham	1,067,706
Pork	669,217
Lard	3,761,264
Other meat products	327,629
Butter	370,067
Cheese	1,027,064
Lard oil	78,792
	44,972,941

There are $45,000,000 taken to Boston to be exported, nearly all of which is the product of regions more remote from Boston than from either of its three principal rivals on the eastern seaboard, and carried to Boston also largely in competition with the great trunk line of Canada. Upon these exports, as I have said, depends so much of the import trade as is due to the fact that the exporting vessels must have a return cargo, and which would otherwise go to other ports.

Upon this export trade depend great lines of steamships, which dispatched 498 steamers, two in every three days, to foreign ports in 1884—195 to Canada, 303 to Europe.

The men who have created and built up this business, the whole of it the product of about fifteen or twenty years at the outside, object to two provisions of this report.

One they say will destroy the cheapness of transport on which this commerce depends; the other, the pooling clause, will destroy the steadiness of the business by putting it out of the power of the railroads to prevent the railroad wars, and that constant fluctuation which is the destruction of all trade. Now as to the first they agree in the interpretation of this bill with the Senator from Mississippi. They understand, as he does and as the Senator from Tennessee does, and as the conferees on the part of the House do, that this bill provides that where the only distinction between the two places is that there is competition pressing upon the one and not upon the other, that does not constitute dissimilar circumstances and conditions within the meaning of the bill.

It is true my honored friend from Mississippi paid a high compliment to the business men of the country who manage this vast business interest, chosen mainly for their capacity and their trustworthiness by the owners of this $7,500,000,000. He thinks that by "tricks and maneuvers" they will undoubtedly nullify this bill. He does not think anything will come of it except a raising of the rates as the result.

Mr. GEORGE. Temporarily, I said.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate for five minutes or so, simply to see who makes the objection. As I have said, it does not come from the railroad man, who wants to put up rates. It comes from the customer of the railroad, who wants to put them down, and who can not get on unless they are kept down, at least, to present prices. Here is the resolution of the United Transportation Committee of the various business associations in the city of Boston held January 3, 1887.

RESOLUTION OF UNITED TRANSPORTATION COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the members of the transportation committee of the various business associations in the city of Boston, held January 3, 1887, the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the United Transportation Committee of Boston the bill known as the "Interstate-commerce bill," as reported by the conference committee, would seriously affect the business interests of Boston.

Voted, That the chairman of the United Transportation Committee be delegated to go to Washington to represent the committee and endeavor to secure such amendment of the bill as will protect the business interests of Boston.

Business associations represented in committee:

New England Shoe & Leather Association, Boston Wholesale Grocers' Association, Boston Furniture Exchange, Boston Oil Trade Association, Boston Chamber of Commerce, Boston Merchants' Association—

An association said to represent $350,000,000 capital, and of whom there is not a man, I suppose, whose interests are not in conflict with those of the railroads in this matter of transportation—

—Boston Fruit & Produce Exchange, Boston Paper Trade Association, Drysalters' Club of New England, Earthenware & Glassware Association of Boston, Paint & Oil Club of New England.

Mr. President, when my honorable friend from Illinois, with all his ability, comes to the conclusion that he wants to diminish the railroad rates in this country, is not some little respect, after all, due to the opinions of men representing such interests as that, when they say that a certain measure will not only not reduce those rates to them, but it will raise them to a point which will prevent their business being able to live?

Here comes from another part of the country a similar remonstrance—from the Peoria Board of Trade of Illinois. It was read by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] yesterday, and I ask to put it in my remarks without reading it again.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE, PEORIA BOARD OF TRADE,
Peoria, Ill., January 1, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Your careful attention is requested to the inclosed resolutions recently passed by the directors of the Peoria Board of Trade.

While there is so much in the interstate-commerce bill that meets our approval, and while we fully appreciate the imperative necessity of reform in the conduct of the transportation business, still we feel that section 4 is so uncertain in its application that we are called upon to protest against it. If omitted from the bill enough of reform will yet remain to do vast good; and if, after investigation, the commission to be appointed find that the long-and-short-haul principle can be so applied as to work no injury, this feature can then be added by some future Congress.

Will you not aid us in our endeavor to secure what is of acknowledged benefit and avoid what is doubtful and unessential at the present time.

Respectfully yours,

W. H. BARTLETT, President.

PEORIA, ILL., December 30, 1886.

At a meeting of the directors of the Peoria Board of Trade, held this date, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas after mature and careful consideration of section 4, known as the "long-and-short-haul" clause of the interstate-commerce bill, now before Congress, it is the opinion of this board that the passage of the bill with the section mentioned will unsettle all business interests throughout the West; will depreciate the value of all farming lands west of the Middle States; will work directly in the interests of lake ports, lake transportation lines, Canadian roads, and the Eastern farmer: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That in the opinion of this board such radical and experimental legislation as contemplated by the section mentioned is not only uncalled for at the present time, but threatens widespread disaster to the most vital interests of the Western States.

Resolved, That the discretionary power given the commission to discriminate in the application of the "long-and-short-haul" clause as between different localities will at the best afford only uncertain and long-delayed relief, and will be apt to add merely another element of uncertainty to the transportation problem:

And be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Senators and Representatives of this State, and that our Representative, Hon. N. E.

WORTHINGTON, be requested to do all in his power to have the "long-and-short-haul" clause eliminated from the bill before its passage.

W. H. BARTLETT, President.
SAMUEL WILKINSON, Secretary.

Here are the resolutions passed by the Boston Chamber of Commerce, by a nearly unanimous vote, on the report of its committee:

BOSTON, January 12, 1887.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR:

The following resolutions were passed by the Boston Chamber of Commerce to-day by a nearly unanimous vote:

Whereas the act reported by the conference committee known as the interstate-commerce bill is now pending before Congress for final action; and

Whereas in the opinion of the Chamber of Commerce of Boston said act, if it become a law, will be detrimental to the business interests of Boston and New England: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the rigid enforcement of sections 2 and 4 would, in the opinion of this association, so increase the rates on the "long haul" from the West to the seaboard that agricultural products could only be grown in the far West for home consumption, except those States bordering on the Great Lakes or having connection with the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific Railways, thereby tending to develop the business of the port of Montreal and the two above-named foreign corporations at the expense of our American seaboard ports and transportation companies.

Resolved, That the foreign steamship lines that have been established and continued upon the foundation of equality of inland rates with New York, would by the operations of the provisions of this bill suffer to such an extent as would lead to their withdrawal to other ports, and that such a result would be most disastrous to the business interests of Boston, placing our importers and shippers at great disadvantage as compared with other ports, and most seriously affecting the growth and prosperity of our city.

Resolved, That we respectfully urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence in defeating this measure in its present form, and to endeavor to secure such amendments of the bill as will establish a permanant commission, whose business it would be, under suitable regulations, to supervise, in the interests of the public, all common carriers doing an interstate business.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts.

H. B. GOODWIN,
President.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] informs me that that was unanimously adopted by a viva voce vote.

Now, let us see what is the opinion of our friends in Canada in the present condition of things as to the working of the proposed law. I ask the Secretary to read here a dispatch from Halifax, Nova Scotia, dated December 3.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Special to Boston Post, December 4, 1886.]

WANT LOWER RATES—SHREWD YANKEE MERCHANTS GET AHEAD OF THEIR CANADIAN BROTHERS.

HALIFAX, N. S., December 3.

The dealers in breadstuffs here are making overtures to Saint John (N. B.) traders to protest against the action of the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railroads for increasing the freights on flour. Last August pressure was brought to bear on the minister of railways and a rebate freight of 10 cents allowed on every barrel. Two thousand barrels were reshipped to outports for the reason that the Michigan Central Railroad took Canadian flour in bond to Boston for 33 cents. Merchants then shipped it to outports on the Southern shore of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton in schooners at a cost of 8 or 9 cents, while freight to Halifax, from the same mill, was 42 cents. Boston firms thus secured the whole trade.

De Long & Seaman have annual sales in this province of $2,000,000. Halifax merchants, by means of the above rebate, again acquired trade, so that the receipts of flour by rail from Ontario trebled in September and the succeeding months. Now the winter rates from points on the Canada Southern Railroad to Boston are 42 cents; to Halifax, 63 cents, and as Boston merchants can reach outports by schooners which carry return cargoes at ballast rates as cheaply as Halifax merchants, the trade will again fall into Boston hands. The merchants can bring pressure to bear on the Government, who run the road from Quebec to Halifax. The Grand Trunk, however, which runs from Ontario, can make what rates it likes. The Canada Pacific Railroad, by working with the Michigan Central Road, has cut rates from the flour mills to Boston, but have a high tariff to their extreme eastern terminus. Merchants are in high hopes that things will be different when the short line is completed from Montreal to maritime ports, as then there will be several lines competing with the Government road. The Government have more or less influence on the management of the Canada Pacific and Grand Trunk, and the whole mercantile pressure of the two cities is being brought to bear to get them to endeavor to have the rates reduced.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, I wish to add to that the testimony of a very intelligent forwarding merchant of the firm of De Long & Seaman, largely engaged in the general commission business, which states very clearly this matter in relation to the driving of business to Canada. I ask that that also be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

E. R. De Long.] [J. Bennett.

De Long & Seaman, general commission merchants, and wholesale dealers in provisions and fishing supplies; Canada flour in bond a specialty. No. 5 Central Wharf. P. O. box 1397.

BOSTON, January 5, 1887.

(Dictated letter.)

DEAR SIR: We beg to bring before you the fact that the railroads in Canada, especially those governed by the Government, have been giving the merchants of the lower provinces a rebate of 10 cents a barrel on flour to encourage them ordering their goods all rail instead of via Boston, and the Government has lately sent a commission to the Lower Provinces to ascertain if this rebate is sufficient for them to cut off the trade coming through Boston. The merchants in their statements claim that they must have a still further reduction in freight for an extra rebate in order to control all the freight that way and prevent any freight coming via Boston. If the interstate-commerce bill passes, by which the different railroad companies from the West and Canada are held up to a stated rate, it will injure the trade here very materially. We, ourselves, ship about two hundred thousand barrels per annum to the Lower Provinces, which goods come through the West and Canada in transit for the Lower Provinces of the Dominion.

We make the above statement to show you that while our Government in passing this bill is going to tie the railroad companies up to certain rates, the Dominion Government are working entirely opposite in giving the merchants lower rates of freight, which works decidedly to the disadvantage of Boston.

Yours, respectfully,

DE LONG & SEAMAN.

P. S. Our Mr. De Long met Mr. Goodwin on the street and gave him that paper which had the dispatch which was telegraphed from Halifax to the Boston Post, and requested Mr. Goodwin to show it to you.

W. O. BLANEY, Esq., Boston, Mass.

Mr. HOAR. I have here also a letter from three firms, the John P. Squire Company, Charles H. Virth & Co., and Niles Brothers. John P. Squire, I suppose, is the largest single forwarder of pork and hogs in the country. He has an establishment near Boston. I should like to have that also read by the Secretary.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

BOSTON, January 7, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Believing that the passage of the bill now before Congress, known as the "Interstate-commerce bill," and entitled "An act to regulate commerce," would be extremely detrimental to all New England States, and particularly destructive of the growth and prosperity of the cities of Boston and Portland, and believing that the commercial interests of these United States do not, as a whole, or in any part thereof, demand such legislation as is set up in that bill, please allow us to urge you most earnestly to oppose and obstruct the passage of the bill in every way, to the end that the wings of foreign commerce may continue to whiten our New England shores, and peace and plenty prevail in the East, as well as in the West. We fully believe that the passage of this bill would inflict a disastrous blow upon all the commercial interests of New England.

JOHN P. SQUIRE CO.
CHAS. H. VIRTH & CO.
NILES BROTHERS.

Hon. GEO. F. HOAR,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. HOAR. I now send up to be read the resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce, which also took part in the meeting of the transportation board, whose proceedings I have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

BOSTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, January 12, 1887.

DEAR SIR: The following resolutions were passed to-day by a nearly unanimous vote of the Boston Chamber of Commerce:

"RESOLUTIONS ON INTERSTATE-COMMERCE BILL.

"Whereas the act reported by the conference committee, known as the interstate-commerce bill, is now pending before Congress for final action; and

"Whereas in the opinion of the Chamber of Commerce of Boston said act, if it becomes a law, will be detrimental to the business interests of Boston and New England: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the rigid enforcement of sections 2 and 4 would, in the opinion of this association, so increase the rates on the "long haul" from the West to the seaboard that agricultural products could only be grown in the Far West for home consumption, except in those States bordering on the great lakes or other water-ways, or having connections with the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific Railways, thereby tending to develop the business of the port of Montreal and the two above-named foreign corporations at the expense of our American seaboard ports and transportation companies.

"Resolved, That the foreign steamship lines that have been established and continued upon the foundation of equality of inland rates with New York would, by the operations of the provisions of this bill, suffer to such an extent as would lead to their withdrawal to other ports, and that such a result would be most disastrous to the business interests of Boston, placing our importers and shippers at great disadvantage as compared with other ports, and most seriously affecting the growth and prosperity of our city.

"Resolved, That we respectfully urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence in defeating this measure in its present form, and to endeavor to secure such amendment of the bill as will establish a permanent commission, whose business it would be, under suitable regulations, to supervise in the interests of the public all common carriers doing an interstate business.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts."

A true copy. Attest: W. H. PEARSON, Secretary.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to supplement these statements from these great commercial bodies whose interest demands the reduction of railroad rates, by resolutions of the Minneapolis Board of Trade, which I should like to have read in this connection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE INTERSTATE-COMMERCE BILL.

To the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Minnesota:

GENTLEMEN: The Minneapolis Board of Trade, at its regular meeting of December 22, 1886, unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That while this board of trade fully approves the general principle of national legislation for the control and regulation of our interstate carrying trade, and while in the main it concurs in the provisions of the compromise bill now pending before Congress, it thoroughly disapproves and deprecates the provisions of section 4, relating to what is known as the long and short haul, and of section 5, relating to pooling arrangements between parallel or competing railway lines. In the judgment of this board section 4, if enacted, would give to the proposed national commission powers whose exercise would always be dangerous and might easily become destructive to the interests of the distinctively agricultural sections of the country.

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed with instructions to forward the foregoing resolution to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, accompanied with a letter of transmission which shall more fully set forth the views of this board."

In forwarding these resolutions to you permit the undersigned, as the committee appointed for the purpose, to call your attention to the following brief summary of objections which, in the judgment of our board of trade, lie against sections 4 and 5 of the pending interstate-commerce bill, and respectfully to express the opinion that you can in no way render a more important or timely service to your constituents than by aggressively helping to secure the omission of these sections from the measure before it becomes a law. Allow us also, in passing, to remind you of the fact that, of the entire membership of the Minneapolis Board of Trade, representing all leading branches of legitimate business and productive industry, not half-a-dozen have any pecuniary interest in railroads, direct or indirect, and we do not know of half that number who are so interested. The board speaks for the producers and shippers of the Northwest. Further, it is fully recognized that national supervision of our railway system is necessary and best, in the interest both of the people and of the railways themselves; that this supervision has already been too long delayed; that there are wrongs to be righted and corporate abuses to be corrected, and that the pending interstate-commerce bill, when duly amended, will constitute a wise first step in the right direction. It is simply insisted that a measure which is necessarily experimental, and which deals with the most complicated and far-reaching commercial problems known to mankind, vitally affecting the interests of every class and of every section, should not go so far, or attempt so much, at the outset, as to cause infinite damage where it might accomplish unmeasured good.

OBJECTIONS:—THE "LONG AND SHORT HAUL."

(1) Section 4, relating to the "long and short haul," is, intentionally or unintentionally, vague and ambiguous in its language. If enacted into law its interpretation by the courts must, therefore, be wholly uncertain, its practical application doubtful, and some of its effects impossible to predict. This is sufficiently shown beforehand by the known fact that scarcely two persons understand the section alike—even zealous advocates of the bill as it stands differing widely as to the real meaning and intent of the words employed.

(2) Assuming that the section means what its language naturally imports, the consequence of enforcing such a law would, we believe, be gravely injurious to many important interests in all parts of the country, but especially would such enforcement prove destructive in its effect upon the great agricultural section of which our own State forms so important a part.

It would very greatly increase the cost to our people of heavy commodities of all kinds which are brought in from Eastern sections, including coal, without which our prairie farms could not be occupied.

It would ruinously depreciate the value of every bushel of wheat and every pound of beef produced in Minnesota, by compelling the railroads to adopt a freight tariff on through shipments eastward, which, if not prohibitory, would leave to our farmers no reward for their labor and invested means.

It would depress manufacturing industries and deprive many working men of employment.

It would reduce to a minimum the trade of the Northwest by largely destroying the purchasing ability of our producers.

It would drive a large share of the long-distance traffic from American to Canadian lines.

It would cripple, if it did not bankrupt, many railroads by compelling them to relinquish a large part of either their through or their local traffic—both of which are essential to their solvency.

The very people who ought to derive most benefit from legislation of this general character—the farmers and wage-earners of the country—would be the first and greatest sufferers from its injurious effects.

(3) It is not a sufficient answer to say that the bill gives to the proposed commission discretionary power to avert these otherwise inevitable calamities. The ambiguity of language, already mentioned, renders it doubtful whether this power is fully given; and even if it is conferred, its exercise would be a most unnecessary and dangerous prerogative to be vested in any untried commission, however able and disinterested, under an untried statute, in a difficult field, where national legislation is now making its first tentative venture. At best, it gives to five men, about whose competency, experience, and integrity nothing can be known in advance, almost autocratic power over the market value of hundreds of millions of dollars of railway stocks and bonds, over the market value of the agricultural products of half a continent, as well as of the lands upon which these products are grown.

So great a power and so tremendous a temptation to its abuse ought not to be presented unnecessarily to any committee of citizens or be made the foot-ball of politics. Besides, so enormous would be the task undertaken, and so extensive its domain, that no commission however capable could successively consider and adjust the inevitable frictions and controversies in time to prevent the predicted evils, if those evils in fact impend

THE PROHIBITION OF RAILWAY POOLING.

(4) Section 5, which arbitrarily prohibits the pooling of railway earnings, is not less objectionable than section 4. It proceeds upon the assumption that an amicable apportionment of traffic among substantially parallel railway lines destroys wholesome competition, creates a "monopoly," results in exorbitant transportation charges and thus wrongs the general body of producers, shippers, and consumers, who constitute the people. With exceptions so rare as only to prove the rule, this assumption is a fallacy, and legislation based upon it must prove a hurtful blunder.

The facts are that such apportionments of traffic are a natural and necessary outgrowth of the development of our national transportation system; that they constitute the only plan of self-preservation for railroads which time, and thought, and experience have been able to evolve from a most difficult and perplexing situation; that they are the only known and feasible alternative for that system of cut-throat competition which foments chronic "rate wars," and which, unless held in check, would end in the bankruptcy, first of the weak lines, and then of the strong ones—for a bankrupt railway, having no responsibility to bondholders or shareholders, is the most reckless and destructive of competitors. These adjustments and divisions of traffic, known as railway pools, do not raise transportation charges above a reasonable level. Almost without exception they have resulted in holding rates steadily at the lowest point at which the business can be done at a living profit. This is notably illustrated just now, as you are aware, in our own section. Never was there a closer pooling arrangement between trunk lines than that which now exists between the six roads leading from Minneapolis to Chicago, yet never were freight tariffs so low as at the present time, and never were the people better accommodated.

The well-known fact that, concurrently with the development of the railway-pooling system, railway rates have steadily, greatly, and everywhere decreased is a summary refutation of the whole theory on which section 5 is founded.

The pooling or apportionment system, besides preserving railways from insolvency, and railway investments from destruction, directly benefits every business community by giving some degree of uniformity and stability to transportation charges, and thus enabling business men to shape their course with greater certainty and safety. A railway-rate war, although it temporarily reduces the market price of transportation below actual cost, is universally and justly regarded as a misfortune to all legitimate lines of trade. Obviously it is of no advantage to the public to enjoy any service at less than its reasonable cost, including a fair return upon the capital invested in rendering that service. The rule of unregulated and unreasoning competition, followed by the "survival of the fittest," when applied to railroads, means their own ruin, with resulting calamity to every other business interest which is worth preserving.

The railway pool, honestly administered, is the natural balance-wheel of interstate commerce. Section 5 of the pending bill does not provide or suggest any substitute for this regulative and conservative agency. On the contrary, it would seem to render commercial chaos legally obligatory.

(5) It is not a sufficient answer to say that if found to be injurious in their working these provisions may be repealed at the next session of Congress. The mischief that can be accomplished by their operation during a single business season is simply immeasurable, and there is not the slightest necessity for assuming the risk.

The interstate-commerce bill has adequate scope for its initial purpose without including the sections to which objection is here made. Omitting these, the bill lays the broad foundation of a system of salutary legislation, which a little time and experience will develop and perfect. It is evolution, and not revolution, that the situation calls for. Such a policy will avoid the risk of serious and disastrous mistakes; at least it will not invite that demoralization of now reviving business, that shock to commercial confidence, that stagnation of enterprise, that aggravation of the labor difficulties, that wholesale depreciation and destruction of values which many competent and disinterested students of the problem foresee in case the bill becomes a law in its present form. The panic of 1873 was precipitated and intensified, if it was not largely caused, by injurious State legislation affecting railroads, hastily enacted in response to unreasoning clamor. It would seem to be hardly the part of wisdom or of statesmanship to incur even the liability of repeating that experience, and on a larger scale, during the present century.

With great respect, your obedient servants,

A. B. NETTLETON,
H. A. TOWNE,
EDMUND J. PHELPS,
T. B. WALKER,
Committee.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., January 5, 1887.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, every bushel of wheat, every bushel of corn, every barrel of flour, every animal, every other product of every kind, the sale of which or the export of which is destroyed by the operation of this legislation, is just so much deducted from the product and the value of the farms of the Northwest. Every increase of through rates is divided as a burden between the farmer of the Northwest and the consumer of the product in the Northeast or in foreign countries.

I wish to supplement what I have said, coming from the testimony of the business interests of Boston, by having read a very sensible and powerful letter written by Mr. J. M. Nave, of Kansas City, Mo., whom one of the Senators of that State knows, in which he points out the effect of this legislation on the States of Kansas, Missouri, and Nebraska, confirming what, I think, the honorable Senator from Iowa, now in his seat [Mr. WILSON], said a few years ago, that this legislation would be the end of cheap farming in the West. I ask to have the letter read.

The Chief Clerk read, as follows:

KANSAS CITY, January 10, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I dislike very much to intrude upon your valuable time, especially at this important time of legislation in Washington, when you are doubtless very much engaged in matters of importance pending, but the interstate-commerce bill is one of such vital importance to the people of the entire West, as well as the people of the entire country, that I do most respectfully ask that you listen to me for a few moments.

This bill, as it seems to me, and as it seems to merchants of the West, who are familiar with the transportation question, is one that is proposed by reason of the hostility on the part of the masses of the people, who are uninformed regarding transportation matters, against railroad companies. The bill has been carefully read and studied by a number of mercantile and commercial people in the West, and they all seem to be opposed to it—at the same time are diffident about offering their suggestions or making their opposition known to their friends and acquaintances in Congress and in the Senate. While every one will admit that some legislation is probably necessary to regulate railroads and transportation companies throughout the United States, the present bill now pending will certainly (if it becomes a law) work great injury to all of the Western States.

One feature especially, which is receiving the hostility of the farming or granger portion of the community, is the question of pooling; and this is a question which those who oppose it, doubtless to a great extent, do not understand. The fact of a number of railroad companies operating from common points in the East and to common points in the West, running through various districts of country, entering into an agreement to pool their rates in order to establish a uniform rate to common points, certainly tends to make the rates more stable; and stable rates are certainly in the interest of all concerned. A rate made today by one company, and cut to-morrow by another company will run all business into chaos. No one certainly ever heard of a rate being made higher at a pooled point than at a neighborhood point not pooled; so that no objection can be raised to the pool, because the effect is to establish a uniform rate, which is certainly to the interest of the patrons of the railroad companies; and at the same time it is a protection to the great transportation companies, whose management desire them to pay a revenue to their owners, or to protect them from bankruptcy.

You doubtless know that a great many complaints, in fact the majority of complaints, against the railroad companies are that the rates are unstable and not uniform, so that dealers can not depend upon them. The pooling of rates certainly does in a measure remedy this evil, and the provisions embraced in the interstate-commerce bill will abolish this remedy, and consequently will create a warfare amongst the railroad companies, which will work great injury to all of the business and to the agricultural interests of the Western country.

Then, again, the bill proposes, and one of the important features thereof is, to require railroad companies to carry at fluctuating rates, &c.

Then another feature of the bill, to which all the agricultural and commercial as well as other people of the West should take exception, is the feature which provides that the long haul and the short haul shall be identical, or proportionate. Should such a provision be enacted into a law, it would necessitate the farmers of Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri, and doubtless other Western States, to use their crops of corn (which they produce largely) for fuel, instead of shipping them to the markets of the world to furnish bread. How, under such a condition of rates, can the farmer of Missouri and Kansas compete with the farmer of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, in offering his corn, raised upon his land, to the New York, Baltimore, or Philadelphia market, through which our import goods all go, when he is compelled to pay a proportionate or a mileage rate of freight from the fields upon which his corn is produced?

I do really believe, and I have considered the matter carefully (at the same time offer my opinion only as an individual one), that if the bill, as it now stands, is passed it will cost the States of Nebraska, Missouri, and Kansas from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 annually by reason of the great depreciation of the value of the products they raise and on account of the increased rates of freight they will be compelled to pay to reach the markets of the world, and also by reason of the increased rates of freight they will be compelled to pay on the products of foreign countries or of the extreme East, which are absolutely necessary to the daily living of our Western people.

I make this suggestion to you in the full belief that the bill should not pass, and with the full knowledge that you know more about the matter than I do myself. I am satisfied that the commercial interests of this State, together with the manufacturing and agricultural interests of the State of Missouri, as well as the State of Kansas and the State of Nebraska, and all other Western States now demand, in their own interest and in common interest with each other, that this bill be defeated as it now stands.

I have written this letter to Hon. GEORGE G. VEST, of Missouri, to Hon. P. B. PLUMB, of Kansas, and to Hon. WILLIAM WARNER, of Kansas City, and Hon. JAMES N. BURNES, of Saint Joseph.

I shall be very much gratified, if you deem the above communication worthy of consideration, to have you show it to your friends and associates from the West, and request that they read the same, and consider the suggestions made, if such be worthy of consideration.

Yours, truly,

JAMES M. NAVE.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. GEORGE. With the consent of the Senator from Massachusetts, I should like to interrupt him to ask a question. I understand the objection of the Senator from Massachusetts to the provision in relation to the long haul and the short haul to be this: That now, under present conditions, the railroad companies are in the habit of making a rebate of 5 per cent. on exported products from the West so as to enable them to put Boston Harbor on an equal footing with New York Harbor in the shipment of freights. It has occurred to me, and to several Senators with whom I have talked on the subject, and especially the Senator from Iowa who sits on my left [Mr. ALLISON], that the difficulty would be obviated by a through bill of lading from Chicago or any other point West from which the shipments to Boston originate—a through bill of lading to the European port.

Then this 5 per cent. could be adjusted between the steamship line and the railroads without any interference at all with the provisions of this bill, the only restriction in that case being that the total charge from Chicago, supposing that to be the point from which the shipment was made to Liverpool, supposing that to be the point to which the shipment is destined, shall not be less than the charge from Chicago to Boston. Why would not that obviate the difficulty of the Senator?

Mr. HOAR. I should more naturally have spoken to that point a little later. But I will say at this time that, in the first place, that would require all the foreign exports which are forwarded by this vast Boston mercantile interest to find their buyer, or, at any rate, their immediate point of destination in Europe before they would reach Boston. Now, Mr. Squire cuts up his live hogs and exports them in the form of lard or pork or ham, as I understand. That is one answer, that it would make this great inconvenience.

Another answer to it is, that it would be an evasion of what the majority who favor this bill mean by it.

I am a little off from my point, but I will make it now. You are passing this bill—I am betraying nobody's secret in saying so—because you think it necessary to bow to a popular feeling on the subject of these interests which is likely to make itself felt in politics; therefore you yield when the people who make this demand for this part of this legislation come and say it is just that railroad prices should be proportioned to distance, and we demand that if you are going to take freight from Chicago ten miles east or a thousand and ten miles east, a particular article, you shall not under any circumstances charge any more for it than if you took it a thousand and twenty miles, no matter what its destination or what the competition at one point and the other. That is the demand, and the bill is based upon that erroneous fundamental propositon, as I conceive.

The answer to the Senator from Mississippi, it seems to me, is that the practical men who are interested in doing this business do not themselves conceive that they can make such an evasion as is proposed by the honorable Senator. You are putting on to this bill the stringent penalty of $5,000 for any single transaction in which it is disobeyed; and what railroad can for a year, until this commission gets around to it, or what group of railroads can take to Boston the forty-five or fifty millions of exports which they hope they will be able to send out of that port during the next twelve months and run the risk of the interpretation put on the bill of the conferees on the part of the House being held to be wrong and that of the Senator from Illinois being held to be right? They would have the amount of thousands of millions piled upon them as penalties if they happened to err in their construction.

Mr. GEORGE. With the permission of the Senator I will state to him that there is no provision in this bill which even squints at a prohibition of the kind of through shipments to Liverpool or Europe which is suggested, and it would not be an evasion. It was intended to be carried to a foreign port, and it would be in exact accordance with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Will not the Senator, in consideration of the importance of that single proposition, a vital point, just vote to recommit, and have that put in writing in words?

Mr. GEORGE. There is no difficulty about it in the world; you can not put your finger on a single clause to justify any other view.

Mr. HOAR. That is the Senator's opinion. I expect to put my finger on clauses which will have the effect I have stated.

Mr. GEORGE. May I be indulged in just one further remark?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is not only interrupting me, which I do not wish to object to, but he is forcing the discussion of certain points which I have not yet reached.

Mr. GEORGE. I beg pardon and will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, just look at the Western farmer, the agricultural interests interested in this, and see what the building up of this trade by this 5 per cent. rebate has done for the Northwest.

Twenty years ago the city of Boston had storage capacity in its elevators of about 500,000 bushels. To-day it has a storage capacity of 2,700,000. Twenty years ago the rate from the West to Boston was 3.7 cents per ton per mile. To-day it is .83 of one cent per ton per mile or less than one-fourth it was twenty years ago.

Mr. Edward Atkinson, a very high authority as a statistician, has stated within a few days that on that freight there is a saving of $800,000,000 in the reduction of the prices of freight as compared with what the same quantity of freight would have had to pay twenty years ago:

The traffic of last year cost $800,000,000 less than it would have cost at what were considered reasonable rates twenty years ago. The actual saving of the last four years, 1882 to 1885, inclusive, as compared with the previous period, has been $1.500,000,000.

The policy upon which this rebate has been allowed and upon which this trade has grown up has been the principle of equalizing, as far as possible, the advantages of the different parts of the country. The purpose of the railroads, as has been said, from the time of their original creation is the annihilation of space and time as far as is possible to human ingenuity and the mechanical powers wielded by man. The doctrine that railroad rates are to be proportioned to distances, instead of being a proposition of justice or equity, is a proposition which in the practical management of affairs would be absolutely destructive to the great systems which have built up the prosperity of this country.

I had collected a few statistics of the growth of the railroad system of the country and its policy, which I will not detain the Senate by reading. I prefer to insert in the report of my remarks a few sentences from a statement compiled by Mr. Poor, the author of the Railroad Manual:

In illustration of the correctness of these observations certain tabular statements have been prepared and annexed hereto, compiled from the annual reports of the railroad companies as printed in Poor's Manual of the Railroads of the United States. From the statements 1, 2, and 3, which include the Pennsylvania, the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago, the New York Central, the Lake Shore, the Michigan Central, the Boston and Albany, and the Erie Railroads, the great carriers between Chicago and the seaboard, it will be seen that the number of tons transported over these lines in 1865 equaled 11,151,701 tons; in 1885, 66,521,153 tons, the increase within the period of twenty years equaling 55,369,452 tons, the rate per cent. increase equaling 500 per cent.

Their earnings from freight equaled $47,832,873 in 1865, and $72,138,792 in 1885; the increase of earnings in the twenty years equaling $24,305,989, the rate of increase being about 50 per cent. It further appears that the number of tons moved one mile in 1865 by the roads named equaled 1,654,324,000 tons; in 1885, 11,331,306,000 tons, the service performed being nearly seven times greater in 1885 than in 1865, the increase of earnings in the same period equaling only about 50 per cent. The average charge per ton per mile in 1865 on the roads named equaled 2.90 cents; in 1885, 0.636 cents per ton per mile, the reduction equalling 2.264 cents per ton per mile, the rate in 1885 equaling only 22 per cent. of that of 1865. Had the rates charged in 1885 been the same as those charged in 1865, the earnings from freight would have equaled $328,617,874, or $256,479,081 more than that received.

The number of tons of freight transported in 1865 by the great lines entering Chicago from the South, West, and Northwest—the Illinois Central, the Chicago and Alton, the Chicago and Rock Island, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, the Chicago and Northwestern, and the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul—included in the statements 4, 5, and 6, equaled 4,032,166 tons; in 1885, 34,348,684, tons, the increase in the twenty years equaling 30,336,518 tons, the rate of increase being over eight-fold. Their earnings from the transportation of freight in 1865 equaled $18,703,805; in 1885, $75,307,684, the increase in the period named being $56,603,879. The number of tons moved in 1 mile in 1865 equaled 513,421,500 tons; in 1885, 6,287,346,000 tons. The average charge per ton per mile in 1865 was 3.642 cents; in 1885, 1.200 cents, the decrease in the period of twenty years equaling 2.442 cents per ton per mile, the percentage of decrease being 67 per cent. Had the charges been the same in 1885 as they were in 1865, then their earnings would have equaled $229,084,432 against $75,307,684, or a sum of $153,776,748 greater than that received.

A very large proportion of the freight received in Chicago is destined for Eastern or for foreign markets. A very large amount of it is produced in districts 1,500 miles distant from the seaboard. At the average rate, 3.07 cents per ton per mile, charged in 1865 by the lines included in the annexed statements, it would cost fully $30 to transport a ton of freight from Chicago to the seaboard, and $45 per ton from points 500 miles farther west, and from which large portions of the breadstuffs and provisions now sent to the seaboard for domestic and foreign consumption are received. At the rate of 3.07 per ton per mile the charge of the tonnage moved on the roads named in 1885 would have been $538,890,731 in the place of $147,446,476, the amount actually received.

An increase in the tonnage of the railroads named from 15,183,867 in 1865 to 100,879,837 in 1885, accompanied by a reduction of net charges of transportation from 3.07 cents to 0.831 cent per ton per mile, the saving, 2.176 cents per ton per mile, effected thereby to be divided between producer and consumer, equaling $391,453,855, is complete vindication of the railroad companies from the charges of oppression and misconduct brought against the same, of which an example will be given. Such a development could have been possible only by the adoption by the railroads of a policy suited to the problem to be solved, which was nothing less than to give a commercial value to the products of every acre included in our vast domain. While the average charge for 1885 of the great lines from Chicago to New York averaged 0.636 cent per ton per mile, and that on the great lines centering at Chicago averaged 1.200 cents per mile, the average for all being 0.831 cent per ton per mile, the charge for moving a ton of wheat or flour from Minneapolis to the seaboard did not much exceed one-half the general average, or $6 the ton. At the average minimum rate, the charge would have been $12 per ton. As the greater part of the wheat grown in Minnesota is accumulated at that place preparatory to its being sent to the Eastern markets, every farmer in the State of Minnesota is benefited in the degree of the cheapness of the "long haul."

The commerce, both foreign and domestic, of the country, its magnitude considered, is the creation of our railroads. The tonnage for 1885 of the lines included in the statements annexed equaled 100,869,837. At $40 per ton, the value of this tonnage equaled $4,084,793,480. The increase of this tonnage from 1865 to 1885 equaled 85,686,050 tons. The increased value of the tonnage moved in 1885 over that moved in 1865 equaled $3,427,446,000. The lines named moved the past year only about 23 per cent. of the tonnage, 437,040,099, of all the lines in the country. At $25 per ton, the value of the aggregate tonnage moved equaled $10,926,002,200. The increase of the railroad tonnage of the whole system has been as rapid as that of the lines named—that is to say, from 70,00,000 in 1865 to 437,000,000 in 1885. The value, at $25 per ton, of the tonnage moved in 1865 was $280,000,000; in 1885, $10,926,002,200, the increase in the twenty years equaling $8,126,002,200. Had the railroad companies been the instruments of fraud and oppression they are charged with being, certainly such marvelous results could never have been achieved.

It is beyond cavil that the proud pre-eminence which the United States enjoys in its material welfare over all other nations is almost wholly due to the development, through the instrumentality of its railroads, of its natural resources. The result is strikingly shown in the changes in our favor which have taken place in our foreign trade. From 1866 to 1875, inclusive, the value of the exports of the country equaled $4,113,411,467; of its imports, $4,938,411,464; the balance against the country for the ten years equaling $827,499,674. For the ten years beginning with 1876 the exports of the country equaled $7,343,266,125; its imports, $5,778,558,497; the balance in favor of the country for the ten years equaling $1,564,707,628. In the period of ten years ending with 1873 the excess of exports of specie over imports equaled $578,644,791. In the period of ten years ending with 1885 the excess of imports over exports equaled $63,919,891. The greater part of the increase of our exports has been made up of breadstuffs and provisions grown far distant from the seaboard, and which could be sent to markets only at very low rates on the "long haul." But for the instrumentality of the railroads and the adjustment of rates to the various conditions thus presented specie payments could not have been resumed or maintained.

Now, what is the principle on which the first great provision of this conference report depends?

It is that distance, except in special cases, ought to be the measure of compensation; and therefore if the freights be put down at the end of a road, they must be put down at least to the same point on all points on the line.

I know it is said in the bill this must be under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, and I know the provision that the commission may in special cases interpose. But as a rule certainly no Senator would expect the courts to say that the systems upon which the great foreign commerce of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, and Boston is conducted constitute a special case. No one would suppose that the great imperial legislative power of this country intended to refer as a special and exceptional matter the policy on which we should deal with such a public interest as that to a board of commissioners appointed by the President of the United States.

Now, how does this matter affect Boston? We have coming from the West to the seaboard three great lines for the transportation of the business and merchandise to which I have referred. On one of them our State spent $20,000,000 in tunneling a single mountain by a tunnel about 4 miles in length, I think, which stood in the way of one of these great Western lines, and they have within a few days disposed of the State interest in that tunnel, after losing interest on the $20,000,000 for nearly twenty years, so that it must have cost, principal and interest, full $40,000,000—they have disposed of it to one of the great railroad lines for the sum of $10,000,000. Another, the Boston and Albany, was built up by the foresight and enterprise of a former generation of the State of Massachusetts, building that road against a hostile outcry that the dominant party were mortgaging the farm of every landholder in Massachusetts.

Then we have in addition the New York and New England road, the third line, on which the State also expended some three or four million dollars with inadequate security undoubtedly. So, taking principal and interest, I suppose it would not be too much to say that the people of Massachusetts have expended nearly or quite fifty million dollars in order that this great business might be conducted in competition with Canada on the one side and with the great railroad lines to the south of us on the other.

We have also on the seaboard the Eastern Railroad, which brings merchandise from Maine and the British provinces in competition with the water-way of the Atlantic Ocean, bringing freights to large and important cities, Newburyport, Portsmouth, Lynn, Salem, Marblehead, and so on, which are way stations, and to Boston as the terminal point.

Now, they say that all this traffic north and south, east and west, shall be prohibited and that competition with the water-ways shall not have its natural and ordinary effect upon rates, or that competition with the lakes and Canada or with the lakes and the New York Central Railroad shall not be carried on unless every railroad which is engaged in it puts down all its local business (which is 93 per cent. of the whole amount of its business) to an amount not exceeding that at which they do through business. That is what this bill proposes, according to the men who drafted and forced this provision on the Senate.

The answer to the letter which I addressed to one of the House conferees, and which he says in answering he believes his associates agree with him, settles that question. I ask the Secretary to read this. The House of Representatives passed the bill in that belief, and the Senator from Tennessee avowed his belief to the same effect. I ask to have the letter read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of January 4 only reached me last evening. You propound three interrogatories which, for convenience, are repeated and answered.

Judge REAGAN and Mr. WEAVER, the other House conferees, being absent, of course I cannot authoritatively speak for them, but I believe that their views coincide with those herein expressed by me.

First. "Do you understand that the prohibition in the fourth section of the bill, as amended in conference, will prevent the common carrier from receiving a larger sum in proportion for a shorter than for a longer distance, or only that the amount of the entire freight for the less distance shall not exceed the amount of the entire freight for the greater distance, on a similar article, under similar circumstances?" * * *

I understand that the fourth section will prevent a common carrier, within the meaning of the act, from receiving a larger sum in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property for a shorter than for a longer distance, over the same line, in the same direction; in other words, "the amount of the entire freight for the less distance (included in the greater distance) shall not exceed the amount of the entire freight for the greater distance, on a similar article, under similar circumstances."

Second. "Suppose a thousand barrels of flour be taken from Chicago to Boston, and be thence conveyed to Europe, and another thousand barrels of flour be taken from Chicago to Boston, or Worcester, a point nearer Chicago, on the same line, destined for home consumption, are these substantially similar circumstances within the meaning of the bill? In other words, does a mere difference in the destination of property create the dissimilar circumstances and conditions contemplated in section 4?"

In my judgment, the difference in the case cited by you would not create dissimilar circumstances.

Third. "Does the existence of competition at the end of the longer distance which does not exist at the end of the shorter on the same line make a difference of circumstances and conditions within the intention of the framers of the bill?"

In my opinion it does not.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

CHARLES F. CRISP.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR,
United States Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I know that the Senator from Illinois, representing the Senate, takes a different view and I infer that some other Senators take a different view. This bill ought, then, to be recommitted to determine this question. One side or the other is to be—I will not say deceived or cheated, because I know of course there is no such purpose—but one side or the other is to be misled, is to be grievously misled. Think of the legislation, of the statesmanship, which compels the great railroad lines of the country to transact business essential to our foreign commerce, under the risk of a penalty of $5,000 on every single transaction if the men who drafted this language, who, as representing the House of Representatives, put it in the bill and who compel the Senate to take that or nothing, happen to be right in the construction they put on it.

In regard to these railroad lines there is one thing I may as well say at this time. The New York Central Railroad, which transacts business in connection with water at Buffalo and then takes it to Albany or Troy for the East or for New York, is not an interstate railroad. It has absolute control of this subject in spite of your act of Congress. You are compelling our great lines of railroad, the Boston and Albany, crossing the State line for about 4 or 5 miles, the New York and New England, which goes through Connecticut, to be subject to its operation.

The passage of this bill will create a panic. How soon are the commissioners to be in operation? The bill requires each special case to be acted on; and I understand, and my friend from Mississippi understands, that in a special case the commissioners may authorize this distinction to be made after investigation and hearing. They are to be appointed at once. The bill is to go into effect in sixty days, and they are to get round to the determination of this particular case when they have heard every application for an exception and their investigations have been had all over the country.

It would take the President certainly thirty of the sixty days to find a commission; it would take them the other thirty to lay aside and arrange their private and other business which they are to give up. Meantime the provisions of this bill take effect. The whole through business of the country is disordered and prostrate, only to be revived when the commissioners in the course of their vast business get round to each special case.

But it seems to me that it is utterly indefensible legislation, upon whatever theory of this bill you proceed, to create commissioners with the power which the gentlemen who favor the bill attribute to this commission. The original bill gave them a power of investigation and report. They were to hold up to daylight any transaction in the railroad management of the country of which the people made complaint. That was well; but here you give them a power half legislative, half judicial, when the Constitution provides that you shall not take the property of a man in the country to the amount of $20 from him without a trial by jury, and that that trial by jury shall be superintended by judges appointed for life under all the restrictions and safeguards and securities which surround the administration of justice. You give these men power over the business of great towns and great cities and great classes of investments—a power which no Persian satrap or Roman proconsul was ever intrusted with—at a salary of $7,500 a year, with an exposure to temptation in the way of corruption which would not stand at millions and hundreds of millions of dollars. To refer to five commissioners the question of whether the foreign commerce of the city of Boston, with its $135,000,000, shall stand or fall. The question whether the House conferees or one of the Senate conferees be right in this opinion involves all that.

I have dwelt on the city of Boston because it is the community which I represent, and because it is better to point out its effect on an individual case. The foreign commerce of this second seaport city, vast as it is, is a mere trifle compared with the vast interests of the producers and consumers which are to be affected by this legislation. You had better blot Boston as an exporting city out of the map rather than take away from the farmer of the Northwest his access to the markets of Europe in the near future. It is not commerce, but the agriculture of the country, upon which the burden of this insidious provision is likely to fall most heavily, as it seems to me.

This proposition is in defiance of all recent railroad experience and railroad thought. This provision is based on a crude fallacy which men who begin to reflect on the railroad policy fall into in the first instance, but which investigation always dispels and drives away. The last English experience rejects it, as is stated in Professor Hadley's book, which I omitted to bring with me, on the one hundred and eighty-sixth page. He says the last parliamentary committee in England have utterly rejected the principle of proportioning rates to distance and the long and short haul.

The fatal objection to this provision is that it makes distance the measure of compensation as its general rule, when in fact distance is often—perhaps in a majority of cases—one of the least important elements to be considered.

To leave a car-load of flour at an intermediate station will often require an expense of time and labor in stopping and starting a train, and detaching the car, which may nearly equal the whole freight charge to the terminus.

A road may often afford to take freight to a terminal point from which its cars return full for little more than half the price which it must charge to an intermediate point from which they return empty.

It can keep at the terminal point the most skilled workmen constantly employed, elevators, warehouses for the deposit of merchandise, and all the means and appliances for cheap and expeditious handling of its freight. The freight, when it arrives, can be at once placed where it will cause no interruption to the other business of the road. At the intermediate point it must be handled by persons not fully employed, without conveniences, and where it seriously obstructs the other business. It will often cost a road more to carry a certain article 5 miles than it would to carry it 50.

Take the case of the Hoosac tunnel, in Massachusetts, which I referred to just now, which is, I think, about eight miles from the State line. Take an article of merchandise through that, to carry it from a a town in Massachusetts, a way station just east of the tunnel, through the tunnel over the New York line. Is it not fair to charge more for that service than for a vastly longer distance under other circumstances? It is said that these are special cases for which the commission would provide. Why, Mr. President, the whole railroad business of this country is but an aggregate of such cases as this. There is not a case that can be put of a transportation of freight from State to State over a line of railroad into which some element or other does not enter other than the mere comparison of the distance.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator a question right on that point?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Is it not a fact that the very argument the Senator is now making that all these differences which he says exist, and which I concede do exist, disprove the other argument which the Senator is making, that there is no dissimilarity in the matter of transportation between the long hauls and the various short hauls?

Mr. HOAR. I do not say that there is no dissimilarity.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Is there not a substantial want of similarity in almost every conceivable case that can be pointed out?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly, and that is the folly and the fallacy and absurdity of this bill, that it takes a business——

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I think so, too, but the construction which has been placed upon it is just the reverse of the one placed upon it by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. We are dealing with a business which is made up of special cases. If the comparison by distance is to be taken under a general rule you can not conceive two cases which are not different, if you come down to refinement as to special cases, if that is to be taken as a general case, and you put the vast transportation business of this country, its domestic as well as its foreign commerce, into the hands of five commissioners who are hereafter at their mere whim, at any rate in their mere judgment and discretion, to regulate and control its entire operation.

My friend from Oregon who just interrupted me speaks of his construction of this bill. I have not said that I claim that it was clear that the bill dealt with foreign commerce. It may be that the mere destination of the freight makes dissimilar circumstances in one case and in the other, but I say the bill was framed by men who claim that it meant that two cases I have put are cases of like circumstances and conditions. I say the bill is intended to carry out a theory which is that distance, in all cases, with very few and rare exceptions, shall be the measure of compensation.

If the commission is to deal with all these cases you must have a commission of five hundred or five thousand men, and not a commission of five. I think my friend's State of New Jersey will supply this commission of five with work which will take all its time for ten years on the theory of the construction of the bill which its framers have advocated.

If there are special cases within the provision of the bill, your whole bill is a mockery and an illusion. They will include every case where any discrimination is made in favor of longer against the shorter distance which is not protected by the general prohibition of unreasonble charges, except the case where the diminution of the through rate is made necessary by competition, and that I shall speak of presently.

If you mean to say that the road shall not charge more for the short haul than for the long haul where the short haul costs more than the long, you are doing a gross injustice. If you mean to except that case from the operation of your law, you are excepting, in my judgment, the larger proportion of the cases which have incited the popular demand to which you profess to yield, and so you will disappoint and deceive the people.

There is a fallacious notion which seems to have got a lodgment in some very intelligent minds; and that is, that the reduction of the rate on through traffic is a burden or tax on local traffic. Gentleman have said in my hearing, I think it has been said in this debate, that if we can not have foreign commerce without taxing our domestic transportation to obtain it, we must go without. I hold, on the contrary, that every dollar which a carrier gets, of through freight, at a rate which pays anything above the bare cost of conveyance, and which it would not otherwise get, is a benefit to its local traffic; and I hold that, given the local traffic at present prices, the whole local traffic of the country, adding to the business of the railroad such through traffic as they are able to accommodate enables the railroads to reduce local rates and also to relieve the local traffic from a share of its fixed charges.

Now, take a very simple proposition. Suppose a hackman starts to take a passenger to Bladensburg and has got his price fixed. Remember that this whole thing is a graft upon a bill which already has provided that everywhere reasonableness must be the rule, and which has afforded mechanism, both legal and supervisory, to accomplish that result. You have got the hackman starting to Bladensburg with his passenger, and he is to have $10, which is a reasonable price. He comes to a man who is on foot with a carpet-bag, who says he has only got a dollar in his pocket, but if he will let him get in he will give half a dollar of it to the hackman and the other half to the passenger. The passenger has paid his $10. Who suffers? What an absurdity it would be to have a law to regulate a hackman which said that under no circumstances should he take an additional passenger except at the same rate at which he had taken the others, that he never should diminish his rates?

This little carrier business of the hackman or cabman affords a very good illustration of the unreasonableness of the proposition upon which this legislation is based. There is not a body of rules, I suppose, in any city or populous town in the United States in which the hackman who takes four passengers is not required to take them a little cheaper than the hackman who takes but two; in which the hackman who takes passengers outside of a mile circle is not required to take them at a cheaper rate in proportion than when he takes them inside the mile circle.

This is a fallacy which in carrying out the principle would be destructive of all sorts of business. The manufacturer has a surplus. The manufacturing interests of the country, the business men of a particular kind, have a surplus of goods, and they can not conduct their business profitably unless after having sold what the ordinary demand requires they are permitted to sell off that surplus at a cheaper rate. Our protective tariff is very largely intended to protect us from having a surplus of foreign manufactures dumped down in our markets in competition with our own.

Take the corresponding occupation of the inn-holder, which the common law places exactly on the same footing as that of the carrier in regulating it by law and requiring reasonableness as the measure of charge. Are you to say that the inn-holder in a city where there is a political convention shall not fill up his inn on a particular day at a particular price for food and lodging if he wants to attract the convention to his house rather than have it go to another without a corresponding reduction of the price which he is to charge all the rest of his customers through the year?

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? I am seeking for light in this matter, as he is. I can not see how the illustration of the hackman applies here, because this bill both as passed by the Senate and as reported by the conference committee provides that no carrier shall charge more for a short distance than for a long one. A cabman in this city I believe will take you a mile for 25 cents or two miles for 40 cents; but what is forbidden in this case is charging 40 cents a mile and 35 cents for two miles.

Mr. HOAR. That is the theory on which the bill goes so far as it goes on the ground that the distance in ordinary cases is the measure in proportion of the price, and although the bill has limited itself by having carried out the principle to say that you shall not charge at a greater rate, yet where the difference in distance is very slight you have all the destructive effect on the through business by saying that the local business shall in no event be less.

Mr. HAWLEY. Under this bill a carrier might charge 4 cents a mile on the intermediate distances, and 3 cents a mile on the through, and yet not violate this proposed law, because the aggregate on the short haul would not be the aggregate of the long haul.

Mr. HOAR. That is true; everybody understands that, but that does not affect substantially, it seems to me, the argument I am making or the aptness of the illustration. If you concede, as the bill concedes in that particular, that it is reasonable that the short haul shall be judged more in proportion to distances than the long, in a very large number of cases, of course that would bring the aggregate for the short haul higher than the aggregate for the long in the cases I have put.

Mr. President, these public highways are the arteries and veins of the State. An unhealthy pressure on any limb will not only cause that limb to grow feeble and wither, but, in the end, it will be destructive of the life of the commonwealth itself. It seems to me in our legislation, I suppose it is true of all of us, when we attack one of these great, complicated, and subtle economies we have to go through some of the diseases of childhood. We have to have chicken-pox, and the measles, and the whooping-cough, before we get to a condition of sound and vigorous health. We had it in the matter of paper money and fiat money. I sat in the House of Representatives in the next seat to a gentleman from Ohio, who had a table to show that the amount of bank capital to the square mile, and the currency to the square mile was very much less in the Northwest than it was in New York and the Eastern States, and he made it the pride and glory of his Congressional service to try and remedy that vast injustice. We seem to be going through the same thing now in this matter of railroad legislation. I am afraid some of us are destined to have a permanent whooping-cough all our days.

Mr. President, this bill will require the non-paying branch of a railroad to charge no more for the same included distance than it does for the prosperous and well supported main line. The bill will injure, as it seems to me, as I have said, the distant Western farmer more than it will injure the capital which is engaged in the commerce of the Eastern cities. A high authority, a gentleman now a member of the Senate and an advocate of this bill, has quite lately declared that it would be the end of cheap farming in the Northwestern States. The agents of the great steam lines, of which I think there are twelve now going out of Boston, come to us and tell us that the bill as interpreted by its framer, and as they fear it will be expounded hereafter, will be the destruction of a large portion of the business in which those lines are engaged.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the true policy of the Senate is to recommit this bill. Let it save as it can save the great principle of reasonableness enforced and established by law, the great principle of publicity in the advertisement of rates, the great superintending power of the commission, and the great and healthy and beneficent enactment which provides against any unjust discrimination whether between persons or places or lines. But this other and further step proposed to us by the House of Representatives against the original judgment of the Senate we should to refuse to take.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I desire to have the benefit of the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts on one point for my own information. He has stated, after a very careful examination of this bill, as his opinion, as I understand, and he has fortified that opinion by what seems to be the opinion of business men, not railroad men particularly, in the State of Massachusetts and New England, to the effect that the result of this bill, if it becomes a law, will be to increase through rates, to increase the price of transportation on long hauls from what he calls the great West to the Atlantic seaboard. I presume when the Senator speaks of the great West he refers to the valleys of the Mississippi and the Missouri and Ohio, or in other words, the country lying east of the Rocky Mountains and west of the Alleghany Mountains. He does not refer, of course, to what we understand as the far West, or that portion of the country lying west of the Rocky Mountains.

What I should like to have the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts on, if he has considered that question at all, is as to whether the effect of this bill, if it becomes a law, will be to increase the rates of transportation on long hauls from points east of the Rocky Mountains to points in the extreme Northwest, the Columbia River, Puget Sound, &c., that is, on that character of freight which is desired for consumption in that distant part of our country, and which the people residing there are compelled to purchase either in Europe and bring across the continent, or in this country in the markets of the East. I should like to know what the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts is as to the effect of the bill on that question?

Mr. HOAR. So far as the manufactured products of New England are concerned, which are now largely, and I hope will still more largely, be sold to that people, and so far as by the cheapening of railroad rates and mechanical improvements of railroad transportation they shall cause their great wheat-fields to exchange commodities with the population who are especially engaged in manufacturing those products, I have no doubt the same injurious effect that I have stated will exist in those cases.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to engage in the general debate on this bill or to attempt to discuss at length any of the questions which have been presented so fully and ably by Senators on both sides of the Chamber. I wish simply to take my share of the responsibility of the votes on the bill and to state the reasons for the votes that I shall give.

I believe that no bill of this importance has ever had such a general support, not only among the people but in both Houses of Congress, as this bill to regulate interstate commerce. The necessity for the passage of a bill on the subject is great, and is made greater by the decision of the Supreme Court. Whatever might have been the difference of opinion in the past, there is now a concurring sentiment among all classes of people, strongly represented in both Houses of Congress, that there ought to be some general regulations in regard to interstate commerce. No question of power is raised; no questions of constitutional right or duty are involved. It is simply a question of discretion as to what particular measure shall be adopted and as to the provisions of that measure.

I am free to say that if my vote on this bill would defeat the passage of an interstate-commerce bill at this session I should vote differently from what I intend to do; but there is no such exigency. The bill is in such an advanced stage of consideration that without question, whatever we may do in regard to the bill as it now stands, it will in some form receive the sanction of Congress. It has passed both Houses. It is in a committee of conference where a single vote can in some way determine it, and all that can be done now is to recommit it or to pass it.

If we recommit it we are sure to have action upon it again. There can scarcely be a doubt but what the committee would report it, because there is such a pressure of public opinion behind it that no committee of conference organized by Congress could possibly prevent the passage of the bill. Either House might at any time recall the bill from the consideration of the committee of conference, even if the conferees failed to perform their duty; but there is no danger of that kind. The bill is something in the nature of an appropriation bill, sure to pass; but there ought to be no provision in it and no section in it that does not receive the free and unbiased judgment in favor of it by both Houses of Congress.

When an appropriation bill is pending and a proposition is inserted by way of amendment by either House, if the other House refuses to accede to that amendment, there is no logical way except for the House proposing the amendment to recede. So, if there is any provision in the bill proposed by the House of Representatives, or by either House that is not approved by the other, then the House making the proposition should recede in order to secure the passage of the bill. It is only by acting upon that general rule of policy that any bill involving the magnitude of the questions in this bill can pass through Congress.

Under these circumstances, as I believe, without detaining the Senate long, there are two or three provisions of the bill which ought to be omitted from it, for the present at least, until we have had some experience in the operation of the bill. I shall vote, if the motion is made, to recommit to the same conferees, and to have them look over these three or four points (and there are only three or four sections in the bill which have been made the subjects of controversy) and see whether they can not frame such provisions as will enable Senators and Members to vote for it freely without any doubt about the effect of the provisions of the bill.

That is the view I take of the bill in its general provisions. Now, referring to the particular points, the one is the fourth section, in relation to the long and short haul. The general provision that no greater charge should be made for a short haul than for a long haul over the same line is so plainly equitable and fair that one would say it ought to be taken as an axiom in dealing with this question; and as a general proposition it is right. I voted for it at the last session, and would vote now that in the conduct of a railroad they should not, except in very rare and special cases, charge more for hauling a shorter distance than for a longer distance.

While, as I have said, the general rule of this bill is correct, I have no doubt at the same time it is equally clear that there are certain exceptions to that rule which must be provided for in some way. Everywhere there is a fear that this bill, intended to relieve the people of the United States, may destroy our export trade and break up important competition now existing between water and railroad routes. This is so clearly admitted that the conferees themselves, and both Houses, have seemed to admit that there must be exceptions to this rule, and they have endeavored to provide for those exceptions by the provisions of the conference report. What I fear and believe, from a careful study of the language of the fourth section, is that no sufficient provision is made for those exceptions.

Let me state one which is probably the most imperative. The larger portion of our export trade is in provisions or in material for clothing. Pork, wheat, corn, cotton, and various articles produced on the farm are sent abroad amounting to more than a half of our entire exports. It is perfectly manifest to my mind, and ought to be to the mind of every one familiar with railroad business, that if you attempt to apply this rule to produce about to be exported into foreign countries you cripple the means of the United States of America to compete with foreign countries. You may cut off to a large extent the possibility of sending our exports abroad where the markets of the world are open to us, and might in this way do great damage that no one would desire to inflict.

When this provision about the long and short haul is applied to the transportation across the continent of the tea, for instance, that is brought from China, it is perfectly manifest that that provision if carried out and applied to that kind of trade would destroy our entire carrying trade across the continent from India and China and the East to the European markets. In that trade there are many modes of conveyance and competition. There is the Suez route; there is the route around Cape Horn; there is the route by Panama; and there is still a close competitor, the route through Canada. Therefore, if you apply the principle of short haul to the commerce across the continent, you practically turn from our own country and from our own railroads all this vast commerce, increasing constantly in almost geometrical ratio, and turn it through other countries or by other routes. This trade, so great is the competition in its conduct, would be diverted even by a pebble, much more by a great restriction like this, which declares in general terms that no less charge for the through distance in the aggregate shall be made as against this kind of transportation than for the ordinary transportation of our country in our interstate commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; it is the same kind of goods.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is true a provision limits it to like conditions and circumstances.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And like property as well.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; like property as well. This limitation is so broad, and may be construed to be so general, as practically to destroy and absolutely nullify the general provisions.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] in a single remark the other day stated very fully and forcibly that if it must be applied only to like circumstances and like conditions and like property, the whole clause may be made nugatory. Shipments will rarely be on precisely the same or in similar terms; they may be easily distinguished somewhat from each other. It seems to me there ought to be some provision in the bill that will guard against such a construction as this, and enable the railroads in our country, by express provision of law, to make such rates for this kind of transportation I have mentioned as would enable them to maintain against all kinds of competition the trade they have now, and to increase it if they can. But that is only one of the cases I wish to mention.

Take wheat and corn, pork or cotton, transported from all parts of our country. The people of the United States are not particularly interested whether that goes from Ohio or Nebraska, or the still farther West—from Minnesota, Dakota, and all those vast new regions which are now supplying us with the great elements of our foreign commerce. Suppose wheat and these products are shipped from the far West and no discrimination should be made in their favor because they are to be exported to foreign countries; suppose no provision is made that will enable our railroads to compete with foreign countries for that transportation. There is a route through Montreal; there is a route, as I said, around by Panama, and there are various routes.

If our farmers and our transporters are not able to conduct this trade and this transportation so as to compete with these rivals, as a matter of course we destroy a business, which will reduce the business of our transcontinental railroads, reduce their income, and practically compel them to increase the rates upon domestic interstate commerce in order to make that loss good.

It seems to me there ought to be some general and broad provisions which will provide for this, especially in favor of our export trade. I am not prepared now, with the limited examination I have given, to say what words I would be willing to define in this law to make provision for our exports abroad and for the competition between our wheat and the wheat of Russia and the wheat of India, and other nations now competing with us in the supply of all the great cereals and provisions of the country, even in Indian corn, in which only a few years ago we had a practical monopoly of all the world. It is now being produced in competition with us. We must, therefore, make provision by which this trade will not be jeopardized or affected.

Then there is another consideration. You take the hard and severe competition between water routes and railroad routes in the summer time from Chicago and from Duluth and from Milwaukee, and all these great interior lake ports of the country. That water competition in the summer time is so sharp that the railroads have either to abandon all competition, turn the transportation entirely over to the water routes from the 1st day of June until the 1st day of November, or else they must be permitted to reduce the rates during that time to such figures as would not justify them in carrying the same property on local routes. If it is desirable that we force the railroads out of competition for this kind of freight, then probably it is not an unfair provision, but that is not desirable. Especially in our export trade we must allow the sharpest and closest competition. If you withdraw from the water routes the competition of the railroads, you necessarily induce the water routes to raise their rates in the summer time when the great body of this produce is being transported, and they will do it.

The effect upon water rates by the railroads has been very great, reducing them in some cases to one-fourth of what they would be, naturally, without competition with the railroads. Unless some provision is made in a general way for this, it seems to me we are likely to defeat the objects of this bill. I can not say precisely what language ought to be used, but it seems to me the present provisions of the bill are entirely too vague and indefinite.

Then the bill limits the powers of the commission to allow special rates to a considerable extent, somewhat more than the original Senate bill did, because they must take up each particular case, each particular matter, and decide upon that. What does that mean? Does that mean that they shall not make any general regulations which would apply to all articles exported to foreign countries? Not at all. But they must take up the case as applied to a particular railroad under particular circumstances and particular conditions. If that is the duty imposed on this commission, there will not be time in the twelve months between January and January to act upon one-tenth of the cases that will be presented to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you refer to section 4?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes. Here is the provision. In order to show the connection of the words and their bearing on the whole, I will read it.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions.

What is the "like kind of property?" Is wheat like corn? Is corn like other articles of food for man and beast? The Senator from Iowa said yes. Therefore you can not make any discrimination between property of the same general character and bulk.

Mr. ALLISON. All that was in the Senate bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know, and I will refer to the new clause subsequently. "Under substantially similar circumstances and conditions." What are the circumstances? Does the fact that the property was shipped from Chicago to New York for export make a different circumstance and condition? Does the fact that the property is shipped from Chicago to New York without respect to its destination, make a difference of circumstance or condition? The Senator says no. Then how can you tell whether wheat is to be exported or not? What provisions do you make so as to distinguish in regard to that?

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Massachusetts said that on all commerce that goes to Boston there was a rebate of 5 per cent. It is as easy for a railroad to make a distinction at New York as at Boston.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there is such a rebate, that will be abolished by this bill.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to explain. I said that was the present arrangement.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SHERMAN. By this bill, several provisions of it would prevent any discrimination of this kind, and therefore that rebate would be abolished as a discrimination that is forbidden.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio, with his permission, in criticizing this fourth section and the difference made by the change in the House of Representatives and the conference report as to the powers of the commission and the evils that he thinks would follow from what he has stated, to tell us, not in mere language, which he says he can not do in a moment—and nobody can—just the words he would phrase it in, but precisely what general provision he would make in respect to the matter he is speaking of? What would he do about this foreign export?

Mr. SHERMAN. My general idea is that I would make a discrimination in respect of the export foreign trade, but I could not say in what language. I will go on a little further, because it may be answered that this language was in the bill as it passed the Senate. But I now come to other provisions that limit still further the operation of the commission and compel them to apply this difference of circumstances and conditions to every railroad, to every common carrier. So if a question should arise on the Pennsylvania road they must consider that as one question to be determined by them. If a somewhat similar question should arise as to the New York Central, they must consider that also as a special case.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SHERMAN. I would like to get through.

Mr. CULLOM. I only wanted to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that under the language of the bill we passed through the Senate before the general rule was made to apply, with special exceptions as to special cases in the operations of common carrier, so that in fact, the language of the bill, as it is used now, means exactly the same as was meant under the bill the Senate passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it is a little more liberal than it was before in favor of the railroads.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us look at that. I will read the proviso here:

Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation—do so and so; but, remember, that until these special cases can be acted upon and decided by the commission, the universal rule that is made by the bill will be enforced, and must be enforced, because the special circumstances and conditions must be made the subject of a communication to this commission, and their action must be had on each special case.

Now let us go a little further. The railroad may "after investigation by the commission be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier"—a "designated common carrier"—"may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act."

They must in each particular case, as to each particular carrier, make a particular rule defining the extent and limit of this exemption, and then after that—not until after that—the carrier will be authorized to avail himself of this limitation.

Mr. CULLOM. Let me read the language that was stricken out of the old bill, showing that the same language substantially is now used:

Make general rules exempting such designated common carrier in such special cases from the operation of this section of this act.

Those were the words used before, which the Senator supported very earnestly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The conference report is much better on that point for the railroads than the bill was before.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I have sufficiently stated the difficulties in the execution of this bill. I am afraid and I believe that the immediate effect of the bill will be a great disappointment to all. I fear that the wide-reaching influence of this section will create a profound discontent in the very regions represented by gentlemen who are earnestly advocating this bill. That is my opinion. I may be mistaken. I have no narrow view about this matter. I do not speak about it as it affects Ohio particularly, but only as it affects the country, and mainly as it affects our foreign trade.

Now, so far as Ohio is concerned, there is a divided sentiment there. My colleague and I will agree probably upon the statement I make about it, that as a general rule the farmers of Ohio favor this long-and-short-haul clause, because they are tired and sick of the idea that wheat raised in Dakota, far off, should be transported over Ohio railroads through to the market at far less rates than are charged from the center of Ohio to New York. That is an abuse which ought to be corrected, and our people generally make an outcry about it; they feel outraged about it. Towns have been injured, markets have been broken up, great complaints have been made, and a kind of anti-railroad mania has grown out of this thing; and to the extent that it is possible, without sacrificing great interests, I desire to see that corrected.

On the other hand, in Ohio we have a great number of very important manufactures, mainly in agricultural implements. I suppose that Ohio is much the largest of any of the States now engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements. In the little city in which I live there is one establishment devoted entirely to the manufacture of thrashing machines and the steam power to run them—very valuable machines; and they are exported to Hungary, Australia, South America, all over the world, you may say. They can only maintain this industry, as they think, and this enormous traffic—for it is a large item in our exports—by having through routes, low rates, lower than the rates given to other kinds of property. Without that it is doubtful whether they could maintain themselves in the market at all and supply either the foreign market or remote domestic markets with these important agricultural implements.

It would not make so great a difference with them so far as the American market was concerned, but in regard to the foreign market, the universal testimony of all these gentlemen in communications sent to me, the like of which have been read by the Senator from Massachusetts, is that it would break up their business, compel them to advance their prices if they were required to pay higher rates, and thus add an additional burden on our own people, when, if they were allowed to make their own arrangements with our railroads to carry on this business and export these articles to foreign countries, they would add to our exports and incidentally to the business and value of the railroad property by giving the railroads a low rate, probably, but still a rate yielding something for carrying this commerce.

I suppose I have received, and my colleague has, petitions from every manufacturing center of Ohio representing a general outcry against the effect of this clause as preventing them carrying on this business because they say this heavy machinery, occupying a great space in a car, cannot be transported at the same rates that other kinds of property will possibly bear, and therefore they say that this is ruin to them. Men in whom I have the greatest confidence, telling me what will be the effect upon their own business as applied to their actual daily work, have that fear. I would like to see that removed. I would like to see some provision, if possible, made qualifying and limiting this long and short haul clause in a better way than this general provision leaving the whole matter in special cases to the commission itself.

It seems to me that under the operation of this section the commission will be overburdened. They will not be able to act upon the cases that will go before them. In the mean time this long haul and short haul provision will break down an important part of our foreign commerce as well as cripple and limit our commerce to the remote portions of the United States of America, because these same machines are sent in large numbers to the South, in large numbers to the far West, and they are to be found all over the plains of the West.

These are matters important to be considered, not that I am opposed to the general principle of the long-haul and short-haul clause. It is a plain rule of equity. But I can see that there ought to be exceptions, that ample powers should be given to the commission, more ample and general in their character than is disclosed by this bill; that there ought to be power to make regulations general in their character applying to all carriers so as to preserve the benefits of this commerce to our country. This limits their power only to particular cases as they arise and which have to await their decision.

That is all I desire to say about the long-haul and short-haul clause.

Now, as to the fifth section, which is entirely new in the Senate, there I think the conferees have yielded what probably upon fuller examination and actual experiment they would not yield. A pooling contract is like any other contract for the division of profit. We never restrain natural individuals in their right to contract or to be contracted with. We declare what contracts shall be unlawful, what contracts are against public policy, but with these general rules, known to the common law and never improved upon, we allow every man to contract or be contracted with as he chooses. He makes partnerships. If two blacksmiths find they can improve their condition by joining teams and forges, they become partners to carry on the business of their neighborhood, and nobody objects to that. So with merchants and so with every occupation.

As a general rule, there is no reason why railroad companies should not be allowed to make their contracts in such form as they think right, unless they involve some breach of public policy. All pooling contracts are not wrong. Some of them are wrong, but, as was shown by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] who has already spoken, the effect of the pooling system thus far has been to reduce the cost of transportation enormously. These pools are always made at the lowest rate, because it is the cheapest freighter that is the master of the pool.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator from Ohio mean that the pooling arrangement has reduced the rates to what they were just before the pooling arrangement was made?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; I do not, but I say that the effect of pooling by railroads has been to reduce the cost of transportation enormously. Sometimes by cutting rates a single company has done injury to the whole people, not only to the people whose goods are to be transported, but to the railroads themselves, and to all others.

Does the Senator from Vermont say that the rule, and sole rule of competition should prevail? If so, then take away all these restrictions, take away the power of this commission, and let the railroads fight it out—cut each other's throats. A road built purely for speculation starts, cuts down rates, and destroys the property of the other railroads, and interferes with transportation, and then suddenly raises the rates again. The pool is to secure steadiness of rates. The effect of this bill, by destroying such agreements, neutralizes all agreements made in the interest of the public as well as those adverse to such interests.

I am opposed, therefore, to pools likely to do injury or to prevent fair competition; but where pooling arrangements are made in a reasonable way to prevent undue competition, if you please, to prevent undue cutting, they operate to the public benefit. I therefore think that while the prohibition of pooling might be inserted as a general rule, like the rule about the long haul and the short haul, yet it is subject to limitations. There may be pools that would be greatly conducive to the public interests. There may be agreements between railroads which tend to lower the price of freight as well as to increase the price of freight. There may be pooling arrangements that give steadiness to business, confidence to the people, shippers, producers, and railroad transporters. Why, therefore, not give to the commission the same power to modify and regulate these pools, to sanction those that are manifestly in the public interest—the same power that they have over the long-haul and the short-haul provision? I can see no reason why.

I have listened to the arguments, and what I have not listened to I have read, and it does seem to me now that when we are making such a sweeping provision denying to railroads connecting with each other or conflicting with each other the power to make arrangements with other by which they may be able to secure steadiness and cheapness for transportation, that power ought not to be denied to them. This commission ought to have the power to say that such and such arrangements made between railroads are in the interest of the public, and not to their detriment. The word "pool" usually applied to a gambling contract is obnoxious to us, and they have taken a very good word to represent the thing as obnoxious. We know in common language among people that a pool is a gambling contract, but a pool as applied to railroads is simply an arrangement and an agreement by which they adopt certain rates. They may be innocent or they may be injurious. Why should not this commission have the right to allow those pools made for the convenience of railroad transporters to stand as their law and regulation between each other if they do tend to advance the public interest? Therefore I think there ought to be some limitation to this section.

There is only one other provision that I wish to call your attention to, and I suppose in that I shall not have the sympathy of this body. I think the provision allowing a court in every railroad case when the railroad is beaten to award an attorney's fee without limit or restraint, is what I would call a mean provision, which I trust the profession will not be in favor of. This provision is only in favor of the man who sues the railroad. It does not operate in favor of the railroad. Although the suit may have been idle, fictitious, brought for the purpose of worrying the railroad, it can not be allowed for its expenses in defending itself against an unjust accusation. Oh, no, that would not do at all. There is no provision here that the person who commences a frivolous or fictitious action against a railroad shall pay the costs or an attorney's fee; it is only that the railroad shall pay in case the plaintiff recovers even one cent damages, or the most trivial amount, and in that case the court may award not a docket fee of a fixed sum, limited as in the law of Ohio to $5 in former times, and even that was repealed on the ground that any provision of this kind to pay the attorney's fee of the adverse party tended to promote litigation and therefore was against public policy. It seems to me this provision ought to be omitted. It is an unjust and impolitic one inserted here. I think it is not beneficial.

It is sometimes said that a private person can not compete with a railroad. That is usually the case; but this law provides a place where any plain citizen may apply for a remedy. He may appeal to this commission without money and without price, and in nine cases out of ten he will get his remedy there. But under this provision of the bill he has a right to sue, and is tempted to sue in any court of proper jurisdiction for any kind of claim, for any infringement whatever that he may conceive has been done by the railroad company under the operations of this bill. He may prosecute. It may be found to be a trifling matter that ought to have been waived aside or submitted to the commission, but still at the end of the litigation a court is called on to award damages in the nature of attorney's fees, and it is supposed that the attorney's fees ought to be at least ten or one hundred times the amount involved. The effect of it is to invite litigation, to set the whole legal profession to work to see if they can not find out technical, or trivial, or substantial violations of this law by a railroad corporation.

Are railway corporations such public enemies that we should make laws against them that we would not apply to others? Who would be in favor of a rule that would enable any man who sued on a note that was plainly due on its face, which there was no contest about, to recover his attorney's fee? Who would advocate a provision of law that would require the defendant to pay attorney's fees in addition to the ordinary costs of litigation, clerk's fees, &c.? No such provision would be tolerated, and yet it is aimed at the railroads. If they are public enemies let us stop building them. If they are public enemies too powerful for us to deal with let us prohibit any more railroads in this country. That is absurd. Railroads are great arteries of commerce, one of the great agents of modern civilization, without which this country could not have been developed to its present great wealth and power. Take this country and all Europe without railroad corporations—because railroads can only be built by corporations; one man's wealth is not sufficient; there must be an aggregate of many peoples' wealth, and they ought to be treated fairly, not allowed to oppress the people, not allowed to make undue rates, but still treated with justice and fairness.

All the provisions of the bill that tend to prevent abuses under the law I am in favor of, but it seems to me that this is a petty matter, put in here without any good reason. If a man commences a suit against a railroad, let that suit stand upon the same general rules of law, the same general rule as to costs as all other suits.

By this one fell swoop in this bill we practically repeal and change the laws of all the States, because I doubt whether there is a State in the Union, or anywhere in the world, that allows a court to fix the fee that shall be paid to the attorney of the defeated party, except only in that class of cases like partition cases or the like, where the whole proceeding is a matter of common benefit.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that if this bill could be recommitted and these subjects submitted to the conference committee, they might divest this bill of all those provisions that are likely to create serious complication, trouble, and litigation. Then let us try as a tentative measure the remaining provisions of this bill, as I believe it will work vastly to the benefit of the people of the United States. If it is not sufficiently stringent to prevent the abuses that have occurred in the past, then let us one, by one, add these different clauses as experience demonstrates their necessity.

For this reason, and it is only for this reason, to explain my vote, I shall vote to recommit the bill. However, if this motion should be voted down now, as it seems likely, then I shall reserve to myself to decide whether on the whole it is better to take this bill with these objectionable clauses, with its many good features, and pass it into a law and leave time to correct these imperfections.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the attention of the Senate for a very few minutes to the reasons I shall state for voting in favor of this conference report.

There are only two points of objection made to it, excepting the matter of attorneys' fees, to which my friend from Ohio has just alluded, which I will not weary the patience of the Senate by taking time to reply to, but which has a certain force, as it appears to be one-sided and a mere trivial matter. The clause evidently ought to have been that the court might award reasonable attorneys' fees on either side against the defeated party, but that is a very small matter. The thing that I wish to call the attention of the Senate to is, first, the fourth section, what is called the long and short haul affair, and the pooling provision in the fifth section. The fourth section as it passed the Senate after two or three years' consideration—not on this identical bill—and examination and reflection and discussion, as it finally passed the Senate almost unanimously, provided, as I understand it, in substance precisely what this conference report provides; that is, it simply provided against obnoxious, unjust discrimination in favor of the shipper for a long distance over the same line of the same property under the same conditions, of a wholesale performance or a small performance, charging more to the man between who is sending his farm products and his goods to the same point for the same purpose and under the same conditions. That was the Senate proposition in the fourth section, and that was all; a matter so self-evidently just that nobody can be found to stand up then or now and say that it was not.

Now, how has the conference report changed that? It has stricken out the words "and from the same original point of departure or from the same point of arrival," and has inserted the words, "the shorter being included within the longer distance," a rather self-evident proposition, which means exactly the same thing, for every shorter distance on the same line between the same points must be included as a mathematical proposition within the longer distance. It is a change of phraseology that, so far as I can understand it, and I have tried, does not change the substantial tenor or effect of the fourth section of this bill as the Senate passed it. Then, after laying down this general rule, it is provided:

That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances.

All that the conferees have agreed upon in changing that is that they are to do it after investigation—can anybody object to that—after they have taken sufficient time to inquire whether it is fair and right or not. That would have been implied clearly before, unless you suppose that these commissioners were mere dolts or were corrupt or wicked, and you can not presume that. It merely puts in words what would be the clear and necessary implication of the bill as it passed the Senate; that is to say, that they are to consider whether in the special case and under special circumstances of competition between one port and another of export or import, or of whatever, they may then modify and change this general rule for the time being according to the necessity of that particular case. That is all of that.

Now we come to the next change in the fourth section. The conferees propose after the words, "And the commission may from time to time," to strike out so much of the succeeding paragraph as follows:

make general rules exempting such designated common carrier in such special cases from the operation of this section of this act; and when such exceptions shall have been made and published, they shall, until changed by the commission or by law, have like force and effect as though the same had been specified in this section.

That language the conferees propose to strike out, and, after the words, "And the commission may from time to time," insert this:

prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act.

Where is the substantial difference except this, that in the Senate provision they were compelled to do it by a general regulation, and the House thought, evidently—and there is some force in it—inasmuch as it must be a general regulation it might operate too far and too widely and to defeat the very object that was designed by the fourth section; and therefore they said that this being the general rule, when there is brought to the attention of the commission a special state of circumstances that makes it right and fair, on investigation, that there shall be a special exception for a limited time, renewable at the judgment of the commission, that less may be charged for a long than for a short haul; to use the common phrase, they might do it.

Therefore I say, as it appears to me, that the changes in this fourth section, so far as they amount to anything at all, are favorable to the railway interest and to the exporting and importing and other interests that my friends who have opposed this conference report have so much at heart, and not more at heart than I have myself. That is the way it looks to me.

Now we come to the pooling business; and my distinguished friend from Ohio has undertaken to show, as my distinguished friend from Massachusetts did, and with all the ingenuity that it is possible for the human mind to exert, that there is really something dangerous to the public welfare in declaring that there shall not be combinations among chartered corporations employed for the public interest, existing and created only for the public interest, taking private property for the public interest (which is the most sacred thing we know of except life and liberty in this world)—that combinations between these corporations, otherwise monopolies, against the benefit of trade and against fair transportation shall not exist. That is what the anti-pooling clause is.

It may be said, as it can in every case where there may be a combination, that in a particular instance it is good for the public welfare, just as there may be, in a thousand instances in this world, a private invasion by a private person of the private rights of somebody else that on the whole we would say would be right. The hungry man comes into my garden as a trespasser and takes fruit; he comes into my kitchen unasked and uninvited and without authority of law and takes bread. He has violated the law; but who cares? And so there may be an instance, though I can not think of one just now, when a corporation created for a public purpose, existing by having taken the property of private citizens for this public purpose, may combine with some other corporation and arrange with it that they will go and do so and so about public interests. I do not think of the instance, but it may be, and I will grant that it may be; but this law, like every other law, lays down general rules and general principles. It does not legislate for the exception; it legislates for the general and for the universal practice and experience of mankind, and therefore if in the city of Washington there should be a combination of all the bakers that they would regulate the price of bread, I say that the Congress of the United States, or whatever may be the power in the District of Columbia, could put it down, just as in Alabama many and many a year ago—and it has been a famous case cited in many causes since argued and determined in the Supreme Court of the United States—it was undertaken to regulate the price of bread of every baker in a certain city or perhaps in all the cities of that State, that they should sell for a price that should be regulated just as these corporations are in this bill under competent sovereign legislative authority, just as we know in all the States in a thousand ways that legislation has always existed and always ought to exist against combinations even of private persons to forestall the markets and put up prices, to speculate against the general interests of the community and against fair play.

And this is especially so when you apply it to great and powerful corporations who exist only by having taken private property into their possession for the proposed benefit of the public, consolidating themselves so that they may mutually, according to their will and their discretion, and not that of the sovereign power of the people, regulate and conduct the affairs of the people as common carriers according to their discretion and not regulated by any law.

So, Mr. President, I believe that what is called pooling—which is simply another phrase for the combination of corporate monopolies not to compete with each other, and so to regulate the freights and the carriage of passengers as if they were one single line, and hold their hands upon the throat of the business intercourse of States and peoples—ought to be prohibited; and yet in some instances it may happen that some corporation will so far run down the price of its transportation that it can make no profit, that it will exhaust the resources of its stockholders if they have actually paid their money and have not got watered stock—and I should like to see a railroad that has not got that sort of thing—but if they really have paid their money will exhaust the resources of their shareholders. Would that be sensible? Would you or I, Mr. President, being stockholders, vote for a board of directors who would do that thing as a system? I admit, like everybody else, we might be tempted or deluded or drawn into a temporary thing of that kind, running at a temporary loss for a little while; but in general, looking over large spaces of time and over large spaces of country, the thing will not work, and everybody knows it. The consequence is, that without a restraining hand we shall see, as we have seen in the last twenty years, that when the people giving their private property or having it taken from them against their will for the purpose of building up quasi public corporations for the public benefit, and into which nobody is compelled to go or put his money unless he chooses on the terms proposed, find these competitors, they find that it would be better for their interest, not for that of the people, that they should combine, pool, and that they should fix their rates as if they were only one, and thereby become a monopoly in restraint of trade and for oppression, instead of being what they were intended to be, advantageous to the interests of the people on both their lines, carrying persons and property at fair rates, according to the situation in which they were placed.

Now, let us suppose, Mr. President, in respect to these two sections that the "gorgons, hydras, and chimeras dire" that have appeared in all manners and forms in this Senate Chamber for the last week should some of them finally, when we lay our hand on them, be experienced and turn out to be the fact. I do not believe that any of them will; but suppose it does turn out, applied to the good city of Boston, for which as the cradle of New England and American liberty I always have reverence, that the export trade of the good city of Boston is in some way injured or hampered or diminished or crippled by the effect of this act, who would be more ready than the Senate of the United States to rectify it when we saw that the forebodings of these gentlemen were in any substantial sense well founded? These are the same kind of forebodings that have appeared whenever in any State or in any country the legislative voice has been appealed to to redress admitted evils as applied to corporations.

I remember a few years ago that the State of Iowa passed among the first of what are called the granger acts. The farmers found, as they thought—and the mass of the Iowa people are farmers, as they are in Vermont—that the railroads which they had chartered for the public interest, the railroads which they had authorized to cross the private property of farmers and other people in that State and take it were not executing this public trust in a just and fair way, and they passed the granger acts. The passage of them was resisted by just the same kind of forebodings and dismal prophecies of ruin and destruction to that State and all its interests that we hear now, and as somebody has said, I believe, about this bill, the Constitution was appealed to as being violated. Well, the railroads resisted the legistation, but it came into force; they resisted its validity, but the Supreme Court of the United States decided that it was valid; and then what was the consequence?

Were the railroads destroyed? Was anybody injured? Did any of the calamities, great or small, that had been so prophesied and foreboded take place? Not one of them. The stock and the property of the railroads that cross that State, after ten or fifteen years of obedience, which they were at last compelled to perform to these laws, have been steady and firm and prosperous and profitable in the market; and yet the farmers of Iowa, legislating wisely for equality and fair play, put their laws in force, and it was found that instead of injuring the people who had resisted it in every way they could, it really did them good. My belief is that when this great railway system of the United States between States, covering a continent, comes to find itself compelled (for that is what it is) against its will, against its opinion, against its inspiring fears and discontent on the part of business people all over the United States, to be subject to the force of this act wisely and fairly administered, it will be for its benefit as well as for the benefit of the people.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask my colleague whether the law to which he refers in Iowa was not subsequently modified or repealed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not repealed; it was modified just as this law will be modified if it is found to operate hardly upon any just interest of any man or of any corporation. Nothing in the way of experimental legislation, as this is, in this country and in this way can be supposed in advance to be perfect. It will need undoubtedly, as it is applied, modification here and modification there, and it will turn out undoubtedly, as our human experience proves it has turned out for a hundred years in this country and for a thousand in Great Britain, that there is not a statute of general interest upon any subject in the world that having been first passed did not at some time in the future require some modification or alteration to adjust itself to the circumstances of the occasion.

Mr. PLATT. With the permission of the Senator from Vermont, reading from the report of Judge McDill, a former Senator, who is now one of the Iowa commissioners, he says:

> The law of 1878, known as the commissioner law, repeals all portions of the act of 1874, known as the granger law, except that portion which provides for the classification of railroads according to earnings per mile, fixes rates for passenger fare, and requires an annual report of gross earnings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to interrupt him a moment to read a statement from a present Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa on this present law?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. He is referring to this law:

> They put it into a law. The railroad companies put it into practice. It produced evil, and only evil, to the greater portion of the State. It needed but to be tried to cause a general demand for its repeal. It was repealed, and the commissioner system enacted in its stead.

That is the statement of a present Senator from the State of Iowa.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to make a remark?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes; I think I understand the subject, but I am glad to get contributions all around.

Mr. CULLOM. As the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has referred to a gentleman in Iowa, Mr. McDill, I desire to say that I have had not less than two or three letters from that gentleman insisting that we must pass this bill.

Mr. PLATT. I was speaking simply of what the state of law was in Iowa at the present time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All of which illustrates exactly what I was saying, that in inaugurating a law of this character or any other which deals with new conditions of affairs, in the first instance it will undoubtedly turn out as it did in Iowa, as it did in Great Britain, as it has done in dozens of the States here, that the law will need modification, amendment, just as a locomotive put for the first time on a railway line needs a screw tightened here, a connecting-rod lengthened there, a screw loosened in another place, and so on. The idea, therefore, of saying that we will not have anything—because that is what it comes to, with all respect to my friend from Massachusetts—that we will not have anything, and will not go far enough to embrace this whole subject in all its aspects because it may turn out, and probably will turn out, that in many respects the legislative discretion and sense of justice will be appealed to to adjust it when it is applied practically so that it will run, just as we do everything in our farms and our shops and our railroad operations, and every business operation of the world.

There is Great Britain, Mr. President, which had almost exactly such an experience as we are having now. The railways, in the first instance, were chartered under conditions and circumstances which made it much less possible for them to do wrong to the general public than it is in this country, in that small kingdom. They were chartered much like our charters—independent fellows, monopolies, combinations, pooling, long hauls and short hauls, and all that sort of thing. The people of Great Britain stood it as long as they could, and the people of the United States have, as I hope, stood it in this instance as long as they could. They first enacted a law stringent like this—not like it in all particulars, but in substance—and they thought it wise in the first instance to put it into the hands of the judges of the courts by summary process, and with administrative as well as judicial power to administer. They practiced on that for a number of years.

It was found by experience that while it was in the hands of the judges this particular point in the law needed modification, another point needed modification, either strengthening or being diminished, according to the circumstances; and after a certain number of years' experience it was thought that it was better to relieve the judges of the courts entirely from that duty, and to put it into the hands of a commission, and the Parliament of Great Britain did that. But the Parliament of Great Britain had the power, which we have not, of investing that commission with summary judicial powers so that they could not only require a railroad to do something, but compel it to do it, with the same powers and effect as the Supreme Court of the United States, or any circuit court of the United States, or any court of a State can do in its own State. We have not that power, because we have a written Constitution with a separation of powers, so that, in my opinion, it can not be done.

This bill comes the nearest to doing it that we can. It has its commission; it has its general regulations of limitation against obvious injustice and wrong, and within those limits it leaves the administration to the commission upon fair principles. Then when that commission determines that something ought to be done and it can not enforce it, appeal must be made to the courts. So every railway corporation will have its fair rights and its fair play in a judicial tribunal. What more can be asked?

All this illustrates, as it seems to me, how clearly we should do a very unwise thing if on account of forebodings and suggested difficulties and possible disasters we should not go forward with this great measure, and if we find at the next session or at any session hereafter, that in any one of the respects that agitate the minds of Senators who oppose it, it is working unjustly and injuriously, it is easy to correct it. But if you break it down now on the ground that it being an untried experiment you are unwilling to try it, how many years will it be before the people of the United States can emancipate themselves from the tyranny of this corporate management and corporate combination that now exists?

Mr. ALDRICH withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BROWN. Before the Senator takes his seat, as he has been discussing the question of the probable construction of the long and short haul provision of the fourth section of this bill, will he permit me to call the attention of the Senate to a decision very lately made by the supreme court of North Carolina on that subject?

We are differing here as to what is the proper construction. The decision of that court may be wrong, but it is a court of ability, the supreme court of one of the oldest States of the Union, and one which is very highly respected everywhere. I do not know that I feel at liberty to give the name of the correspondent, but this is a telegram from Richmond, Va., by a very intelligent gentleman, to a gentleman of this city, who presented it to me awhile ago, in reference to the decision. It seems the decision has been very recently made—he does not say what day—and is in manuscript yet. It has not been printed. The telegram is:

> Am just in receipt of decision of the supreme court of North Carolina in the suit against the Wilmington and Weldon road, in which the supreme court decides that the long and short haul clause means as follows: "A rate of $2.50 per ton on guano from Wilmington to Tarboro', 145 miles, is a violation of the law when the rate is also $2.50 from Wilmington to Rocky Mount, a distance of 125 miles." The law reads that you shall not charge a greater amount for the same character of freight under similar circumstances in the same direction over any part of the road for a short distance than you charge for long.

Almost the identical language of the provision in the fourth section of this report on that subject.

> These are precisely the terms of the interstate bill, section 4. The court holds that in this case the W. and W. Railroad hauled the freight to Rocky Mount, 125 miles, for $2.50, and for the remaining distance for nothing, and therein lies the violation of the law. The opinion of the court covers fifty-seven pages of legal cap, and construes the law clearly to mean the same rate per mile to be charged in the same direction. I will have the decision copied, and try to get it to you by to-night's train.

So that the decision of the supreme court of North Carolina seems to be that, in case of a statute using almost identically the same language as this, it means the same rate per mile. It may be right or it may be wrong, but it is worthy of the attention of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. What does the Senator from Georgia think with reference to that construction himself?

Mr. BROWN. I think it most probable that that will be the decision of the courts generally, and the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States when it goes there.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to address the Senate at any length on this question, but I have reached the conclusion that it is my duty to vote to recommit this bill. I believe it is conceded by all who have spoken, even in favor of it, that it is a very great experiment, and it is very uncertain as to what may be its result.

I am very sure, upon as careful a reading of the fourth section as I am able to give it, that its effect will be to increase the rates for the long haul and possibly those for the short haul also, and that its result will be disastrous to the country if it shall even slightly affect our exports. It will not take a very large percentage to turn the balance of trade against us. Should that occur, it is going to derange not only the business of the country, but the parity of the gold and silver currency of the country.

I had supposed in years gone by that it was something creditable to our people that we had built so many miles of railroad in this country, and have been wont to point to the fact that we had railroads that equaled in extent those of all the world beside; but it seems that we can no longer do so, judging by the vituperative epithets that are visited on these railroads for their conduct and their management; and I judge, if this bill should pass unamended, we may rely upon it that the crusade will have its effect until this experiment can be tried, for I can not believe that there will be a single new railroad built in this country until the experiment has been tested. It will call a halt upon the further construction of railroads until it can be seen whether such investments are endangered or not.

There are several provisions in the bill besides the one so constantly referred to as the fourth section to which I think attention should be called, and if the bill is to be recommitted I should hope it would be amended in those particulars.

I have no doubt that the business of the country, should this bill pass, will completely snow under all the five commissioners provided for. Why, Mr. President, to take charge of this bill under its present terms I do not think fifty commissioners would be able the first year to transact the business that will be thrown on their hands, and yet we provide in this bill that there shall be only five commissioners, and leave it, even for those who are not at all interested in any freight matter, to make any complaint that they see fit, and that complaint has to be considered by these five commissioners. Look at the way that is to be followed out. I wish to suggest whether it is not founding an opportunity for a series of blackmail upon all the railroads of the country. A man who has no interest at all may make complaint. The commissioners are bound to hear it. They send back word to the complainant that he must go to the railroad managers and try to settle and adjust the matter with them. The railroad, rather than have a wrangle, a quarrel, or a lawsuit, may be willing to buy off that complainant and pay him handsomely. Such complaints may give some idle men a paying business.

Then, it seems to me, that the amount appropriated is wholly inadequate for the services which are required to be rendered. One hundred thousand dollars only is appropriated, and of this $37,500 are allotted to the commissioners at once and $3,500 to a secretary; and then other employés must be provided for, so that it will eat up at least $50,000 all at once. So that all the remainder of the sum that is appropriated is barely $50,000. Mr. President, in paying the expense of this commission and summoning witnesses, perhaps from Oregon, Texas, or Maine, that sum might not last sixty days. Therefore, I think that the sum appropriated and the officers appointed are not sufficient for the purpose.

But, Mr. President, there is another matter that I think of grave importance, and that is the interference that we make with the roads that have been chartered by the United States. Take the Central Pacific and Union Pacific railroads. These, undoubtedly, Congress may legislate upon, but whether they can legislate upon them so as to destroy them may be doubtful. If the short and long haul clause of this bill shall be carried into effect, so far as these companies are concerned, we may bid a long farewell to any prospect of collecting the indebtedness of these companies to the United States. I do not believe that it will be possible for these companies to carry on their through business under the fourth section of this bill, and if we are to ruin their business of course the debt of much more than $100,000,000, secured upon the roads to the United States, will be wholly worthless.

There are other things in relation to these Pacific roads. We are indebted to them all over the country for green fruits, for oranges, for pears, for grapes, &c. Unless these roads can be permitted to deliver these green fruits to the East at a less rate than they charge for their local freight, it will be impossible that we should receive these constant supplies of such fruits, and the State of California and the other States on the Pacific coast would be very badly damaged if we cut off a market for which they have made such large provision.

But, Mr. President, I did not propose to discuss this bill at any length. I know that the Senate have agreed to vote upon the question to-day, and I merely wish to emphasize the statement in relation to the possibility of getting up another bill. I have no sort of doubt about it. If we should recommit this bill, especially with a chairman whose views have been overruled and who has been compelled to present a bill here not his own work, but against his own judgment and his own opinion, I have no sort of doubt but that we can get a better bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] took it upon himself to read as a part of his remarks, by way of enforcing and illustrating them, some utterances of mine made some years ago before a committee of the House of Representatives, at which time I was not in official position. He seemed to regard my utterances on that occasion as well put, and entitled to consideration and force now.

I have changed somewhat my views of the questions which I then presented to that committee. I have more information than I had then. I have made a definite study of this subject since I became connected with it as a member of this body, and I have found iniquities sufficient in the practices of the railroad companies of this country in the matter of the administration of our transportation system to induce me to do what I said in my remarks before the holidays I should do, and that is vote for the passage of this bill.

Many reasons have come to me in the years that have passed since those remarks were made to induce the position which I now occupy, and I stand here to-day, representing in part the State of Iowa, about whose condition I at that time spoke, to say that the people of that State under the present administrations of its transportation system are, except at a very few so-called competitive points, practically without any such thing as the low rate on the long haul. It has been said, and repeated time and again, that the West can not get on without the application of the low rate on the long haul, and that if this bill shall become a law the fields of the farmers of Iowa will become waste places. They are being pushed in that direction without this bill.

The farmers of Iowa and all others having products of whatsoever kind to ship to market from that State are to-day, and they have been since the companies induced the change of our first transportation act in the State, paying, except from a few localities, local rates to Chicago, so that while the companies were carrying the corn of the farmers of Iowa at 11 cents a hundred from competing points on the Missouri River to Chicago, they were charging 17 cents and 22 cents a hundred from stations but a few miles east of the western boundary of the State to stations within the State and west of the Mississippi River, producing the result that I brought to the attention of the Senate in my remarks before the holiday adjournment, that Western Iowa corn was selling in Chicago ever since the ripening of the present crop from 3 to 6 cents per bushel cheaper than the farmer in the eastern part of Iowa could get it with which to feed the stock on his farm, he needing it because of the failure of the crop in Eastern Iowa.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. As I understand this bill, it does not interfere at all with the railroads in the several States. Now he complains that the railroads charge from a point in his State to another point in the State a higher rate than they do to Chicago.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am only giving that as an example of the outrageous conduct of the railroad companies.

Mr. MORRILL. Which is not remedied by this bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No; but I hope if we shall get this bill that the people of Iowa will follow it with supplementary action with reference to the transportation within their own State. Indirectly, of course, it will have an effect. But these conditions have been growing worse day by day since the period referred to by the Senator from Rhode Island, and, as I said, I have been getting education as the time has been going on. I have received some of it even from good old Massachusetts, the State which stands here in the person of her able Senator [Mr. HOAR] to-day resolutely opposing the principle of the long-and-short-haul provision of this bill. In the last report of the commissioners of that State I find the following in respect of the long-and-short-haul doctrine of this bill:

> In exceptional cases and to a small extent it may work harshly, but its general working has been most beneficial. It has remedied a great evil and a great injustice; it has helped save small industries and small places from being crushed out of existence; it has checked the tendency to consolidation which would build up one place, or a few places, at the cost of local enterprise, thus creating traffic for the railroads by giving occupation to their customers. And it is believed any attempt to repeal this safeguard of fair dealing would receive almost universal condemnation from the business men of Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. From what does the Senator read, will he pardon me?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am reading from an extract given me in an editorial in the Chicago Tribune, which extract is said to be taken from the last annual report of the railroad commissioners of Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. What is the "it" which works all those things?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The application of the principle of the long and short haul clause.

Mr. HOAR. I have in my hand a document, the last report of the railroad commissioners of Massachusetts—I do not at this moment put my eye on the passage, but I had it here to read—in which it is said that the phrase "from the same point of departure," which is stricken out of the bill here, is essential to the Massachusetts legislation; that without it it never would have been passed. It proceeds to argue against this provision with great force; and among my papers which I handed to the reporter I had a letter from Hon. Thomas Russell, whose language the Senator from Iowa is quoting, addressed to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], in which, in five or six closely-written pages, he exposes the injustice of this present scheme. The Senator has been misled by applying to one thing what the author of that language applied to another.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me while I interpose a pretty emphatic issue with the honorable Senator from Vermont. The chairman of the railroad commission of Massachusetts says it is not the same thing in substance, but that this thing would be utterly destructive, while that thing has worked well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say in reply to my friend from Massachusetts, if it is lawful to differ from a Massachusetts chairman whatever he is, I entirely disagree with that Massachusetts man.

Mr. HOAR. But I did not bring Judge Russell, an eminent railroad authority though he is, into this discussion. The Senator from Iowa undertook to quote Judge Russell's language as an indorsement of this bill, and he read it with a personal reference to me, saying that he had brought a Massachusetts authority in opposition to what I had said. He had been learning from Massachusetts.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. So I have.

Mr. HOAR. I then said that the Massachusetts authority which he quoted on his side had expressed in the strongest way his disapprobation of the present bill both in private correspondence and in his last railroad report, from which the Senator quoted. He says in speaking of the provision which was not agreed to in the Senate originally, that this provision should apply to two things from the same point of departure, that that is essential to the efficacy of the Massachusetts law, and without it it never would have been passed.

The Senator from Vermont will pardon me. I was not setting up anybody against the Senator from Vermont, but I was simply pointing out that the authority which was brought against me from my own State was on my side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, there is one thing that is definitely clear in this matter, and that is that the long-and-short-haul provision applies to the transportation system of Massachusetts. About that there is no doubt or dispute. If that principle is good for Massachusetts, why is it not good for New York, and Ohio, and Michigan, and Illinois, and Iowa?

Mr. DAWES. If the long and short haul is good for Massachusetts, I should like to know why the same power that made it good for Massachusetts does not take it up and apply it to Iowa.

Mr. HOAR. Will my colleague——

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let me take one at a time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa declines to yield.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will tell the Senator from Massachusetts, who put the last question, why. Simply because we are dealing with the subject of interstate commerce over which the State of Iowa can exercise no jurisdiction, and because we can not do that we are trying to get the remedy applied by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to know of the Senator from Iowa why Iowa can not apply it to her commerce from station to station precisely as Massachusetts does.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We can do it from station to station within the State.

Mr. DAWES. Then all the good that Massachusetts gets out of it in applying it to her freight system Iowa can if she wants to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. With respect to her State commerce alone, but there is commerce originating in Iowa that enters into and becomes a part of the great body of interstate commerce.

Mr. DAWES. Now, I wish to know——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Not at present. While we may follow the example of Massachusetts and apply the principle of her law to the State commerce of the State of Iowa, we want also the principle applied to the interstate commerce, in order that all that we ship out of the State except from a few competitive points shall not be compelled as now to pay local rates to Chicago.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator has cited instances of outrageous charges betwen different points in his own State, showing that the farmer in Eastern Iowa is obliged to pay for the corn he gets from Western Iowa so much more in freight that they could get it in Chicago cheaper than they could get the same corn there. Is not that all under the control of the State of Iowa? If the charges between Western Iowa and Eastern Iowa are so exorbitant, why does not Iowa put a stop to it just as Massachusetts has, and get all the good which the Senator has made himself familiar with by reading the report of the commissioner of Massachusetts?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator from Massachusetts can not lead me away from the subject I was illustrating by the facts that I cited in connection with Iowa. I cited those facts to show the hardship imposed by the present system of transportation administration by the companies.

Mr. DAWES. I alluded to it to show that the remedy is within yourself.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In so far as the commerce confined within the limits of the State is concerned; but I put the question again, if that principle works good in Massachusetts in connection with State commerce, why will it not work good in the United States in reference to interstate commerce?

Mr. HOAR. Will my friend now permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am taking up more of the time of the Senate than I intended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. I am sure the Senator would not desire to put me or the railroad commissioner of Massachusetts in a false position.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair inquires again if the Senator from Iowa yields.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to read exactly what the railroad commissioner of Massachusetts said on that subject. Here was an application from the selectmen of Pittsfield, the town where my colleague lives, saying that the Boston and Albany Railroad Company charged $1 a gross ton for coal from a certain point on their line, 50 miles, to Pittsfield, and that they were charging $1.25 for a distance of only 43 miles. That is the complaint under our short-haul law. Then skipping all but a few sentences I will read what the commissioner says:

The statute commonly known as the "short-haul law" is in substance as follows:

No railroad corporation shall charge or receive for the transportation of freight to any station on its road a greater sum than is at the time charged or received for the transportation of the like class and quantity of freight from the same original point of departure—

These words are in italics—to a station at a greater distance on its road in the same direction.

The words in italics are a substantive and essential part of the law, without which it could not have been passed. We have a right to say this, because such a law was proposed to the Legislature, and was rejected in 1871, when the "short-haul law" was first enacted. This proposed bill read as follows:

"No railroad corporation of this commonwealth shall charge or collect for the transportation of goods or merchandise for any shorter distance any larger amount as toll or freight than is charged or collected for the carriage of similar quantities of the same class of goods over a longer distance upon the same road."

Such a bill would forbid the collection of $1.25 from Hudson and $1 from Albany. But the general court not only have not enacted such a bill, but have refused so to do, and for good reasons. It is interesting to notice that when the "short-haul law" of this State is censured, as it recently has been by interested parties, it is always misrepresented to be just what the petitioners have supposed it to be.

And now when it is passed it is equally misunderstood.

It is misrepresented in that newspaper which the Senator quoted:

While a rate over one route or in one direction lower than that charged in another is not absolutely forbidden, such a discrepancy is evidence admissible upon the question of reasonableness, and it calls for explanation.

And they go on to give it. I have here, written by Judge Russell——

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Do not take up too much time.

Mr. HOAR. I have here a paper in which he reasons out——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Judge Russell reasons out his opinion of the proposed act of Congress, and states that the act of Massachusetts is different from it, and his reasons——

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That would be simply involving a difference of opinion between Judge Russell and myself and other members of the Senate concerning the proper construction of the fourth section of the present bill. That is all there is of that. It does not avoid the point I am making, that Massachusetts has the long-and-short-haul provision of this bill in her law, and one reason given for the satisfaction which the commissioners have concerning that law is that it has remedied a great evil and a great injustice. It has helped to save small industries and small places from being crushed out of existence. If it will do that in Massachusetts, where they apply this rule, why not, if it is given proper application, do the same in other States?

Mr. President, one of the reasons why I support this bill is that it will have a tendency to prevent the crushing out of small industries; and not only that, but it will have the additional tendency of inducing the upbuilding of small industries. It may be that Rhode Island and Massachusetts, speaking here to-day, see through the operation of this bill, if it shall become a law, the upbuilding of manufacturing business in Iowa, in Nebraska, in Minnesota, in Dakota, and throughout those Western regions that are now depressed, or, rather, which are now prevented because of the methods and practices of the administration of our railway system.

I have a case in mind like this, which seems to me in point. A gentleman who had accumulated a few thousand dollars desired to establish a wagon manufactory at a town in the State of Iowa. He had capital sufficient to buy the lots on which to erect his buildings, sufficient to put up the buildings, and to purchase and place his machinery therein to give employment to fifty or seventy-five workmen. He looked the ground over and made his calculations. He saw what he could do, and determined upon locating at that point. The next important thing for him, Mr. President, was to ascertain whether or not as against your great factories in Ohio, and as against the factories in Chicago or in New York, or elsewhere he could get such rates for material in and such rates for manufactured product out as would justify him in investing his capital where, as a citizen and business man, he desired. When he made his application to the company to know what rates he could have, what was the answer? "No, we can not give you such rates as these others have. We are not prepared to have manufacturing establishments built at this point; go to this place, to that place, or the other," naming them. But, he responded, "I have not money enough to buy land to build a house on at those places. I can do all that I need to do at the place I have selected—buy my land, build my houses, and put in machinery sufficient to give fifty or seventy-five men employment." He could not do it simply because of the method adopted by the transporting companies of the country for favorite localities while applying the opposite to others.

There are instances of this kind multiplied over and over again throughout the country, instances of such discrimination as I called to the attention of the Senate before the holidays with respect to the corn crop of Iowa, instances of favoritism of all kinds, instances of such favoritism as bring out from the manufacturers of agricultural machinery in your own State protests against this bill because they have special rates and others can not get them. Of course the manufacturing establishments that have their special rates do not want a bill passed that will establish a rule of equality, fairness, and exact justice between all men engaged in business in this country.

It is because I believe this bill has the tendency to bring about these great results that I shall give it my support. I want to establish in our commercial system, so largely dominated by our transportation system, that equality in business movements that each man is entitled to under the Constitution of the United States and our doctrine of equality. I do not want these artificial persons, the transporting companies of the country, to determine whether I or any other man may or may not invest capital for the purpose of business whenever and wherever we please. Yet that is a usurpation that the transportation companies have assumed to themselves, and they do dictate where business may be done and where it may not be done, where profit may be made and where it may not be made.

Therefore, having, as I have said, with care and diligence studied this question since the days, years ago, referred to by the Senator from Rhode Island—having, because of that care and study, changed my views somewhat, I have concluded, as a Senator representing in part the people of the State of Iowa, to give my vote for a measure which I believe will tend in the direction of justice.

Mr. President, I do not concur in the position which has been taken by some Senators that we had better not do anything now and wait and see whether we can not find something better. The people and the business of the country have waited and waited long enough. They have endured the outrages and hardships imposed by the bad methods and iniquities of the transportation system of the country long enough.

If there are to be some mistakes let them be made on the side of the business and the people of this country, and let experience show wherein they are mistakes, and we will correct them by and by when we get the light sufficient to guide us in that action. But let us not pass this day by, or this session of Congress by, without giving an affirmative response to the well-grounded demand of the people and the business men and farmers of this country that they shall have relief from the wrongs and bad practices that now lie imbedded in the present method of administering the transportation system of the United States.

Mr. MORRILL. Recognizing the Senator from Iowa as a good lawyer who has studied this bill with diligence, I desire to call his attention to one provision in the bill. Of course we all understand that if this bill should pass the Canadian roads can not be affected by it so far as we are concerned, and therefore the bankrupt roads in Canada are likely to have all the business that they can do. Beyond all question, that is to be the practical result; we are to give a very large share of our business to Canada.

On the third page of this bill, in the second paragraph of the sixth section, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to this phraseology:

Any freight shipped from the United States through a foreign country into the United States, the through rate on which shall not have been made public as required by this act, shall, before it is admitted into the United States from said foreign country, be subject to customs duties as if said freight were of foreign production.

I desire to know how we are to obtain that from the Canadian roads? How can we compel them to give this notice of their rates?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have not before me the print of the bill that the Senator from Vermont has.

Mr. MORRILL. I will give my copy to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Perhaps the Senator from Illinois, who has charge of the bill, can readily answer the question.

Mr. CULLOM. The language of the bill on the subject referred to by the Senator from Vermont is that the Canada road, if you please, which begins at Chicago and ends at Portland, shall publish its through rates from Chicago to Portland, and if it declines or fails to do so, then the provision in reference to customs duties shall apply.

Mr. MORRILL. But the road does not begin at Chicago.

Mr. CULLOM. The road begins at Chicago, practically.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from Vermont will excuse me, I will state that the road begins at Chicago by a late arrangement. They now control the Detroit and Milwaukee road, which runs through Michigan, and which is now a part of the Grand Trunk system.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then the Senator from Vermont was mistaken in his premises.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey appeals to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois if that provision for a charge of duties on the freight of the Canada road would not be an abrogation of the treaty of Washington?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I had yielded the floor generally.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not understand that it would. My impression is that that provision of the treaty of Washington has been abrogated at some time, and if it were not, this is a police regulation by which the United States has a right to require notice to be given, and if the road does not comply with it the penalty will attach.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say in regard to the treaty of Washington that the thirtieth article of it, which seemed to be the principal one which embarrassed some railway gentlemen, was without their knowing it, which was very strange, terminated on the 1st of July, 1885, and is no longer in force.

Mr. CULLOM. So I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The twenty-ninth article relates exclusively to the cross-transportation between one country and the other over the territories of the other, where duties shall not be charged in the country through which the goods go; and that has nothing to do with this question at all. So, in my humble opinion, after having examined it, there is no ground whatever for the pretension that among all the other evils that will happen if we pass this bill we are going to get into any difficulty in regard to contravening the provisions of the existing regulations with Great Britain.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I wish to say a single word in answer to the remarks of the Senator from Iowa, in regard to the extract which I read from his speech. I certainly intended to say nothing that was discourteous or not complimentary to the Senator.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope the gentleman did not understand me as lodging any complaint of that kind, for I certainly did not do it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I meant to create the impression that while the words used in his speech were the argument of an attorney, the judgment and the conclusions of the utterances were those of a statesman. I am sure there is nothing in the portion of the speech which I have read, or the remainder of it, that would cause the Senator from Iowa to be anything else but proud that it should be contrasted either in its style or spirit or in its conclusiveness with his later utterances in another capacity.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am not taking any exception whatever to the use the Senator from Rhode Island made of my remarks. It has afforded me an opportunity to express publicly in my place as a Senator my thorough revision and reformation of the mistaken views I then entertained concerning the interests involved.

Mr. ALDRICH. The principal reason which the Senator from Iowa has given up to this moment for this change of heart is that the law in Massachusetts works so well that he thinks it ought to have a larger application. There is no possible analogy between the two laws or between the two conditions. The act of Massachusetts prohibits a larger charge for a shorter than for a longer haul from the same original point of departure.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Still it is a question of a long and short haul.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is always a question of a long and short haul in every law regulating transportation, but they are as unlike as black is from white. They are as far apart as the north pole from the south pole.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is simply a difference of opinion between the Senator from Rhode Island, myself, and others with respect to the construction to be placed upon that law in view of the language of the bill now before us.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not a question of construction at all, but a question of fact. The Legislature of Massachusetts in 1872 deliberately refused to pass a bill which, in its provisions, was like the one now under consideration in the Senate, and they did pass a bill as unlike as it could possibly be. The Camden amendment, which was under discussion in the Senate so long, was to strike out the very words which are in the Massachusetts law, and which are not in this bill, and which every Senator who spoke on the subject admitted changed radically and fundamentally the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Nevertheless the Legislature enacted a law with reference to the language of which there may be a difference of opinion. There is a difference of opinion as to the effect of the language of that Massachusetts law.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the time the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth to the present hour they have enacted a great many laws, and most of them have as little relation to this section now before the Senate as the section in the law to which the Senator now refers. As I said before, they are as unlike as any two provisions can be, the words "from the original point of departure" preserving all the natural advantages of competitive points, and forbidding the very thing which this bill requires, which is the discrimination against competitive points and in favor of non-competitive points.

But if the statute of Massachusetts was identical with this, it is no reason why an act in its application to a small and dense community should be beneficial over the great extent of this country from one end to the other.

The Senator from Iowa said another thing, that perhaps the manufacturers of Massachusetts and Rhode Island did not want to see the manufactures of Iowa built up. The manufacturers of Massachusetts and Rhode Island are situated upon the waters of the Atlantic Ocean or very near them. They have a commerce to the West and to every part of the world which you can not restrict by your legislation and which you can not take from us. We are connected with the waterways through the Hudson River and the Erie Canal and the great lakes with the West and with the South, and you can not prevent it. It is a State like Iowa, a State like Colorado, a State like Kansas, or a State like Nebraska, which is absolutely dependent upon cheap rates of transportation by long hauls to the seaboard that this bill is going to affect.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That business which can not be interfered with, as the Senator from Rhode Island says, because they have water transportation, may be very seriously interfered with if the people of Iowa and Nebraska should develop manufacturing establishments which would give them the products that are now shipped from Massachusetts and Rhode Island to those States.

Mr. ALDRICH. The people of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, so far as they are represented upon this floor, and I know the Senators from Massachusetts will coincide with this expression of opinion, will welcome with gladness a development of manufactures in every village, in every hamlet of the West, in Iowa, or any other of the great agricultural States, and they will do as much here and now or at any other time for such development as will produce such results as any Senator on this floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to trespass on the indulgence of the Senate for a single minute, not to go into debate, but to just simply read the one hundred and ninetieth section of the General Statutes of Massachusetts, which appear to have been passed, so far as this section goes, in 1874, and which appear to be in force still on this subject of long and short hauls, without much, if any, comment:

SEC. 190. No railroad corporation shall charge or receive for the transportation of freight to any station on its road a greater sum than is at the time charged or received for the transportation of the like class and quantity of freight from the same original point of departure to a station at a greater distance on its road in the same direction.

Then it provides that two or more railroads making one line shall be subject to the same condition, &c.:

In the construction of this section the sum charged or received for the transportation of freight shall include all terminal charges; and the road of a corporation shall include all the road in use by it, whether owned or operated under a contract or lease.

Here is the fourth section of this bill, as recommended by the committee of conference:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate—

Which is not in the Massachusetts statute, but it seems to be for the benefit of the company—for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction.

I am unable to see, I confess, how it is possible to distinguish in legal interpretation the Massachusetts statute from this clause that I have read. It does not say, as the Massachusetts statute, "from the same original point of departure," but if it be under like circumstances and conditions it must be from the same original point of departure. The only trouble that we had when this bill was before the Senate and was so long and exhaustively discussed, was as to whether there ought not to be added the words "the same point of arrival," and the Senate, after discussion, on a yea-and-nay vote, inserted the words "the same point of arrival," so as to meet it at both ends. This change of phraseology appears now to be a shorter, and I must say not so clear a statement of precisely the same thing that the Senate bill contained.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate at this late hour over this incidental question which has come up. The question whether the words "starting from the same original point of departure" do or do not make a substantial difference in this bill has been, I think, sufficiently discussed before the Senate. It would take half an hour to restate that argument in full, and I shall not undertake to do it now. It is enough to say that it has been for the first time heard of in railroad discussion that these two things were not essentially different.

In the first place, the Legislature that passed the Massachusetts statute rejected one and adopted the other. In the next place, the chairman of the railroad commissioners, familiar with her whole railroad policy and her great railroad authority, declares that they are totally different, and that one never would have been adopted if those words had not been in. Next, the Senate, when this measure originally passed, struggled over that matter for a long time, and struck out the words "from the same original point of departure," the Senator from Vermont voting for it, in order, however, that he might afterward put the words back with an additional qualification, so that the qualification should apply to both ends—to the point of departure and the point of arrival. So if any authority may be cited to that effect, the authority of my friend from Vermont may be cited.

But I did not raise this question for the purpose of renewing the discussion. I thought when the Senator from Iowa cited an eminent Massachusetts authority against me, it was perfectly fair that the Senate and the public should see that that eminent gentleman declared in the strongest manner his opinion against the present proposition and in favor of the other, and his statement that the two were distinct. I admit that my honorable friend from Iowa is a reformed man, if that will do him any good.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator from Massachusetts sits down I wish he would simply define what the words "the original point of departure" in the Massachusetts statute mean. I should like to know it in this connection, because then I shall be enabled more clearly to see the difference which he says exists between the phraseology of this bill and that statute. The Senator from Vermont certainly sees practically no difference. The Senator from Massachusetts sees a marked difference. Now, if he will tell us just what the words "the original point of departure" mean in the Massachusetts statute I shall be obliged, because I do not comprehend it even at this moment after all the debate, especially after what I have just heard.

Mr. HOAR. There does not at this moment occur to me any phrase in the English language which makes it more clear than the language itself. The Senator might as well ask me to define to him what I think two and two mean.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; then I will put my question in another form. The Senator from Vermont understands the phraseology to be substantially the phraseology of the Massachusetts statute. The Senator from Massachusetts says that is not true, and quotes the Senator from Vermont last July to prove it. I should be glad to have the Senator from Massachusetts clearly point out to me that distinction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So should I; but he can not do it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. HOAR. He can not do it, because the Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will yield the floor to the Senator from Massachusetts to point it out, if he wishes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Massachusetts is not quite ready to point it out.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator mean by saying that I am not quite ready to point it out?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because I yielded to you to point out, in answer to the Senator from Iowa, the difference that you had suggested.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator mean to say that he does not think there is any difference between two classes of freight which come from the same starting point and two classes that do not?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only mean to say that I yielded to the Senator from Massachusetts to answer the Senator from Iowa, and then I will state what I think I mean.

Mr. HOAR. I mean from the same railroad starting point to the point of destination where the freight is put down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Massachusetts having made all the explanation he wishes, I will proceed.

I am under the impression myself that I stand to-day exactly where I did in July last, if that was the time when this section was under discussion by the Senate. The bill as reported only had in the phrase "original point of departure" and had not in the phrase "the point of arrival," so that leaving it as it then stood, as it appeared to me, goods might be sent from Chicago to Boston at one rate, at a dollar a ton, while the same railroad line and the same corporation, if there were one, might charge the same rate or more from Worcester to Boston, a distance of 40 miles, because the original point of departure from Chicago and from Worcester would, to most minds, appear to be different and not the same. Accordingly, I did what I could to persuade the Senate that that was incomplete and that the phrase "the point of arrival" ought to be inserted, and the Senate thought so too.

I have never maintained, and I can not see now how it is possible to distinguish in substance the provision of the Massachusetts act, which is of course only an incident to this debate, from the substance of the provision which the conference committee has reported. I agree that it does not appear to my mind to be so clear as it was as the Senate left it; but I believe that it means the same thing, and if it turns out not to mean the same thing that we shall correct it; I am for taking it as it is.

Mr. HOAR. The very case that I read from the railroad commissioner was an illustration of the precise thing on which Judge Russell bases his argument. There were two conveyances of coal to the town of Pitsfield, one from Albany and one from Hudson, the farthest point on the Boston and Albany road. The coal departing from Hudson, the farthest point, went for a dollar a ton. The coal departing from Albany, the nearest point, was charged a dollar and twenty-five cents. The railroad commissioners of Massachusetts stated the reason which, beyond all doubt, made one proper and not another, and therefore they sustained the larger charge for the shorter haul. The statute of Massachusetts did not mean to prohibit it.

Now, take the case of a town on the seaboard for instance. Here is a town which has a water-way the whole way from Boston to Salem or to Portland, and there is an intermediate town which has no water-way. I do not see that it is unreasonable that the railroad which perhaps could not get the freight which might be water borne unless it took it at cost or at a trifle above cost, so that it contributed something to its fixed expenses, should not take that freight. I understand that some of the Senators who have spoken say this bill does not prevent that, while others think it does.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him right there I will state that Judge Deady, of Oregon, upon precisely a similar statute, decided that this fourth section, if that is the section of the Oregon statute, was to be construed with the other provisions of the act, and where water-way competition came in he allowed a receiver under his own court to charge a less rate, which was done under the very direction and control of the court, under a statute more rigid than this one.

Mr. HOAR. Exactly. Now, the supreme court of the State of North Carolina, as I understood the honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] to read the decision, has decided just the other way.

Is there any other subject on the face of the earth; is there a matter which would involve to the people of this country the amount of $10,000; is there a private claim to the amount of $10,000, in regard to which the construction of an act being in dispute between two respectable judicial tribunals of this country, you would not recommit to a committee or bring the act before the Senate before you passed it, to make that clear? If the Senator from Iowa is right and the Senator from Mississippi is wrong, if the Senator from Vermont is right and the Senator from Tennessee is wrong, if the Senator from Illinois is right and the conferees who forced this into the bill as representatives of the House are wrong, you have got a question which is to affect generally the country to the amount of hundreds and thousands of millions of dollars. All we ask of you is to recommit your bill or disagree to this committee of conference report, and have language put into the bill which will settle this question about which these great authorities dispute.

But when the Senator from Iowa answered me I was simply replying to the statement of the Senator from Vermont, that he could not see how it could be just that the town nearer the point of arrival should, in any case, pay more than the town which was farther from the point of arrival. My colleague's town of Pittsfield is three times the distance from Boston that the city in which I reside is; but suppose the people of that city, as many Western communities have done, should establish three or four railroad lines from their own town to the seaboard at their own cost for the sake of getting the advantage of that competition, is the statute of the United States, or of Massachusetts, or whatever legislative power has authority over that matter, to come in and say they shall not have the benefit of the competition which they have themselves paid for?

These railroad lines are not of foreign authority or of foreign power, brought into this country. They are created very largely at the cost of the communities that they serve, and it seems to me that if the people of a particular community have provided themselves with competition, or if they have settled themselves on the seaboard where they may have many advantages in the way of soil or climate or water-power, it is unjust to come in and by this iron-fixed rule say that the natural effect of competition shall in no case apply to them.

The Senators who claim that this bill has the meaning which we do not impute to it, concede in substance the reasonableness of our arguments. The Senator from Iowa, the Senator from Vermont, and even the Senator from Illinois, will not stand up here and say that these things, which the North Carolina court and the Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and the Representatives at the other end of the Capitol, say the bill means, are unjust and ought not to be done. All we ask of them is to have this bill brought before the Senate and have the meaning which they impute to it made plain and clear.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the only justification of this debate, so far as I understand it, is that the minds of the commissioners, who are to be appointed under the bill, and to whom its interpretation is to be entrusted, may be enlightened by the cotemporaneous expression of opinion on the part of those by whom the bill was enacted. I have heard, I think, the Senator from Illinois and perhaps one or two others say that when this statute came to be interpreted the commissioners would revert to the debates which have been had on these various sections for the purpose of ascertaining what the intendment of the legislator was. I therefore congratulate the Senate upon the unanimity of opinion which has been exhibited in the interpretation of the fourth section of this bill. I am satisfied that any commission which might be appointed, on reverting to these debates, would have a flood of light shed in upon the darkest recesses of their intellect as to what the intention of the Senate and the conferees was in the provision that they have inserted about the long and the short haul.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] stated that he was unable to perceive any difference whatever between the section as it passed the Senate and as it had been reported by the conference committee. If an intellect as acute and luminous, as penetrating and profound as that of the Senator from Vermont can detect no difference whatever between those two propositions, it is presumptuous in me, with the dullness and opacity of my intellect, to venture to express any opinion as to the question of difference between the two propositions, and I feel that I am verging somewhat perhaps upon the extreme limits of propriety when I venture, with much diffidence, to express my opinion that those two propositions upon the long and the short haul, as contained in the section as it originally passed the Senate and as it comes out in its second birth from the committee of conference, are just as widely separated as it is possible for two propositions to be.

In the debate that occurred in April and May last there was no profounder discussion, there was no more elaborate argument presented upon this bill than that which resulted in the insertion of the line that this report proposes to strike out. Senators need not refresh their recollections to any particular extent to bear me out in the statement that the insertion of the words "from the same original point of departure or to the same point of arrival" was the culmination, the final point which was reached in the discussion of the bill.

In the first place, the words "from the same original point of departure" after a long debate were stricken out on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. The debate was long; the contention was earnest; the purpose of the Senator from West Virginia was well understood; and it was only after the debate had been exhausted upon all the other propositions of the bill that the Senator from Vermont, with his astuteness in parliamentary practice, came in and proposed that the words which had been stricken out and which could not otherwise be inserted in the state the bill then was in should be again placed in the bill with the addition of the words "as to the same point of arrival." Yet the Senator from Vermont rises here in his place and deliberately declares that the elimination of that line in this section, which was inserted after all that debate and as the final result of that debate, does not in any way whatever practically change the effect of the section.

I understood then, and I understand now, that these words were inserted in this section for the purpose of making the long and short haul provision apply to terminal points. The whole debate turned on that. The question of competition, of competitive points, of the injury that was done by the discrimination for and against localities entered into the debate; and those words were inserted in the section for the purpose of making the long and short haul provision apply to competitive terminal points. They may have been ineffectual; I dare say they were. This proposed statute is in many ways inartificial. It deals with a subject which can not be formulated. You can not treat this matter like a scientific problem or a demonstration in Euclid; but the intention and purpose of those who supported that amendment as finally perfected by the Senator from Vermont was to make the long and short haul provision apply to competitive terminal points.

Mr. HOAR. And no other.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir; and no other. I never would have voted for the section as it then stood unless I had so clearly understood. I am very sure that those who thought with me, and who are surrounded by the same environments in their different localities, never would have agreed to it unless it was supposed that that line was placed there for a purpose after weeks of travail in debate, and that it meant something; and that something is what, in my judgment and my belief, was designed by those who voted for it. That section is intended, or was intended, to do away with the discrimination that railroads have made between localities.

Now, what is the effect of it as it stands to-day? The Senator from Illinois in reporting this bill has seen fit, after consenting to the elimination of that line, to agree to the insertion of the following:

The shorter being included within the longer distance.

What does that mean as it stands to-day? It means the application of the long and short haul principle to every single mile of road upon the common carrier's way, no matter where it may be located, between the two terminal points, and it applies to every pound of freight that may be transported over that line, no matter from what point it starts or at what point it is to arrive. It does not do to attempt to darken counsel by words without wisdom in this matter. It does not do to ask gentlemen to close their eyes to this great question and say after we had agreed to that proposition that we should now agree to the other because that debate was nothing, meant nothing, resulted in nothing, and that therefore this should be accepted because it means practically the same as the other.

Mr. President, let us not close our eyes to what this proposition means. I say to that board of commissioners in the future, that is to come without political influence, having no interest in the stocks or bonds of common carriers, or anything else so far as I know, and not being pecuniarily interested in them, and not being permitted to engage in any other business or avocation or profession—I say to them that as I understand the long and short haul provision, it applies as it now stands to every single mile of track upon any railroad, no matter where it may be, between the terminal points, and to every pound of freight of like character or quality which may be transported over it. You can not escape from it unless that language meant nothing, and was designed for nothing, and intended for nothing.

That means local rates for every pound of freight carried over these roads. That means the abolition of all this system of cheap long hauls under which, by the benefits of competition, distances have been equalized and the commonwealth has been shrunk up to a span's breadth, so that practically the man who lives in Dakota or in Colorado is placed upon the same footing and condition, so far as the results of his labor are concerned, as the man who lives immediately upon the seaboard. You propose by this measure to abolish all that and to declare that hereafter, so far as we are concerned, every pound of freight that moves upon these railroads shall pay its equal proportionate share of freight money for every mile over which it passes.

I took occasion in a former debate to express my opinions about the effects of this position, and I do not propose to renew them now; but it is a little singular, notwithstanding all that has been said about this proposition, that the result of it, in the opinion of the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Rhode Island, and the Senator from Vermont, is entirely speculative and problematic. No one can tell what the result will be. No one can predict what effect this cast-iron, rigid provision inserted into this proposed statute and affecting the business of this country will have.

Therefore it is that the committee of conference have agreed to the provision of the bill as it originally stood in the Senate text, providing that this section so far as its provisions apply to distant rates may be disregarded by the commission. I suppose that this is the first time in the history of legislation that such power as this was declared, that such a declaration was made that this particular discrimination should be unlawful, that it should be denounced in a legislative enactment, and at the same time that the tribunal which was created to enforce the law should in specific terms be authorized to abrogate, veto, annul, and repeal it.

That is a sufficient answer to all that has been said in behalf of this section. As it now stands, it is absolutely nugatory and must be; and I feel encouraged to vote for the measure as it stands because under the interpretation that must be given to it, if this construction were to be held to be the one intended by the legislature, it would be a revolution. This country could not remain in peace for thirty days under the rigid application of the provisions of the fourth section prior to the proviso. Not a pound of freight, not a bushel of corn or wheat, no beef nor pork that is raised on those great fertile plains beyond the Missouri could be carried east of the Ohio River; its value would be consumed in the price of transportation and would leave the man who raised it without compensation for his labor.

I am satisfied that no such provision as that can ever be carried into effect, and when the section goes on further to provide that upon the application of the commissioners appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may in special cases be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property, the whole thing is given away.

In the first place, the committee themselves confess that the provisions in the first part of the section are untenable; they admit that no such provision could be enforced with safety to commerce or the productive energies of this country; but they have placed it in this bill in obedience to a great public demand for legislation to prevent what we all admit and recognize is unjust, invidious, and untenable—discrimination with regard to the transportation of freight not only in the East but in the West, not only with regard to the long hauls from competing terminal points, but from points in the interior elsewhere.

My attention was called not long since to the situation on one railroad in my own State, where shippers at an intermediate point midway between Kansas City and Denver desiring to send wheat to Denver city, were compelled by the discriminating rates to send their grain at local rates 250 miles back to Kansas City, and ship at through rates from Kansas City to Denver; and they made money by the operation. Is there any justice in that? Is not that a discrimination which ought to be guarded against?

Therefore I say that the reason which prompted, as I suppose, the committee to agree to this extraordinary provision was to guard against such local discriminations as I have mentioned, knowing as they did that the application of these rules to competing terminal points could not be enforced without destruction to the commerce of this country.

I regard the fourth section in its application to local discriminations as valuable. I regard it in its attempt to enforce the long-and-short-haul provision against through freights between great terminal and competing points as absolutely nugatory and ineffectual, and I believe that the commission will so regard it, and that they will in every case, when their attention is called to this clause, rule in favor of the long cheap haul, and not to establish distance short-haul rates.

This bill, as I understand, is one to regulate commerce, not to wreck it, or destroy it, or ruin it. Its purpose is humane and beneficent. It is in the interest of the producers of the country, and I understand that the commission to be created will so administer and interpret this section and so administer and interpret the other sections that may be presented to them for execution as to effectuate justice, and not to work dishonor and ruin to the country.

There has been a suspicious unanimity of assault upon two sections of this bill. It appears to me, or rather I may say that I have a growing suspicion, that the attacks which have been made from all quarters, pamphleteers, leading editors, boards of trade, railroad attorneys, local organs of opinion, against these sections, proceed rather from those who prefer to have no legislation at all, and are convinced that if the proposed bill can be made odious by attacking these two sections that result will be obtained.

We have been regaled with repeated arguments against sections 4 and 5 of the bill. We have been assured that in its general provisions the proposed law is beneficent, that it is intended to cure existing defects, but that it contains provisions which, if enforced, will be fatal to the interests of the country. So we have heard these arguments against sections 4 and 5. The artillery has played upon them, the cavalry have charged upon them, the infantry have fired their volleys at them; Tray, Blanche, and Sweetheart have all barked at them, with the intention, as I believe, of securing as far as possible—I am speaking now of the inundation of information which has been poured upon me, and I suppose upon other Senators outside of this chamber, of printed and written literature—with the purpose, I say, if these two sections can be made to appear especially odious, that legislation upon this subject may be indefinitely procrastinated and postponed.

We have been told that pooling was one of the beneficent operations of the railroad system. The pooling that I understand the fifth section to be directed against is a pooling that has been a criminal conspiracy against society. It has been a pooling that has enabled railroads to continue a career of unrestrained depredation upon the welfare of society. Who has not been familiar with the anthracite-coal pool? Who has not heard of the combination by which the dressed beef of Chicago was to be prevented from reaching the markets of New York? Who has not heard of the Standard Oil combination, by which, through a pooling arrangement between the railroads and these companies, one of the great natural products of the earth has been restrained and confined?

That is the kind of pooling I understand that this section is directed against. It is the kind of pooling by which a bankrupt, spendthrift beggar of a railroad that never ought to have been built, that can not obtain the means of support in the country through which it passes, that is a burden upon the earth, may succeed by cutting rates, as I remember in one case one railroad did from Kansas City to Saint Louis, reducing passenger rates to a dollar, and it continued to carry passengers at that rate until the great, solvent, profitable corporations, in order to protect themselves from that ruinous and mendicant competition, were compelled to admit the road into a pool upon an agreement to divide the receipts for passengers equally between these routes according to their mileage between the two points. One result that I concede will come from that section against pooling, and which I shall be glad to have result from it, will be the abandonment of that process and the relinquishment of the roads which are in that condition to their original elements.

There are thousands of miles of road in this country that never ought to have been built. There are thousands of miles of road running through this country which would be better off if the rails were taken up and sold for old iron, and the ties for cord-wood, and the right of way planted in corn.

This section is a notification to those who are engaged in building parallel lines of road all over this country, particularly in the West, duplicating lines, building unnecessary and superfluous feeders, and, as they call it, invading a hostile territory, it is a notification to them that that process must stop, and it is a matter of importance to the community that it should stop, and that no more roads should be builded than are required either for the present or for the immediately prospective wants of the communities through which they pass.

This section does not prevent beneficent co-operation between railroads in a healthy condition. They have a right to unite for any purpose that they may see fit under the provisions of the bill, but pooling has a distinct meaning and significance. While there may be instances and cases in which pooling may be perhaps not wholly guilty, in the great majority of cases these railroad combinations are made for the express purpose of conspiring with those interested in them and in the other great staples of life to put the thumb-screws on the common people, and increase the price of their bread, and their clothing, and their food, and all the necessaries of life.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And diminish the profits of their products that they want to send away.

Mr. INGALLS. Therefore, so far as these two sections are concerned, while they are not ideally perfect, while I admit that by the confession of the committee itself they are nugatory, at least one of them, and impossible of being carried into effect, so far as the suggestions which have been made about the application to the great-distance hauls from the interior are concerned, the effect upon these minor discriminations both against locality and against the individual direct will be beneficent, and therefore they ought to be supported.

But there are matters in which, in my opinion, the bill is even more fatally defective, if that were possible, than in the particulars to which attention has been called. I regret that I have to vote for it, and I think there are a great many others in the same condition. This is a bill which practically nobody wants and which everybody intends to vote for, a bill which nobody is satisfied with and which everybody intends to accept, a bill which nobody knows what it means and yet we have all agreed it ought to pass.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to one other particular in which I think the bill is open to the greatest criticism, and if it were not for the brief space that will intervene between the time it goes into effect and the reassembling of Congress, if it were not for the great discretionary power confided to the commissioners who are to be selected, I should hesitate what to do. On page 11, lines 44, 45, and 46, I find the following language:

> Reductions in such published rates, fares, or charges may be made without previous public notice.

Mr. President, we have been told about the great injuries that resulted from railroad wars in this country. We have been admonished of the difficulties which resulted from the contest between these corporations for freights and for passengers. We have provided that no increase in rates shall be made without first giving ten days' public notice and posting them up where they can be inspected by the public; and yet, in that same connection we have declared that reductions in published rates, fares, or charges may be made without previous public notice. A more vicious and dangerous provision never was incorporated in a statute

Mr. ALLISON. That was put in by the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. Is the Senator aware that he voted for that provision at the last session?

Mr. INGALLS. And I am going to vote for this; I am going to be entirely consistent. I ask the Senator to possess his soul in patience.

Suppose that there is a great, sudden congestion or accumulation of freights in Chicago which require transportation to the city of New York, to the seaboard. All the rates have been publicly established and due notice given, and the public have adjusted themselves to them, and yet under the provisions of this bill any common carrier in this country has the right instantaneously, without public notice, to go to any one of the great provision or grain dealers or commission or shipping merchants in Chicago and say, "I will take your freight for one-tenth of what it can be taken by any other common carrier running between these two points."

Is that justice, Mr. President? Does that prevent wars between railroad companies for freight or for passengers? Does that prevent the cutting of rates? This bill, to have been logical, to have been just, ought to have provided that the same notice should be given of a reduction in rates and fares as of an increase in rates and fares. I am by no means sure that, inasmuch as a direct temptation is offered to a reduction of rates, the inhibition against a reduction without public notice ought to have been more severe than the inhibition against an increase of rates without due public notice.

I had marked a number of other points upon which I had intended to comment, but as I think I have already given sufficient reasons why I shall support the bill, I will now yield to the motion which I understand is to be made to recommit with instructions.

Mr. SPOONER. I have desired to address the Senate briefly upon one or two propositions contained in the bill, although I realize that the measure was passed after so long a discussion. I presume that the Senator from Illinois who has charge of the bill desires in any event that final action shall be had upon it this evening. Does the Senator from Illinois intend to sit the bill out?

Mr. CULLOM. I shall ask the Senate to do so, as I gave notice yesterday, and as there was unanimous consent that we should.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate, although weary, for a short time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. SPOONER withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, a single word in reply to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] with regard to what is called the Colorado pool. I despair of ever being able to understand the argument which, while admitting that a pool which is an agreement to apportion business is resorted to by the railroads for the purpose of preventing wars between themselves in which rates are cut, maintains that a pool is for the cutting of rates; and therefore I shall not attempt to argue that point. A pool is acknowledged to be a means resorted to by the railroads to prevent ruinous rate wars and illegal competition; and yet Senators stand up here and argue as if a pool was entered into for the purpose of cutting rates.

But I want to say one word in regard to the Colorado pool. Perhaps a week ago I challenged proof that pools had resulted anywhere in maintaining unreasonable rates in this country. That challenge went broadcast over the country, and the only response to it is the Colorado pool. Now I suggest that when all the interstate business of this country done by railroads is done under pooling arrangements, and when the challenge has gone forth to show a single instance where a pool has resulted in the maintenance of unreasonable rates, and we get just one single example, it is not worth while to prohibit all the pools in the country on that account.

If the Colorado pool has done what it is said it has done—I do not know whether it has or not—then clearly it is an illegal pool, and would be held illegal before any court and by any court. But it does not follow that all the other pooling arrangements in the country are illegal, any more than it follows that because a Sunday-school teacher or Sunday-school superintendent sometimes goes wrong, all Sunday-schools ought to be prohibited and abolished; nor any more than it follows that because down in Boston—and I am glad that the Massachusetts Senators are not here, for they might take exception to this illustration—a Baptist clergyman was charged with practices which have scandalized the whole country, and the newspapers of the country have been filled for weeks and months with regard to those scandalous practices, whether true or not, that the Baptist Church and the Baptist ministry should be prohibited.

I can not understand this argument. If the Colorado pool is endeavoring to enforce a bargain between railroad companies for the maintenance of unreasonable freight charges, then that pool is an illegal pool and it ought to be suppressed. But it does not follow, and there is no argument in saying that because there has been somewhere an illegal contract in the country, for the maintenance of which pooling has been resorted to, therefore all pools which are not against public policy, but which, as I showed the other day, sustain public policy and are for the public welfare, should be made criminal.

One thing more with regard to the Colorado pool. There is nothing in this bill that prevents the railroad companies from continuing that agreement and enforcing that agreement, unless it be the clause with regard to reasonable rates; there is nothing in this bill which prevents railroad companies entering into agreements for just such a combination as is denounced; there is nothing in this bill which prevents their agreeing to maintain rates and adopting every means known in their power for the maintenance of rates when this bill is passed except just exactly——

Mr. TELLER. Then why object to it? If it does not interfere with pooling, what is the objection to it?

Mr. PLATT. It does interfere with pooling. I think that I shall never be able to convince Senators who have not understood and will not understand the pooling which is prohibited in the bill as to what it is that is not prohibited in the bill.

Mr. TELLER. If the railroads can do exactly the same thing in another way what is the objection to this provision? I insist that under this law, if enacted, they will never be able to commit the enormities they have committed under the Colorado pool and under hundreds of others in this country.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator says hundreds of others. There is just this one and possibly also the dressed-beef arrangement in Chicago which has been brought to our notice, in which it is claimed that anything wrong was done under pooling arrangements in this country, so far as I have observed.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator if he does not know that this has been the complaint of the people for fifteen years against this system of pooling in the United States, that it has gone up from every trade center. "What about the anthracite pool?" some one says. There are a dozen things that the public thoroughly understand growing out of these pooling operations.

Mr. PLATT. I am glad that some one speaks of the anthracite pool. If gentlemen can not understand the difference between the anthracite pool and an arrangement between railroads for apportioning their business in order to maintain reasonable rates of transportation, then there is no use in attempting to make any argument on the subject.

I admitted over and over again that a combination entered into for the purpose of controlling the product of a particular district, for enhancing the prices of a particular product in a particular market, for the purpose of putting up or putting down the prices of commodities, was against public policy. There is no question about that. The distinction, however, is broad and wide, and admitted by everybody. It is admitted by every one who has spoken here to-day that the worst evil almost, certainly one of the greatest of railroad evils in the country, is ruinous competition, is unstable rates, is cut rates, is a war of rates, and the Senator who has just taken his seat wants to stop them, and the railroad companies resort to this apportionment of business for no other purpose, so long as they keep within the legal purpose of a pool, than to prevent exactly that thing. That is what the pool is for.

All over the country the testimony of shippers and farmers and merchants and business men is that the great difficulty which they have to contend with is that rates are not equal, they are not uniform. One favored shipper has one rate, which makes him rich at the expense of everybody else, and men in business do not know from day to day at what price they can buy or at what price they can sell. That is the result of the competition which is so much lauded on this floor; that is the result of rate wars which are so much lauded on this floor; and the legal pool has no other purpose and no other object and no other result than preventing just that same thing. If under any pooling arrangement something else has been accomplished, if unreasonable rates have been maintained, then true policy would lead us to this: to recognize the pool, to legalize it, to put it under the supervision of these commissioners to see that that which was intended for a proper use should not be abused.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I can not go fully into this debate now, or do more than state one or two propositions that I think I ought to state, more in justice to myself than for any other purpose.

It was stated by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], and also by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], that the attitude which I had taken in regard to this bill makes it necessary that Congress should interfere, or otherwise the country would be left entirely without law to regulate the railroads. In the previous discussion which I indulged in over this bill—I have said very little about it in the months of debate that have ranged through this body on this topic—the Senate, I think, will do me the justice to say that I took the ground that the common law of this country was a sufficient remedy for any trouble that was sought to be remedied by this bill, and that the courts of the United States with their present jurisdiction, and certainly with their jurisdiction broadened, as we have a right to broaden it, so as to include cases of minor consequence, can administer every remedy that is sought to be administered through this bill, either by the courts or by the commission. The Supreme Court of the United States and the courts of the States have now for a century regulated common carriers in the United States, simply by an application of common-law rules to their duties and their obligations, and very little complaint has arisen anywhere out of the inefficiency or insufficiency of the common law, when properly applied by the courts, to remedy any of the difficulties that are sought to be legislated upon and removed by this bill.

Now I will enumerate the points in this bill upon which it is supposed that the statutory action of Congress is necessary, and let us see whether there is a single one of them which is not already within the power of the courts to remedy by proper forms of procedure either at law or in equity. I do not refer to that section of the bill which creates new offenses and makes them punishable in the district and circuit courts of the United States. I refer to the civil remedies and the power of the courts in connection with them. The first one is:

All charges made for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property as aforesaid, or in connection therewith, or for the receiving, delivering, storage, or handling of such property, shall be reasonable and just.

Has not that been the common law of England and of the United States since the first decision that was ever made in respect of common carriers, and is there any court in the United States that has law jurisdiction that is not competent to administer that right and that remedy? I submit that as a lawyer, because when this bill leaves the two Houses of Congress and the hands of the President, if he shall approve it, the first contact it will have will be with the legal profession in the United States, and I should desire very much that the Congress of the United States should go forth with a bill of this novelty and this magnitude and this importance, having given to every feature of it a sufficient consideration to forbid any very sharp criticism on the part of the bar of the United States in its interpretation.

The next point is this:

SEC. 2. That if any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

And so he would be held in any court of law or any court of equity of the United States or of any of the States. That is simply a declaration of an offense, you may call it, of an unjust practice on the part of common carriers, which is denounced by the common law as fully and as firmly as it is in this statute. The statute is a mere cumulative enactment, and almost in the very language of the writers of the common law on this subject. I am not speaking of this matter without advisement, for I can cite cases in the Supreme Court of the United States, and in every State of this Union, which have disposed of the very question that I now present in respect of the exact parallelism between the common law and the declaration of this statute. The next is:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever.

The common law denounced those practices just as severely as it is done in that section, and there is not a court in the United States that would not enforce it.

Again:

Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers and property to and from their several lines and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates and charges between such connecting lines.

Another point in which the common law is all-efficient for the administration of precisely the same declarations that are made in this act.

Mr. ALLISON. Will it disturb the Senator if I make a remark?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. It was stated in the House of Representatives, and has been stated here over and over again, that there is not one prohibition in this bill that is not a prohibition at common law.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good. The next one is—

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers, &c.

That is new and difficult of interpretation, difficult to be understood. The lawyers in this body—and I presume that they average with the highest range of professional ability in the Union—cannot agree about the meaning of section 4; and we venture to go before the country with a new enactment about which there is almost as great a diversity of opinion in this country as the number of Senators who occupy seats on the floor, a statutory regulation of commerce (which of all things else least bears interruption by statutory interference) that the lawyers in this body, many of them ex-judges of supreme courts, are incapable of agreeing upon the interpretation of. I think that is a very unfortunate situation.

I suppose that that section means in one respect what the bill declares in another part of it, that no unreasonable charge shall be made by a common carrier. And after we have declared that no unreasonable charge shall be made by a common carrier, on the converse of the position we may affirm that a common carrier may make a reasonable charge, the statute to the contrary notwithstanding. He may make a reasonable charge, and when you come to draw the comparison between charges made on short hauls and long hauls you must first ascertain what is a reasonable charge, and put those figures down as the sum upon which to compute the result whether or not the other charge is reasonable or unreasonable, whether it is greater or whether it is less.

If the charge on a haul of goods from Alexandria to Washington at 50 cents a barrel for flour is a reasonable charge, and if you ascertain that by ascertaining in the next place how much it would cost a man to send a wagon down there and haul it up here, there being no competing line, if it is a reasonable charge and the courts so hold, then the question whether if a dollar is charged for carrying a barrel of flour to Richmond, which is perhaps twenty times the distance that it is to Alexandria, that is a lawful charge, must depend under your bill upon its being reasonable, for I do not suppose that you intend to legislate that a railroad shall be compelled to take an unreasonable charge for carrying freight because it may have on a part of its line charged less or more than it should have done to some other person.

After all, you have put the test in your bill that no carrier shall charge unreasonably. If he does, it is an act of discrimination, and if he does not, it is no act of discrimination within the meaning of this very statute. After having made that declaration, you go on then to make a special provision about what this man shall do and that man shall do, losing sight absolutely of the reasonableness of the charges he makes, but arbitrarily saying that he can not charge more to one man than he charges to another.

But, Mr. President, I have not taken upon myself, in any stage of this debate with which I have had any connection, the duty of trying to sift out and unravel the different commercial propositions that are involved in this bill and that seem to have taxed the ingenuity of some of the ablest commercial men in the United States who occupy this floor. I will not venture upon that discussion. But there are some things connected with this bill which I think it my duty to bring forward.

I will repeat one of them that I mentioned the other day, in a phrase, and I do it for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that they are in an unnecessary fright about the condition of decisions in the Supreme Court of the United States upon this question, for the Supreme Court have not passed upon any question arising under this bill or any question affecting the commerce of a State and interstate commerce except in cases where State statutes have come up for construction.

Now, can any Senator point to me a case that has arisen and been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in which a State statute has not been the subject-matter of construction and the basis upon which the declaration of its unconstitutionality or its constitutionality has been made? Not one. In the case of Welton vs. The State of Missouri, I beg the Senate to listen to this language of the Supreme Court:

It will not be denied that that portion of commerce with foreign countries and between the States which consists in the transportation and exchange of commodities is of national importance, and admits and requires uniformity of regulation. The very object of investing this power in the General Government was to insure this uniformity against discriminating State legislation.

The object was not to enable Congress, as it proposes to do in this bill, under the pretext of regulating interstate commerce, to go far beyond it and lay down rules and restrictions which either amend or violate or uproot the common law in relation to the personal and private rights that exist between individuals in their freedom to deal with it as American citizens under the guarantees of the Constitution in which those rights are stated.

You go further, you overstep the bounds of the regulation of State commerce, and you take hold of the power to contract, and you say to men, "You shall not contract thus and so," though the common law of England and the United States says that you may, and that the contract is just and right. You trespass beyond the boundaries and invade the States and say to the citizens of the States, "You shall not contract in your own States and in your own corporations for the transportation of your freight beyond your State; we limit you in your power to contract by forbidding the railroad companies to contract with you except upon certain terms that we prescribe." And while you, in your anxiety to meet what is supposed to be a very popular demand, thus transgress the boundaries of your own jurisdiction, you invade some of the most sacred liberties that belong to men under the Constitution of the United States.

I have a perfect right, if I have got 100,000 tons of iron to ship from Birmingham, in Alabama, to Cincinnati or to Chicago, to say to a particular railroad company, "I will give you all my patronage if you give me a rate upon this below the common rate of transportation," and that railroad company has a right to give me that contract, because I am a large contributor to its prosperity. Another comes along with 10 tons of iron and offers to this railroad company that it shall carry his 10 tons at the same rate as the other man's. The company says, "I can not afford to do it." "Why can you not afford to do it?" "Because I am carrying this iron for a man who furnishes me 100,000 tons;" precisely the same principle that would obtain in a mercantile house in New York.

A merchant goes there and says, "I want $100,000 worth of your goods, and I have got the money to pay for them; I want to agree with you about the terms of our contract." "All right; I will deduct a little in your favor." Another man comes and wants to buy $50 worth of goods. The seller says he can not afford to sell at the same rate; it may be a package of goods; he can not afford to do it. Now, will the law of Congress step in there and interfere? No. Why? Because it is a transaction between individuals in a State. Why not interfere? What pretext have you for interfering in a contract between the iron shippers in Birmingham, Ala., and a railroad company? What right have you got to do it? No, sir; this bill goes very far beyond the powers of Congress as contended for by the gentlemen who advocate it, and it is a serious question as to the private right of a man to make a contract according to the advantages of his situation; and every man has a right to make his contract according to the advantages of his situation.

I say, therefore, that the Supreme Court of the United States have never gone beyond that simple declaration, and they affirm it in the decision quoted with approbation in the Wabash Railway Company vs. Illinois:

The very object of investing this power in the General Government was to insure this uniformity against discriminating State legislation.

And I say that is the only object. Whenever you get beyond that object you get out beyond the boundaries of your power, and you in the interpretation of your powers transgress upon the rights of the people of the States which are just as sacred as the rights of the Congress of the United States. I dismiss that subject with that remark.

I trust that I have been able now to answer the statements made by the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Kentucky by stating that I do contend that there is and has been up to this good hour in the United States every power at law and every power of jurisdiction in the courts to enforce it, to protect every man in his rights against a common carrier, so that this spasm of fright or affected fright about the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States had better not get too deep hold upon gentlemen. They had better wait awhile and see whether this court that has so deliberately overruled two of its own decisions will not after awhile find a reason for overruling the last one.

The oscillations of the Supreme Court, its vibrations and fluctuations upon great constitutional questions, are not to be followed in that court, and when the very decision in the Wabash case comes up it may be said, "We certainly could not have known what we were talking about when we made that decision affirming that in the absence of law of the United States the States might go on to act; we could not have considered it." How many lawyers in this body are willing to accept the last legal-tender decision as a final solution of the question? How many gentlemen are there here who would vote for the increase of the legal-tender issues of the United States Government to a thousand million dollars, and put them as a substitute for all the issues we have out, with the legal-tender quality in them, guided by the last decision of the Supreme Court on that subject? Not one; it is dead timber. If there is one he is a bold man, and I have not heard him express it.

Because the Supreme Court of the United States may take a view of the Constitution in a particular case and upon a particular point in which they decide, no matter what the reason, that a certain State statute falls, not beneath an act of Congress, but beneath the Constitution of the United States, I think we can very well rely on that Constitution a while longer to protect us against discriminating State legislation; and when we find in this bill, as the honorable Senator from Iowa says is an acknowledged fact, that every step taken, every wrong condemned, every right asserted, every remedy proposed, are all provided for, amply provided for by the common law, then I think we had better be a little quiet and remain a while longer under the old régime.

I do not find the country going to rack and ruin because it has got railroads in it. I hear clamor about short hauls and long hauls; but the clamor affects men within the States more than anywhere else. Ninety per cent. of the troubles in respect to long hauls and short hauls are within the States, and clearly and confessedly within the power of the State Legislatures to control. Let me say to this honorable Senate that I do not want them to go into Alabama and take from the Legislature of my State the power to regulate the long-and-short-haul business within the limits of that State and the State commerce. You are not invited to enter that State; and if I was the governor of it you would never get there in your efforts to regulate the internal affairs of that State, for when you pass this bill it will be putting a large, dry sponge into a basin with a little water, and it will drink the last drop.

This bill does not mean, the friends of it do not intend it to mean, that it shall stop at the regulation of interstate commerce. It means to usurp the power over all commerce, and it means that when you lift the sponge out of that basin there will not be even moisture left in it, to say nothing of a drop of water. The whole power of commerce in this country, as to its regulation, will be fixed by this tribunal and the other House. When we take this step, Senators around me tell me it is experimental, and they look on it as only an entering-wedge to go further. They will go further, and you will never be able to repeal this law or stop its operation otherwise than by extending its clauses as long as the United States lasts. This will be the last of State regulation of State commerce.

The Supreme Court have declared that the States have the right by statute to fix the rate of charges upon commerce as to the public corporations and public carriers within their limits. As respecting interstate commerce we have therefore the right, and so they have determined, not upon an act of Congress, but incidentally, that we have the right to fix the rates of commerce. You fix the rate upon external or interstate commerce by an act of Congress, so much per ton per mile and no more; and how is the State going to get along with any legislation for the purpose of regulating commerce within the State? The conflict of the laws would necessarily produce friction and wrong and hardship; but when you take the first step in the passage of this bill you will never cease to march upon that line. The last step will never be taken as long as there is any demand from any popular clamor in the country that you shall do something more, and cover steamboats and steamships and all.

I do not flatter myself that I have the slightest financial ability in the world, but I have an imagination in my mind to-night that if I had the money of Mr. Jay Gould and his talents, his enterprise, his ambition to absorb railroads and put them under a single ownership, I would not want any better law to pass than this in regard to pooling. I should want Congress to enact this law so that the blackmailing roads, as they are called, the poor, weak, feeble fellows that have got to build themselves up into prosperity and substantiality, will not have the advantage of cutting rates upon us, or if they do they will soon go by the board. They can not demand of us that we shall enter into pooling arrangements with them; it is forbidden by law, contrary to public policy, and denounced as criminal.

Therefore we will absorb them; we will take them in out of the cold. Thus the railroad ownership of the United States, instead of being distributed among various competitive companies, will be in the hands of two or three of the great capitalists. Then you will see a fight worth while talking about. Then you will see the railroad kings and the Congress of the United States in an antagonism that the conflicts of the bulls and the bears in Wall street will be mere play compared with. This legislation must have that result. You take from the weaker railroad all power that it has got to compel the stronger one to do it justice or to keep the crushing weight of its power off, and you just abandon all such roads as wrecks into the hands of the great railroad kings of the land. That is what Congress is about.

Mr. President, there is one feature of this bill against which I have been always very seriously opposed—I can not get my consent to it—and that is the power that is conferred on this commission. It is a power that is derogatory of the divisions between legislative and judicial powers which have existed in this country and in Great Britain from time immemorial.

That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act.

What shall we call that; a repealing power, a suspending power, a dispensing power, or an amending power? Take it in either category and it is contrary to the principles of the American Constitution and contrary to every tradition which has come down to us from our English ancestors. That very same principle incorporated in this bill has led to some of the grossest outrages in the history of English jurisprudence and legislation. The Star Chamber itself had its origin in that very principle.

What was the principle? It was that the king by his proclamation might make law. Parliament gave to King Henry VIII the power by his proclamation to make laws, and the pretext upon which that demand was conceded to the king was that in the north of England there were certain eminent and powerful barons who were in the habit of settling their difficulties among themselves without consulting the crown, and they and their retainers were engaged in constant feuds, and it was impossible to control those powerful and splendid people otherwise than by making legislation to suit each case as each case arose. Hence the Parliament gave to the king the power by proclamation to enact laws. He and his councilors combined together, became not merely the enactors of the laws, but the judges to administer them and to execute them, and that constituted the Star Chamber. Here is the history of it:

The celebrated statute of 31 Henry the Eighth, chapter 8, which gives the king's proclamation, to a certain extent, the force of acts of Parliament, enacts that offenders convicted of breaking such proclamations before certain persons enumerated therein (being apparently the usual officers of the privy council, together with some bishops and judges), "in the Star-Chamber or elsewhere," shall suffer such penalties of fine and imprisonment as they shall adjudge. "It is the effect of this court," Judge Smith says, "to bridle such stout noblemen or gentlemen"—

He ought to have said railroad companies—which would offer wrong by force to any manner of men, and cannot be content to demand or defend the right by order of the law. It began long before, but took augmentation and authority at that time that Cardinal Wolsey, archbishop of York, was chancellor of England, who of some was thought to have first devised that court, because that he, after some intermission, by negligence of time, augmented the authority of it, which was at that time marvelous necessary to do to repress the insolency of the noblemen and gentlemen in the north parts of England, who being far from the king and the seat of justice, made almost, as it were, an ordinary war among themselves, and made their force their law, binding themselves, with their tenants and servants, to do or revenge an injury one against another as they listed.

There is a history of the reasons which gave rise to it repeated in this debate continually, that the railroad companies have got to be so strong and so powerful that we can not handle them by statutes that we may enact by Congress and make final in our enactment, but we must interpose a commission with powers of dispensation in order that the harshness of our legislation, which we admit by the very principle in the bill, may be mitigated in certain cases which the commissioners are to decide after they have investigated the whole subject.

We confess here, this night, our inability to devise a just law regulating long and short hauls and other matters connected with this business. We admit our incapacity to do it, and substitute five men with legislative power, either to amend, or suspend, or repeal, or dispense with—choose your own word—the statutes that we enact.

Let us see how that appears in the light of the history of British constitutional law. I read from Dwarris on Statutes, pages 38 and 39:

So long as the king continued to grant petitions in part, and to engraft new matter upon them (it must be admitted in candor, and as some extenuation of the conduct of the judges), it would be extremely difficult, at a distance of time from the petition and answer, to draw up statutes which should be the acts of the whole legislature. But when bills were brought into either House of Parliament—

Under our system that we proceed on here, by bills—in a perfect shape, containing the royal assent and the whole form of a law, which the king had no power to modify, but could only reject, it became manifest, if such bills passed into a law, that they derived their entire efficacy from the joint concurrence of the three branches of the legislature.

The King, the Lords, and the Commons. The King is mentioned as an enactor in every bill that passes the Parliament.

This sound constitutional doctrine was happily established in England, about two centuries ago, owing to the firmness of a chief-justice (Lord Coke); while in France to this day it is not, it is said, with exactness defined what may be done by royal ordonnance, and what can only be done by an act of the legislature. Here, it is ascertained that the King's province is simply to reject or to approve. The power of legislation given by two statutes to Henry VIII was a direct infraction of the constitution effected under the Tudors, but which had never been at all endured in the time of the Plantagenets. A royal proclamation never properly possessed any efficacy to create but only to promulgate or enforce a law. Under the Stuarts, indeed, this, with every other free principle, was again brought into question, and for a time trembled in the balance, but right prevailed.

The victory of the Commons was, by this change, complete. Their power, as an integral and indispensable part of the legislature, which they had been long laboring to establish, was now firmly consolidated, and they were effectually secured against any future violation of their legislative rights.

There were two statutes of Parliament, which was said to be omnipotent, conferring upon Henry VIII the power to enact laws by proclamation, and here are the English writers declaring that that was unconstitutional under the British constitution. If so under that constitution, how can it be justified under the liberal and exact system of Constitutional law under which we live? England has no written constitution; the United States has.

Now, let us examine in view of that what is the real nature of this power. After investigation by the commission a railroad may be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for transportation, &c. It shall be unlawful, says the first clause in the bill, for the common carrier subject, &c., to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers, &c. There is a denunciation of illegality in the act which makes it criminal and which, under the application of the powers of the common law and its doctrines to a question of the violation of the statute, would subject men to punishment. A conspiracy to violate the statute would be a punishable offense at common law.

But it is declared to be unlawful in the first clause of the act, and being unlawful to do this thing the commissioners after investigation may do what? Pardon a man? Condone the offense? No. Repeal the law? In effect, yes. Suspend it? Certainly. Dispense with it? Yes. Amend it? Most unquestionably. Why? Because from time to time they can prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this act. There is the amendment of it. From time to time they may prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier can be relieved from the operation of this act—not that he shall be relieved entirely, not that the law shall be suspended entirely or repealed or dispensed with, but amended in its application to a particular individual by the commission, who may prescribe the extent to which he shall be relieved. That is all of it.

If there is any virtue in constitutional principles in the United States that feature of this bill is unconstitutional, and unconstitutional for the reason that I have stated and for another reason. Suppose you assume, as may be assumed I grant you, that these commissioners are judicial officers—that they are passing judgment upon a case brought to their attention in due form upon petition, and that they are acting as judicial officers to excuse the party upon a trial from all liability for the act, saying that the equitable circumstances that surround the situation are such as to enable the court to decide that the harsh rule of law that his conduct was unlawful shall not bring punishment or damage upon him.

It is a court, then; a court of equity. But can you make a court with power to finally decide upon a man's criminality or the lawfulness or unlawfulness of his acts which result in damage to other people, as is alleged in this bill, or which bring penalties upon himself without bringing that act within the jurisdiction which is conferred in our Constitution upon a judicial establishment whose judges are chosen for life or good behavior by the President and confirmed by the Senate?

No, sir, not merely is there the blending in this of the legislative and judicial function in the hands of the same parties, but the executive function is also trampled on. The bill transgresses that universal law which I trust still has a solemn sanction in the heart of every Senator on this floor, that the great division of the departments of this Government shall not be violated by any of them. It violates the law; it does it flagrantly and openly. Whenever you strike a court with this part of your proposed law you will find that it will go to pot. The courts of this country are not going to submit that Congress shall thus blend the jurisdiction of these departments for the sake of a convenience to get out of a necessity which is incumbent upon us as conscientious men, to enact laws that can be enforced against the people justly and equitably, and substitute men to make legislation, or to suspend or dispense with our laws, or amend or repeal them, because we are afraid to say to the country that this rule which we enact is a rule that ought not justly to be applied to the people.

There is another feature of this bill just as bad as that in regard to these commissioners, or I believe it is a little worse. Section 14 provides:

That whenever an investigation shall be made by said commission, it shall be its duty to make a report in writing in respect thereto—

This is an investigation of a complaint made by a citizen against a railroad company—which shall include the findings of fact upon which the conclusions of the commission are based, together with its recommendation as to what reparation, if any, should be made by the common carrier to any party or parties who may be found to have been injured; and such findings so made shall thereafter, in all judicial proceedings, be deemed prima facie evidence as to each and every fact found.

Here is a court proceeding ex parte, the defendant not summoned at all, no witnesses, no pleadings, no issue made up, which proceeds in its own way to examine witnesses of its own choice, and upon them to find facts, which facts are to be reported to a court, and in that court are to consider this prima facie evidence. Did the honorable Senator who drew this bill imagine that because he put the words "prima facie" in there he mitigated or modified the force of the transgression of the law which requires that juries shall try facts and courts shall pronounce the law upon them?

Prima facie evidence is enough to hang a man. You can hang a man on a presumption, although there may not have been one particle of criminality in his act. You can hang him on a presumption of law from the rashness of his act, as if I should turn loose a cannon down Pennsylvania avenue and kill a baby away out of sight down by the Treasury building. You would hang me for it because of the rashness of my act. There would be no intendment at all, but you would hang me upon a presumption, and that presumption would be fortified by the reckless and inhuman character of my act.

That is all of it; my life would be the forfeit. It is "prima facie evidence," for the expression "prima facie evidence" when applied to facts is precisely the same thing as a presumption when applied by the law. The prima facie view required by a statute to be taken by a court of the facts found in a case is enough upon which to found its judgment, and the defendant in that case, unless he can come and rebut it and overturn it, must necessarily lose.

Here go these commissioners in secret conclave, a little Star-chamber. They examine their witnesses on a complaint made. The defendant is not notified. They make up a statement of the testimony. They do not refer it to a court above to ascertain whether the conclusions which they have arrived at as to the facts found are justified by the facts themselves. No, the law comes in and says your conclusion, it makes no difference how unjust it may be, shall establish a prima facie case against the defendant.

You have gone a long way with your case when you get the man into your court for the first time. He is confronted with evidence, not with evidence merely, but with evidence of a conclusive character. He is confronted, according to the language of the proposed statute, with facts absolutely found which make out a case against him. They ask him, "What have you to say to this case?" He might say, "I should like to have cross-examined the witnesses if I had had the opportunity. I should like to have been confronted with the witnesses who testified this way against me. Who are they?" "It makes no difference to you." "What sort of people are they?" "It makes no difference to you. It is too late for you to impeach them. It is too late for you to question them, to cross-examine them; we have examined them to our satisfaction, and we have found the facts; here they are, and here is the finding. Go to trial."

If any American, in the light of our Constitution, can put a man, with his rights or interests, upon trial under a statute like that, then I must confess I have under-estimated the pliancy of the American Constitution and the guarantee of the rights contained in that instrument when it comes to be antagonized to a popular clamor. Do not let us go before the country with that sort of a law.

This bill needs revision; in this particular it needs it. It ought to go back to the committee of conference, and they ought to devote two months of their time out of the Senate, if it is necessary for us to excuse them so long, rather than to compel us to go before the country with a bill like that.

There is no occasion for this haste. Let them go and frame a bill and bring it in here which ought to be presented to the country. Let them, out of this admixture of conflicting and controversial systems, find something that is not a compromise between committees, a compromise between clamor and the railroads, and a compromise between justice and the Constitution on the one hand and the desire to be aggressive and vindictive on the other. Let them bring in a bill that is worthy the Senate of the United States, and they will find plenty of men here to support them, but let us not be in haste; there is too much dependent on this bill.

The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] referred to the inconvenience of practice under this bill, and the impossibility of executing it. It goes into effect in sixty days. It comes upon the country almost as suddenly, and I fear with as great a shock, as the earthquake which shook Charleston into ruins.

These commissioners, upon the petition and application of persons in different parts of the United States, are to hear all these complaints as well as to regulate the matter of long and short hauls. Every day that elapses after sixty days from the passage of the bill brings men beneath the influence of criminal responsibility, heavy fines and forfeitures, which the commission whenever it can get to the cases would find itself in conscience bound to relieve if it had the power to relieve them, by saying, "We would never, if we had had time, have applied this law to you. It is unreasonable, and in the exercise of our discretion we would not have done it." There is the damage done; there the penalty is incurred. No man can release them, and we rush the country into a new and entirely unanticipated state of the law, and leave them to foot the bills, the damages, and criminal prosecutions as best they may.

This commission of five men is required to sit here in Washington, and it may go out to other parts of the United States. Where will it go? Suppose it goes to Alabama, must a man who lives up in the hills of Franklin County remain under the heel of the railroads until he can get money enough to travel to Montgomery and present his petition to the commission in Montgomery before he can get any relief?

It goes to every capital in the United States and hears the complaints of those men who have most convenient access to them—a few of them, because it can not hear many—but the men who are out in the country and who have been the real sufferers; the men who are plowing the land to make the corn and wheat and oats for transportation from their soil, can not have the remedy because they can not get to the commission.

Five commissioners to hear a hundred thousand cases! Then about the expense of it; there are $100,000 appropriated here. The commission has the right to subpœna witnesses. From where? Anywhere, everywhere; and if a witness fails to attend it can take the matter into the circuit court, and the circuit court can punish him for contempt and impose upon him a tremendous fine.

You can bring a witness from Washington Territory to Washington city to give testimony before the commission, and the Government of the United States has to pay his expenses here and back and his fees for every day's service. The bill permits them to reach out with their process of subpœna without any restriction in the world and bring witnesses from all parts of the country and in any numbers that the commissioners or the interested parties may choose to send in. It is simply horrible. The honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] would not get done making his calculations for the appropriations necessary for the pay of these witnesses until he is too old to be President of the United States, and that would be a calamity. [Laughter.]

The bill is crude; it is ill-jointed; it is not properly guarded. It is a bill filled with passion, energy, and vigor, but it is not the sort of legislation that I wish to participate in in this body.

The Senator from Vermont in a pathetic way called attention to another provision of the bill which I wish the Senate to consider for just one moment. It is in section 13:

> That any person, firm, corporation, or association, or any mercantile, agricultural, or manufacturing society, or any body-politic or municipal organization complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act in contravention of the provisions thereof, may apply to said commission by petition, which shall briefly state the facts, whereupon a statement of the damages thus made shall be forwarded by the commission to such common carrier, who shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable time, to be specified by the commission. If such common carrier, within the time specified, shall make reparation for the injury alleged to have been done, said carrier shall be relieved of liability to the complainant only for the particular violation of law thus complained of. If such carrier shall not satisfy the complaint within the time specified, or there shall appear to be any reasonable ground for investigating said complaint, it shall be the duty of the commission to investigate the matters complained of in such manner and by such means as it shall deem proper.

He must be still proceeded with notwithstanding what the commission has prescribed against him is satisfactory to the party complaining. If the commission thinks he still needs investigation he must be investigated. For what? To make a moral point on him; to convince the world that he is a bad common carrier, a bad man, to damage his reputation, to hurt his feelings, to pull him and haul him about at the will of his five judges, and yet there is no verdict to be rendered by the commission.

Did anybody ever hear of such powers being conferred upon a court even, when after the court had pronounced judgment as to what ought to be done and the man had come in and paid the money, it said to the defendant, "Stay here; we want to investigate you; we have not done with you; you are such an opprobrious character, and you are likely to be so dangerous to the community that we want to put you under some sort of peace bonds about your debts and contracts and engagements?"

Mr. President, if we are dealing with American citizens let us deal with them as such if they do happen to be owners or managers of corporations. I do not find that it is a crime for a man to be the owner or manager of a corporation, and I do not think there is any reason in that why he should be denounced and proceeded with in this manner. But here comes the point:

> No complaint shall at any time be dismissed because of the absence of direct damage to the complainant.

A common informer who has no interest whatever in the matter is invited by the bill to go in before these commissioners. No damage has been done to him. "Direct damage," the section says. Of course that means damage by which he has suffered. He is a moiety man. He is the man to whom the court can award the $500 penalty under the bill, and stimulated by his chances in that lottery he goes and makes his complaint against the railroad company, and if the railroad company is cast in that complaint the Government of the United States has to pay the costs and the attorney's fee also. That is what the proposed statute provides. If the complainant is cast he pays nothing; so that the only chance in the world for him and his attorney to make anything by the operation of the law is to hunt up a case that will probably stick, and put it before the commission.

Mr. President, I do not care what may be the power, or the justice, or the serenity, or the composure of this commission, they will be overreached and the country will be defrauded. We have seen in the joint conventions between Governments how when the Government itself was supposed to be the actor in the case private interests and private gain found access to the court and the commissions have been crowded to the wall, and injustice sometimes has been done of a character to blacken the very temples in which the decree was rendered.

Give to your commissioners, if you please, the most upright of all human attributes in the administration of justice, and yet they are beset on all hands by men tempted under the bill by a bribe of $500 damages to come in and hunt up a case in which they have no interest involved. The idea of exposing the corporations of this country or the carriers of this country to a set of men who have no other interest in the world in the matter than to levy blackmail and to profit by it is something that I can not vote for. I can not stand it. That is the measure, and you propose to enact it into a law. I say do not. Send it back and let us see if we can not get rid of these features. Do not let us put that provision in. Never let us say that to a man we invite in as a common informer against honorable men and against railroads whose stock is owned throughout the length and breadth of the land by people of all conditions. We should not invite men to appear against this class of citizens, merely because they happen to be railroad owners or capitalists, to levy blackmail upon them.

There is one other feature. I suppose the commissioners are to be sworn, because they are officers of the Government of the United States. What oath do they take? The oath that is common to all officers of the Government of the United States—that they will support the Constitution of the United States, and obey the laws; that is all. They are not sworn, like judges, to render justice impartially between men, without respect to their poverty or their wealth. That is the substance of it.

I will suppose they are sworn, what penalties do you put upon the commissioners in the event that they do not do their duty? Suppose that one or more of them is corrupt, you have the general law perhaps to proceed against a man who accepts a bribe, but suppose he is politically corrupt in his office, and you bring in the political element, because you say in the bill that the commission shall consist of men not more than three of whom shall belong to the same political party; how do you punish these men? They can not be impeached, they are not impeachable officers; they are removable, says the bill, at the will of the President of the United States.

I have heard of Presidents with whom I would not trust that powers I do not say that I would not trust that power in the hands of Mr. Cleveland, for I think he is a very honest man, but it is a dangerou. power to put into the hands of any man. He can appoint three commissioners of his own political party, and then the responsibility of those commissioners is directly on him. The responsibility is not with the Senate on impeachment; it is not with a grand jury on a question of fraud in the administration of their offices. By this bill their responsibility is made directly to the President, and not the responsibility merely, but all that they do. The President is the man who acts through them, and they are responsible to him, and he removes them if they do not suit him.

Suppose he wanted to be re-elected President of the United States and he should say "Here is a doubtful State;" it may be Indiana; "I wish you would just arrange to find sufficient reasons why this law ought to be let up on that railroad company out there. They have a great many employés. It is a very powerful organization. There need not be anything said about it; there is no crime about it. It is a mere piece of political strategy. Could you not afford just quietly to let up on that Indiana railroad company and let its competitor running north and south through Illinois, which is a dead-certain Republican State, feel all the force of the law?" Why not? This thing will probably never be done; but how have we provided that it shall not be done? That is the question. What safeguards are we putting in the way of a temptation of this kind, which to my mind it seems at least is one of the greatest that could be set?

Mr. President, it will not do to put this sort of power of the administration of private rights into the hands of any five men in the United States, and then leave the question of their remaining in office, and continuing to do things that they want to do in the hands of one man, and he the President of the United States. It is autocratic and oligarchic power, a power that American statesmen ought never to trust in the hands of any man in the world. These commissions ought to be held amenable to direct statutes framed with reference to their powers, and to keep them in control whereby they shall answer to the grand juries of the country, and be locked up in the penitentiaries if they abuse the trust confided to them.

That is all I have to say about this pending measure.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I feel that I ought to say something in reference to this bill before the vote is taken. I believe no other Senator has indicated a desire to speak. I have great reluctance to saying anything on the subject myself at this late hour in the night, and I promise the Senate that I shall detain them but a very few minutes, and will then allow the vote to be taken.

I have been sitting here to-day listening to assaults upon this bill until I have almost become convinced that I am the most vicious man toward the railroads of any man I know. I started in upon the investigation of this subject two or three years ago with no prejudices, no bias of sentiment or judgment, no disposition whatever to do anything except that which my deliberate judgment told me was the best thing to do. I have believed I occupied that position ever since until within the last twenty-four hours, when the attacks upon this bill have been such that I have become a little doubtful whether I have not been inspired from the beginning, so far as my action has been concerned, with a determination to destroy the railroads of this country. To listen to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] descanting upon the provisions of the bill, one can scarcely resist the conclusion that it is a bill to destroy the commerce of the country, and especially to break down all the railroads.

So far as I am concerned, I repeat I have had no disposition of that kind, and I am unaware that either of the Senators upon the conference committee with me has had any such disposition. We tried to do the best we could with the bill that the Senate passed during the last session, to keep the bill as near to what the Senate had it as we could do, and to arrive at an agreement between the House and the Senate conferees.

I submit that the majority of the assaults on the bill now under consideration have been against provisions that were in the bill when the Senate voted for it during the last session of Congress. I am of the opinion that if this discussion lasted another day Senators would find in every line of the bill a very serious objection to its adoption. They started in by objecting to some portions of the fourth and fifth sections. The Senator who has just concluded his remarks got over to the thirteenth section, and I believe went one or two sections beyond that, and if there were any more speeches to be made against the bill I suppose the very last section of it would be attacked before a vote was taken.

The Senate conferees regarded it as their duty to cling to every portion of the Senate bill as it was passed that they could cling to and reach an agreement between the conferees of the House and the Senate. Hence it was that all those portions of the Senate bill not objected to by the House conferees were allowed to remain in the bill by the Senate conferees, the Senate conferees, as a matter of course, believing that the Senate of the United States knew what it was doing when it voted for the bill in the first place, and thinking that it would remain of the same mind still.

The attacks upon the fourth section have not been based so much upon the changes the conference committee made in that section as upon the language which was placed there by the Senate of the United States by its vote; and yet the conferees of the Senate have been regarded as at fault, to say the least, because they did not strike out the words which the Senate had put in.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] assaults the bill because he says that under it the provisions are so rigid that the railroads of the country can not do business at all. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] assaults the bill because, he says, the fourth section amounts to nothing, and that the words "under like circumstances and conditions" ought to be taken out.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] assaults the bill because, he says, it is going to interfere with foreign commerce, and that the fourth section will be construed as not allowing a rebate of 5 cents a hundred upon commerce shipped across the country for exportation. So he thinks the bill ought not to be agreed to, while, except as to the words "from the same original point of departure" and "the same point of arrival," the section is substantially just the same as it was when it passed the Senate before.

So I might go on referring to every Senator who has spoken against the bill, and nearly every one of them has founded his objections to the bill upon the use of language that he had previously voted for in the Senate of the United States before the bill went to the conference committee at all.

I shall detain the Senate only a few moments, but I desire to reiterate what I uttered upon the subject before, confining myself to the short-haul provision which is contained in the fourth section of the bill. The Senator from Massachusetts and others have arraigned me as having placed a construction upon the bill different from the other conferees on the part of the Senate as to the question whether in a line made up of a number of roads the proportion that one road was to get was a criterion by which it should be governed in the charges over its own road according to the published rates made out by the road itself.

In other words, as I said before, taking the Albany and Boston road as an illustration, it may take freight from Kansas City, from Chicago, from Detroit, or from any other point coming in on different lines, and the rate per cent. that it gets of that through traffic has no control whatever over the charges that it sees proper to make over its own line and over the freight that it gets along its line. The conferees on the part of the Senate agree with me in that proposition, and when you agree that that is the right construction to be placed upon the bill, then I say that all this long-haul business that goes from west to east or from east to west is not seriously affected by the provisions of the fourth section.

The Senator from Massachusetts has been apparently disposed to kill the bill by taking depositions of different parties over the country and of the conferees on the part of the House. I submit that the answer by Judge CRISP to the questions put to him by the Senator from Massachusetts is not conclusive upon the point that we have been insisting upon. Judge CRISP does not say in any line or word employed by him that the construction placed upon that provision by the Senate conferees is different from what we have stated upon this floor. The only thing that that conferee says in reference to it about which there might be any difference is simply as to the meaning of the words "under like conditions and circumstances."

I have not said that upon any given statement of facts as put to me by any member of the Senate the bill meant one thing or the other; but I have said, and I submit that any candid man must agree with me, that in the construction of the proposed statute, in the application to the transportation of freight from one part of the country to another, where the words "under like circumstances and conditions" are used, they must be considered as an element in determining whether a shipment of freight from one point is to be governed by the same rule that governs it as to charges from another point. That is all I have contended for. Judge CRISP expressed the opinion on the state of facts put by the Senator from Massachusetts to him, that the circumstances under the bill, as he construed it, would be the same. We might differ upon that point or we might not, but it is no ground for declaring that the conference committee, either on the part of the Senate or the House, disagree as to the meaning of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. President, I do not believe that I ought to talk about this measure any longer, because I know every Senator wants to vote, and I suppose if I talked here two hours what I might say would not change a vote in the Senate.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to satisfy my own mind before voting on the bill. Suppose a merchant in New York, a grain shipper, orders, as is frequently done, two or three million bushels of wheat, taking advantage of the markets of Europe and watching closely the shipments from the Black Sea and other ports, and also the Indian market. He finds that he can make 2 or 3 cents a bushel by the shipment of a large lot of wheat. He will order from Duluth half a million bushels, from Milwaukee half a million bushels, from Chicago half a million bushels, from Saint Louis half a million bushels, dividing his order. If the wheat is shipped by car-loads under similar circumstances in every particular, even under the same ownership and at the same time, and it may all arrive at Buffalo or at a point on the Pennsylvania Railroad, the pro rata on one shipment allowed to the trunk lines, taking the New York Central Central, for instance, going to Boston, but going through New York, that coming from Duluth may come at 10 cents a hundred; that coming from Milwaukee may come at 9; that coming from Chicago, being the greatest point of competition, may come at 8, and from Saint Louis may come at 9 or 10.

All this being similar freight, under like circumstances, by the same ownership, in car-loads arriving at the trunk-line point at the same time, the company having accepted the lowest rate—that is, where the greatest competition is, say at Chicago—can that railroad company take any more for any of the freight that comes off the other lines for the same party?

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator's question is pretty long. I have asserted the proposition that a proper construction of the bill gives to railroads the right to make combinations or arrangements for a continuous shipment. One railroad makes its own tariff rate, another railroad makes its, and the third makes its tariff of rates, and each one of those roads, so far as its own business is concerned, is to be governed by that tariff of rates.

But here come two roads, or four roads, converging into one, if you please. It is the very same illustration that I gave the other day. One line is composed of roads from Kansas City to Boston by way of Albany; another line is composed of the roads from Chicago to Boston by way of Albany; a third line is composed of a railroad or railroads from Detroit to Boston by way of Albany, and so you may go on. I assert that the rate of one of those lines beginning at Kansas City, if you please, and running to Boston, has nothing to do with the rate of the road that begins at Chicago and goes to Boston, or from Detroit and goes to Boston. In other words, those continuous routes make their own arrangements, just what they please, so far as any other road is concerned, and they are bound thereby, but the other roads are not. So in a shipment from Kansas City to Albany and to Boston, if the Albany and Boston road only got 2 cents for carrying it from Albany to Boston it would not interfere with its right to get 5 cents on the line carrying it from Chicago to Boston by way of Albany, or whatever other sum it might arrange with the other roads.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator evades the direct question.

Mr. CULLOM. I think not.

Mr. SEWELL. My point was the same ownership, the same individual making all these shipments, and the shipments converging on the same line.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator mean the same ownership of property; the same freight?

Mr. SEWELL. Yes, sir; I mean that a commission merchant in New York will order two or three million bushels from different points, and that freight will converge from different lines. I say under the restriction of this bill that, having accepted the lowest pro rata rate on that portion of the line, the company is restricted from taking a higher rate, although the pro rata would allow it.

Mr. CULLOM. I contend exactly the contrary in my view of the construction of the section. I imagine that any other construction of it would bring upon the railroads and upon the country great confusion. It does not make any difference what the railroad from Chicago to Boston charges if it is one line, or what the railroad from Kansas City to Boston charges if it makes another continuous line. I repeat that the per cent. the railroad gets from Albany to Boston on the shipment from Chicago to Boston has nothing to do with the per cent. that it gets on the line from Kansas City to Boston.

That is the whole case. So the argument of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] with his chart amounts to nothing if my construction and the construction of the conferees on the part of the Senate is to be taken as the correct view of the bill. That is what I contend for, and you can not put any other construction upon it consistent with the business of the country and with the language of the bill itself.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is very much exercised on account of the extraordinary powers that are given by the bill and on account of the difference of opinion which seems to prevail in the Senate as to the meaning of the language of the fourth section and other portions of the bill. He says that the Supreme Court oscillates in its opinions upon statutes from year to year. That is true; there is no doubt about it. So if the Supreme Court of the United States has one opinion one year and possibly modifies it another, it is not surprising that any language which may be incorporated in any bill brought in here upon this subject will be differently construed by different Senators upon this floor.

I undertake to say that there are not three men in the Senate who can draught a provision into this bill incorporating the ideas of the fourth section, or upon the short-haul question at all, that will be construed alike by every member of the Senate. I defy any one to do it. We have never supposed until to-day that any man on earth could misconstrue the language when it says that you shall not charge more in the aggregate for the short haul than for the long haul on the same line and going in the same direction, and yet the Senator from Georgia comes in here with a telegraphic account of a decision in North Carolina, which says that those words which everybody here, I think, agreed meant in the aggregate, and not a pro rate per mile per ton, do not even mean what we have all understood them to mean before.

So you see that you may use the plainest language that can be written and yet courts as well as Senators may differ as to the construction of the language when it comes to be applied to the transportation of the country. It is a pretty difficult thing. I have done my best in trying to get something that the country could understand, and at the same time do something that would benefit the people of this country, but I begin to think that I have made an utter failure in getting anything at all that any one ever can understand to mean what I supposed it meant.

The Senator from Alabama refers to the extraordinary powers of the commission, to the fact that the testimony taken by the commission is to be prima facie evidence of the truthfulness of the testimony in a court of record. This is not extraordinary. Take some of the State laws of the country to-day. Take the State of Illinois, for instance. The commission of the State of Illinois makes out a freight bill and publishes it. It becomes the law until it is overturned by proof produced by a transportation company that the rates which are fixed in the freight bill are not reasonable and just.

The provision making the testimony taken by the commission as to the conduct of a common carrier prima facie evidence is based on the fact that, as we all know, the railroads have locked up within their own control and their own knowledge all the facts which operate on them in making any given rate, and there is no way to get at the facts except by throwing the onus of proof upon them that the rates which they charge are reasonable and not unreasonable and unjust. Is there anything wrong in that?

While I am talking about that I desire to say that one of the ablest railroad commissions in the United States is the railroad commission in New York. The chairman of that commission, Mr. Kernan, a very able lawyer and a very able commissioner, insisted before the select committee of the Senate that unless we did something of that sort the railroads would beat the people every time in a controversy between the railroads and the individual shipper as to whether the rate was reasonable and just or not.

So we incorporated that provision in the bill, but there has been no disposition on the part of the Senate committee, in the first place, or on the part of the conferees, in the second place, to insert any undue provision in the bill that was going to do a great injury to the corporations of the country. That provision, too, was in the bill reported by the select committee of the Senate, discussed here for a month or two during the last session of Congress, and voted in by the Senate of the United States; and yet the conferees of the Senate are berated to-day because there is such a provision in the bill, and that, too, it is said, has come from the conference committee.

The trouble about this whole thing, Mr. President, is in the fact that hardly anybody believed there was going to be an interstate-commerce bill passed by this Congress until the conference committee reported. When I say hardly anybody, I refer to the men who did not believe in any legislation at all that should interfere with the freedom of the railroad companies of the country in doing and charging what they pleased without any power on the part of the people to prevent it.

But when they are met by a conference report, agreed to by the conferees of the two Houses, and it simply becomes a question whether the Senate will adopt the conference report, knowing that when it does in all probability very soon thereafter the bill will become a law, then the men interested on the other side of this question rally to the support of the transportation companies, and they find all manner of difficulties with the bill which has been brought into the Senate.

Sir, it has just come to the point when you have got to face the music and vote for an interstate-commerce bill or vote it down. That is all there is of it. I have nothing more to say. I have discharged my duty as best I know how. I reported on the part of the Senate conferees the bill that is before you. I am not responsible for what the Senate does with it. I am not going to find fault with anybody in the Senate upon the question, whether we concur in the report or reject it, but I warn Senators that the people of the United States for the last ten years have been struggling to assert the principle that the Government of the United States has the power to regulate transportation from one end of this country to the other.

We are now just at the point whether we will decide it or whether we will set the question afloat again for another Congress that comes in after the 4th of March. I am not going to say that I know if the report is not concurred in we shall get no legislation. I shall not say that, but I am going to say that I in my heart believe that it is very doubtful, to say the least, whether, if the report is defeated, we shall get any legislation during the present Congress. So when the Senate acts upon the question my duty will have been done so far as I am able to see it.

I confess that there are provisions in this bill which I do not like. I would have preferred the bill that I, as chairman of the select committee, reported to the Senate. I would have preferred the bill the Senate passed during the last session. I went into the conference committee hoping and struggling to get the bill, pure and simple, that we had passed in the Senate during the last session of Congress. But I could not get it. I understand that if a conferee can not get all that he wants, and all that the body he represents asks for, in a case of vital importance, it is his duty to do the best he can under all the circumstances, and agree, if he can afford to do it consistent with his sense of public duty.

That we did, and we have submitted this report. As I said before, it is for the Senate now to discharge its duty and vote for it or vote against it, as it sees proper. If it shall vote the conference report down, I shall hope that we may get something better in the place of it, and if I had anything to do with the next effort, I should do the very best I could to get a bill more in harmony with my own sense of what is right as well as with the expressions made by Senators in the discussions upon this bill.

But I repeat, every Senator must take his own responsibility in making up his mind, and in the light of the uncertainty of getting any legislation and thereby letting it go out to the country that the railroads are still masters of the situation, you must vote as your judgments may dictate.

I have believed from the time I have given any attention to public affairs that it was necessary to bring into force the provision of the Constitution giving Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] attacked the bill and said that it was unconstitutional, because, as I understood him, the Constitution was framed on that subject for the purpose of facilitating commerce, and that this was a bill to hinder or to militate against it.

I undertake to say that the purpose of the bill, at least whatever may be the strained construction which has been placed upon it or which may be placed upon it by the transportation companies of the country, has been to facilitate commerce and to protect the individual rights of the people as against the great railroad corporations. I have no disposition to do the railroads of the country any harm. I have no disposition to interfere with their legitimate business. I have no disposition, God knows, to interfere with the commerce of the country, properly conducted. But I do say that it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to place upon the statute-book some legislation which will look to the regulation of commerce upon the railroads so that they will not treat one man differently under similar conditions and circumstances from another.

It has been said over and over again here that the railroad companies would build up one man and crush another; that their policy has been to destroy one locality or city and build up another. Here we have undertaken to so regulate them as to prevent them from doing those things so far as we could do so.

The Senator from Massachusetts has arrayed a great number of witnesses against this bill from his own city and from other places. While he was making his speech I received a dispatch from a man by the name of Edward Kemble. While I do not now personally remember exactly the individual business in which he is engaged, I do remember that the Senator himself gave me his name before we went to his city to take testimony as one of the men who would be well advised upon the subject, and who would testify before us. Mr. Kemble says, addressing me:

BOSTON, MASS., January 14, 1887.

Don't think the action of Chamber of Commerce here can be sustained. I am a member, and an exporter of breadstuffs, and heartily approve your bill.

EDWARD KEMBLE.

Here is a telegram which I received from another citizen of that State who, I believe, was before the committee:

BOSTON, MASS., January 8, 1887.

SENATOR CULLOM, Washington, D. C.

The interstate-commerce act ought to become a law because the railroad management of late have built up a class of favored shippers, thus putting a premium on dishonesty.

GEO. H. BEAMAN, 168 State Street.

I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts knows both of these gentlemen.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator if he does not see very clearly that both the gentlemen who sent in those dispatches sent them in the belief that the bill does not mean what he says it means, but that it means what the House conferees say; that is, the dispatch shows that the sender wants to break up this system of rebate for the foreign commerce which the Senator thinks will still be preserved by the bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not understand that I have a right to draw any such conclusion. These gentlemen have had copies of the bill. There is not a city in the United States where there is a board of trade or a chamber of commerce that has not given almost constant study to the provisions of this bill for the last ten days or more. There is a difference of opinion in reference to what the effect will be upon the commerce of the country.

Since I have been sitting here this afternoon I have received a dispatch also from the city of New York, from the Board of Trade and Transportation of that city, and I ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the dispatch.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK, January 14, 1887.

To Hon. SHELBY M. CULLOM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: We have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of resolutions adopted at the monthly meeting of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, January 12. This expression represents a membership of more than eight hundred houses of this city in active business, comprising fully two thousand individuals, who have a vital interest in remedying, as far as possible, the evils which attend interstate commerce.

If there is any difference of opinion among them as to the precise effect and desirability of certain of the provisions in this bill it has not been developed, and no organization in this country has given the subject a closer study than this board; there is, however, a substantial concurrence of opinion that something must be done and that the pending bill is the best measure we are likely to get, and should have a fair trial. These are beyond any question the true opinions and views of the active, commercial, manufacturing, and agricultural interests of the State of New York. If the bill proves defective in its workings, it can be amended at subsequent sessions of Congress.

Of course there are favored shippers as well as railroad men who are opposed to any legislation whatever which would insure supervision, however slight, in the public interest, and such persons are very active at the present time in presenting objections to the bill (in fact no bill could be drawn they would not oppose); but it is sincerely to be hoped that the present Congress will not adjourn without giving the country some measure of relief from the evils which now exist in interstate commerce:

Whereas after twelve years of study of the interstate-commerce problem, beginning with the investigation of the Windom committee in 1874 and ending with that of the Cullom committee in 1885, during which the House of Representatives and the Senate have each passed different bills without the other agreeing; and

Whereas an agreement has been reached by a compromise between what was known as the Cullom bill and the Reagan bill by which an interstate commerce bill is now pending before both Houses of Congress; and

Whereas differences of opinion upon some of the ponts involved must necessarily exist in any important bill of this kind.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this board it is the duty of all parties to acquiesce in a fair trial of the best considered measure for this purpose which has yet been before the country, and we believe it to be for the best interests both of the railroads and shippers that the present bill should become a law.

Resolved, That if after fair trial it shall be found to work undue hardship to any interest that this board pledges its influence to secure such amendment as will remedy same.

THE NEW YORK BOARD OF TRADE AND TRANSPORTATION,
By FRANK S. GARDNER, Acting Secretary.

Mr. CULLOM. I have also received the following dispatch within the last few minutes from my own State from a former railroad commissioner:

LELAND HOTEL, SPRINGFIELD, ILL., January, 14, 1887.

Hon. S. M. CULLOM:

The communities and customers that have been enriched by the vicious methods of rail transportation protest against your bill. Senator HOAR'S argument would sink the general welfare and perpetuate the unjust advantages of those favored communities and branches of business.

RICHARD P. MORGAN, JR.

Mr. President, a word or two more and I shall close. I think the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] is perfectly consistent with himself in opposing this bill, because he comes before the Senate and frankly and honestly—and I honor him for it—says that he is against it and states one special reason why. He says that from San Francisco to New Orleans he can only charge a rate that would perhaps give him a dollar a ton, while from San Francisco half way to New Orleans at some uncompeting place he can charge two or three times the amount, and, therefore, he does not want the Government of the United States to interfere with that privilege. He is perfectly honest about it. He states the exact facts I have no doubt, and says he does not want to be interfered with. Well, sir, I dislike very much to favor any bill that would interfere with what the Senator from California believes to be an honest right on his part; but I must insist that, while there may be occasionally an instance such as the Senator referred to, it ought not to stand in the way of general legislation needed to protect the great masses of the people against unjust discrimination by the railroads of the country.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] says that we had better go slow and remain quiet under the old régime. Well, Mr. President, I remember only a few days ago hearing the Senator from Alabama alleging that the railroads, the common carriers of the country were eating up the people, were destroying the interests of the people. I do not know whether he confined that remark to his own State or extended it to the whole country, but I should have inferred from the language he used against the railroad companies that he would have been in favor of almost any legislation that would in any way restrict them in their reckless disregard of the rights of the people. I can only conclude that the Senator from Alabama would rather that destructive system should go on, as he charged it to exist when he made his speech the other day, without control, than to trust a commission who, he says, are individually liable to corrupt influences, either at the hands of the President or somebody else outside.

Sir, we have got to trust somebody. We must either leave this matter to the discretion and judgment and sense of honor of the officers of the railroad companies, or we must trust the commission and the courts of the country to protect the people against unjust discriminations and extortions on the part of common carriers. Who is it that is most liable to be controlled wrongfully? Is it the President of the United States as against a corporation? Is it an honest commission honestly selected by the President of the United States as against a railroad company? I say that there are not those inducements to be placed in the hands of a set of men selected for their integrity, selected for their ability, selected for their capacity to regulate these railroads and enforce the law, that are left in the hands of the officers of the railroad companies themselves.

I take it that there is somebody honest in this country and that the President of the United States, if this bill becomes a law, will select the broadest-gauge men, the men highest in integrity and intelligence as the men to enforce this law as against the corporations and as a go-between, if you please, between the shippers and the railroads of the country. I am willing to trust them. If they are not honest the President has the right to remove them, and if the shipper is unwilling to submit to their judgment, under this bill he has a right to go directly to the courts. I say that there is not anything that can be done by these corporations against individuals where the shipper himself has not a right to get into court in some way or other if he is not willing to abide by the decision of the commissioners appointed by the President.

Sir, I shall not take up the time of the Senate longer.

Mr. COLQUITT. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I wish to make a few remarks, and only a few, in explanation of the vote that I shall give in support of this bill.

It has not been without a conflict of impressions that I have agreed to cast my vote for the bill. When this bill in its original shape was before the Senate, I made one of the four who voted against its passage. My convictions, my political prepossessions were all against the policy of such legislation. I hoped that the States which created the railroads would exercise their power of control. It is my firm belief that the States alone possess this power. Great as I regarded the causes and the necessity for interposition, I shrank from the risk and the tendency of such interposition on the part of the General Government.

I do not hesitate to say now that if I hoped that the vital matters involved in this bill could be remanded to the State authorities for State adjustment, I would vote again as I did upon the occasion referred to. But I am shut out from such a hope by the ruling of our highest court. Questionable as I regard the soundness of that ruling, I shall not gainsay it. I respect the voice of that tribunal, and I yield deference to it. I am confronted therefore by this alternative: either to intervene and control by the power of the General Government, or to submit to the domination of corporate wealth and power.

The power to tax and the power to exact tribute of labor and industry is the highest and most dreadful and the most dreaded attribute of sovereignty. Wars and revolutions have sprung from the unjust exercise of it. It is, as quoted by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] yesterday, "the power to destroy." It is shocking to my sense of popular rights and of popular liberties that a corporation, a body of men associated together for personal ends and personal aggrandizement, shall have the power to exercise this sovereign right without control and without limitation. They have exercised this right and this power, and they have abused the power. A sense of justice, of fair dealing, will not condone such abuses. The spirit of a free people will not tolerate the exercise of such a right.

I make no professions of my estimate of railroads or of the value I attach to them. To do so would be as commonplace and as fulsome as to express gratitude for the blessings of life and of water. But while we rejoice in the normal results which follow upon these ministering agents of civilization and of human progress, we cannot become the defenders or the apologists of their abuses. These have been great and serious. They will continue as long as the temptation lasts. The temptation will continue until men cease to be avaricious.

I therefore think I choose by far the lesser of the two evils when I accept the propositions of this bill; and being forced to elect, I shall give my vote to it; and believing, as I do, that this legislation can only be accomplished by the adoption of the measure before us, and that its reference to a committee, with a view to reinvestigation and readjustment and reharmonizing differences of opinion, will result in no legislation, I shall vote against recommitment.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, having paired upon this bill with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], I shall not be able to record my vote upon the pending question. I desire simply to state, therefore, that I am in favor of the main features of this bill and of the purpose sought to be obtained by it. But I am convinced that there are provisions in this bill, which have been discussed most ably and elaborately by my colleague [Mr. HOAR] and others, which would, instead of producing the beneficial results sought for and expected of this bill, be most disastrous in their consequences. Therefore, in the hope that a recommitment of this bill may eliminate from it those objectionable features, if I were at liberty to vote I should vote for the recommitment.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I can not cast my vote for the report of the conference committee on this bill without recording my dissent from some of its provisions. I do not believe that it was worth while in a measure so tentative as this to include matters that were incongruous with the main purposes of the legislation proposed, and about the expediency and constitutionality of which there was an honest and wide divergence of opinion. I can not gain my own assent to the proposition that the prohibition contained in the fifth section, as to what is called "pooling," is within the competency of Congress to enact. It would hardly be contended that if it were the only provision of the bill, the power to regulate commerce between the States and foreign nations included the power to interfere with the liberty of contract of those who happened to be engaged in the business of transportation. That the owner of a ship, for instance, engaged in foreign commerce could be forbidden under the guise of a regulation of commerce to dispose of his freight money as he pleased after he had earned it, or to enter into an agreement to dispose of it in a particular way. There is another provision of the bill reported by the conference committee open to criticism, which was, no doubt, intended to be its most conservative feature. I mean the establishment of a commission to which are committed so many and so important powers—legislative, judicial, and executive. These are questions of constitutional power, and may require the attention and construction of the courts.

On the ground of expediency I doubt whether the long and short haul provision will not affect disastrously the commerce of the country.

If I could by a recommittal of the bill hope to see these and perhaps some other defects remedied, I should gladly cast my vote to bring about further conference and consideration as to the wisdom of leaving out these sections of doubtful constitutionality or expediency. But, sir, the parliamentary situation of this report does not admit of such a course. The vote must be to concur or nonconcur in the report of the conference committee, and I believe that the just demands of all interests involved will be best consulted by not allowing this bill, which in its main features is within the constitutional grant of power to Congress, and fairly meets the popular demand for an assertion of that power on the part of Congress to fail.

Time and experience before the meeting of Congress in December next will do more to enlighten and inform the public mind than further debate here can possibly do, and I hope and believe that this great question will be then dealt with in a spirit of liberality and justice to all sections and to all interests, which will be worthy of the patriotism and intelligence of American legislators.

Now, sir, if I am mistaken in what I believe to be the parliamentary situation of the question before the Senate, and it is competent to vote upon a motion to recommit to the committee of conference this bill with or without instructions, I shall be glad to give my vote for such a recommittal; but believing, as I understand the parliamentary situation, that that is not possible, I shall record my vote in favor of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. FRYE. I desire to make a motion to recommit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that——

Mr. FRYE. I will first, if the Chair pleases, move to recommit this report with instructions to the Senate conferees to insist upon the striking out of section 4 as amended and inserting section 4 of the original Senate bill; also upon striking out section 5, which is the pooling clause, and inserting in its place section 19 of the original Senate bill, which is the clause authorizing the commissioners to investigate the matter of pooling, and report at some future day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the report be recommitted with the instructions named by him.

Mr. CULLOM. I make the point of order on the motion to recommit, and especially on the question of recommitting with instructions.

Mr. HARRIS. I would be glad to ask the Senator from Maine to whom or to what is this bill to be recommitted? Some months ago the House of Representatives adopted an amendment in lieu of the Senate bill. The Senate disagreed to that amendment and insisted upon its disagreement and asked a conference, to which the House assented. Managers on the part of the two Houses were appointed. They conferred; they agreed; and have reported their action to their respective Houses. That committee no longer exists. It has performed the duty assigned it; it has gone out of existence. There is now no committee of conference between the two Houses in respect to this bill.

But suppose the motion of the Senator from Maine is held by the Chair to be in order, and suppose a majority of the Senate sustains it, and I presume the construction would be in the precise form of the motion, that the bill goes back to the same managers who had charge of it before on the part of the Senate; if that be true, suppose our chairman should address a note to the former managers on the part of the House, is it to be presumed that those managers would consent to entertain the proposition? What right have they to respond to any such note and come here to confer with us about the report which they have already made? The House has taken no action upon it, but those conferees have made their report. It is there on file, awaiting the action of the Senate, concurring or non-concurring in the report of the committee.

The object that the Senator from Maine has, or that any other Senator may have who desires a further conference, can be reached in a legitimate and in a parliamentary way if it is sought to reach it and a majority of the Senate shall favor it. When the Senate shall have disagreed to this report, shall by vote have rejected the conference report, it will then be competent and in order for any Senator who chooses to do so to move that the Senate further insist on its disagreement with the House amendment, and ask a further conference with the House in respect to that disagreement.

By that method the object can be legitimately reached, and reached in accordance with parliamentary methods and parliamentary rules and parliamentary law. But the motion to recommit the report of a committee composed of the managers of the two Houses, who have already considered, who have already reported, and who have performed the whole duty that was devolved upon them, the committee having gone out of existence, really seems to me to be entirely out of the question, though I am aware that there is at least one, and possibly more than one, precedent for this proceeding. It is a most vicious precedent, inconsistent with every method of parliamentary proceeding, and a precedent that had better be departed from at the earliest opportunity that the body has to depart from it, than be followed, because it is vicious and wholly contrary to every rule of parliamentary methods and sound parliamentary law.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The Chair has indulged debate thus far by unanimous consent and is very glad to hear the opinions of Senators.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Chair allow me to reply to the Senator from Tennessee in a few words?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Maine may proceed.

Mr. FRYE. I thoroughly understand that when a committee has made a report in parliamentary law the committee is then discharged; but it is an equally well-settled principle of parliamentary law that a recommitment to a committee revives the committee. There can not be any question at all about that, and the United States Senate has recommitted reports of conference committees.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him can any action on our part revive a committee of the House of Representatives that has gone out of existence?

Mr. FRYE. We are simply acting as the United States Senate, and we do not look at the House of Representatives at all. We instruct our conferees; we recommit to our conferees, and if we recommit with instructions, it is to our conferees. It has no reference to the other House at all. They must take the responsibility of their action in the House, and not we.

Why, sir, the Senate has recommitted reports over and over and over again to conference committees. In the case of the well known salary grab, so called, a motion was made in the Senate to recommit that, with instructions, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], then Presiding Officer, ruled that it was in order. The present Presiding Officer of the Senate stoutly maintained that the ruling of the then Presiding Officer was clearly right. The United States Senate, on the contrary, determined, on an appeal, that it was wrong. But that whole discussion proceeded upon this one single idea—that you could not instruct conferees, because the moment you undertook to do so you took from them their character as free conferees. In my judgment, there is nothing in that point. But that was decided by the Senate.

I admit that the Presiding Officer here (notwithstanding his opinion may be that under parliamentary law this motion may be in order) may with perfect propriety cite the ruling of the Senate and decline to accept this motion; but I prefer very much to make the motion with the instructions, for I confess that never before in my life did I listen to a Senatorial discussion and find my mind in such an utter state of confusion as it is following the discussion which has taken place here on this question.

I move to instruct the conferees to strike out the fourth section. I should like to know what the fourth section means from this discussion. I should like to know how I or my constituents are to determine what it means from this discussion. I should like to know what lights have been thrown upon it. The conferees disagree in relation to it; almost every Senator who has discussed it disagrees with the other Senators in relation to it. Boards of trade in Boston and Indianapolis, the Chamber of Commerce in New York, Legislatures of the different States, all absolutely disagree diametrically as to what this fourth section is.

Now, sir, the State of Maine, which I in part represent, is away down at one extreme of this long haul. If this fourth section is what some of the Senators on this floor claim it is—and it seems to me that their claim is sound—then it affects disastrously all the interests of my State; then it levies a tax upon every barrel of flour that comes into my State, upon every bushel of corn, upon all the coal that comes to my State, upon all the cotton that comes to my State; it places an embargo upon every pound of our granite that we desire to send into the interior of this country, upon every pound of ice, upon all our baled hay, and not only an embargo upon the hay, but an increased tax upon our hay and upon our lumber. And I say that, affecting, as one construction of the fourth section does as it stands to-day, the interests of my State, it is my duty, if I can, to have the report recommitted to this committee, and ask them to go back to the fourth section which the Senate passed, instead of creating into law this section about which there is such confusion and such doubt.

As to the fifth section, the pooling clause, there is almost the same confusion about it. One Senator seeming to know about it insists that pooling is a great benefit to the interests of the people of this country. Another Senator insists that within his knowledge it ought to be made a crime and it ought to be punished by a five-thousand-dollar fine, and so on.

Now, it seems to me that the better way is to recommit this bill with instructions to consider these two sections further and to report again; and I say if this motion shall be adopted by the United States Senate it revives in parliamentary law our committee, and they can proceed.

I do not know whether the Chair will adopt the ruling of the United States Senate in the case of the salary grab; and perhaps the Chair remembers that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] at the next session of the Senate gathered all the precedents (and there were some eight or ten of them in number), and in a speech of great power that he made to the Senate justified the position which he had taken in his ruling in the matter of the salary grab——

Mr. HOAR. Certainly within one or two years we have overruled the ruling then made by the Senate, on the authority which the Senator cites.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Massachusetts himself cited it, and had it read in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. And the Senate at that time ruled that such a motion was in order.

Mr. FRYE. But the Chair understands perfectly well that a ruling of the Senate on a question of order is of no account whatever. When the last post-office appropriation bill was before the Senate, within one hour's time this Senate ruled diametrically opposite on two different items of that bill involving exactly the same principle. The Senate vote on the merits of a question when a matter of order is presented, and not on a construction of parliamentary law always.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] desires me to add this to my instructions, and I have no objection to it because I think it is a matter of great importance:

Nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to prohibit any carrier subject to its provisions from making reasonable discrimination by special rate or otherwise in favor of freight of any kind carried for exportation from the United States.

As an amendment, I suppose, to some provision of the bill.

If the Chair should overrule this motion, and the report should then be recommitted without instructions, the conferees of course will distinctly understand what the desire of the Senators who vote for recommitment is. These suggestions will be regarded as instructions, and then I will make the motion to recommit. I suppose no point of order will be made against it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will be heard if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As my name has been drawn in question about this matter of order, I wish to say that when the salary-grab bill, as it was properly called I think, was up the question that was presented to me, being for the moment accidentally in the chair, was not a question as to whether you could make a motion to recommit as against a motion to agree to a report of a committee of conference, as I remember, but the only question (waiving that—nobody suggested that) was whether it was within the power of either House to instruct their conferees when they could properly appoint conferees and send them to the other House to communicate.

I held that each House had the right to instruct any committee of its own, that it had the right to commit anything to, to do what that House thought it fit should be done. The Senate overruled me against what had been its clear precedent before, as I demonstrated at the next session, and against what I think is the true parliamentary law.

But the question that is now presented, if I correctly understand it, is not the question that was then presented and passed upon. The question that is now presented is not merely whether you may instruct your representatives in a conference when you have them, but having had a conference and the conferees having reported, and pending the question of agreeing to that report, whether you can recommit the subject without having first voted that you will not agree to what they have reported.

If the Senate should vote that they would not agree to this conference report, then I think, as I thought in 1873, that it is perfectly competent for the Senate in again notifying the House that we disagree to their amendment, and insist upon disagreeing to it, and ask a further conference and appoint conferees, to instruct our conferees to do what we think they ought to do, and to insist on what we think they ought to insist upon; but I must say that I think it is clear on the ordinary principles of procedure that the first question which is to be taken in this body is on agreeing to this report.

If Senators are not satisfied with it, we all come to the same result in the end; they will vote "no," and having voted "no," by a majority, then I admit it is perfectly competent in asking a further conference to instruct our representatives to insist on this, that, or the other, as we please. But as the question now is, I submit, with great respect, that the first question must be taken on agreeing to the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposing that this question might arise has taken occasion to look into the precedents, and finds that Rule XLIX gives to the report of a committee of conference a precedence in being received and considered, but makes no special rule as to the modes of consideration, leaving that to be settled by the order of precedence fixed by the forty-third rule.

The Chair ascertains that in all cases which can be found among the precedents in the history of the country, going back to the beginning of the Government, that the same order of precedence of motions has been applied to the consideration of a report of a committee of conference as is applied to any other question pending before the Senate except only that early in the history of the Government, as early as the close of the last century, it was held by the Senate, and passed as an order of the Senate, although not carried into the rules—

That a motion to amend a report of a committee of conference cannot be made.

But a conference report is open to all the other motions that can be made; for instance, to take a recess, to proceed to the consideration of executive business, to lay on the table, to postpone indefinitely, to postpone to a day certain, to commit, but not to amend. So the Chair is clearly of the opinion that a motion to commit is in order, although it is not a very common practice. There have been some cases found in the books where a motion to commit such a report has been made and has been adopted nem. con. The Chair thinks that the motion to commit can be made as a matter of right before the question is put on agreeing to the report itself.

The Chair, in referring to the case which was made somewhat famous, called the salary-grab bill, finds that the ruling of the then occupant of the chair, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], was exactly in accordance with this position. A motion was made in that case to instruct the committee of conference which had reported a bill containing what was known as the salary-grab. An objection was made that that motion to commit with instructions was not in order. The then occupant of the chair, the Senator from Vermont, ruled that it was in order. The instructions were held by him to be in order.

That question was debated at some length. An appeal was taken from the decision on the question of instructions, and the Senate overruled the decision of the Chair which held that the instructions were in order, by a very large majority, a vote that clearly indicated the purpose of the Senate to adopt that amendment. The Chair feels himself bound by that ruling unless, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, it has been since overruled. The Chair can find no case where the subject has been brought before the Senate since; but the Chair feels bound to regard that as a precedent and therefore is compelled to hold that the instructions are not in order, but a motion to commit is clearly in order.

It appears that after the instructions had been disposed of in the case referred to, the Presiding Officer said:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.
Mr. WRIGHT. I now move to recommit the report without instruction.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the report be recommitted to the committee of conference.
Mr. WRIGHT. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.

Then follows a long debate on the question of recommitting. Finally, by common consent the question was put on the motion to agree, but it was held there that the motion to recommit was in order.

Mr. HOAR. I am unable to affirm with any positiveness of recollection what the Senate did in the recent case, and I am not able to state what that case was, but I have a very distinct impression that within the last year or two this question came up, and that I searched for the precedents and found the argument made by the Senator from Vermont.

The Senator from Vermont, at the next session of Congress, the following December, or whenever the next session was, renewed the subject and fortified his ruling by a citation of authorities from the beginning, and on appealing to that my impression is, though I confess it is a vague recollection on which I should not think for a moment to ask the Chair to depend, that the particular measure on which this particular motion to commit with instructions was made was admitted, and it was so committed on the authority of that collection of precedents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The opinion of the Senator from Vermont is here in a speech, but the question has not been decided by the Senate since.

Mr. FRYE. I take no appeal from the ruling of the Chair. I now move to recommit. As I understand it, if this motion should prevail then it will be competent for the Senate to instruct as it pleases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair holds not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair——

Mr. FRYE. After it is recommitted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That question has not yet arisen. If the motion to recommit is adopted, the Chair will consider it.

Mr. FRYE. I move to recommit this report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In reply to what the Chair has said, as I seem to be the general scape-goat of everything that goes wrong in the Senate, I wish to remind the Chair that the point that was before me when I happened to be occupying the place that Vice-President Colfax was entitled to, but had gone out for a moment, was not any question as to the propriety of a motion to recommit, but it solely turned on the question, the other point not being raised at all (and I confess it was not drawn to my attention) of the right to instruct a committee of conference on the part of the Senate when it was proper to have a committee of conference at all.

On that point alone I ruled, and I ruled, as I showed at the next session, according to the uniform precedents both of the Senate and House of Representatives, as was demonstrated by the investigation made by my friend, Mr. Murphy, who is now taking the notes of what I am saying, himself the most careful and impartial and best-informed gentleman in respect to parliamentary history that there is in this Capitol, or, as far as I know, anywhere else.

Nobody undertook to stand up and deny that proposition, that given the case where the matter was in a condition to be considered by a committee you might instruct that committee to do what you chose to instruct them to do. But the Chair now holds that a simple motion to recommit is in order; but where does that leave it? When we send a message to the House that this matter is recommitted to our committee on conference—we can not commit to the others—where does it leave it? The House has not possession of the papers; and when we send them over this notice, where does that leave it? There is nothing that the House can do because there is no pending proposition between the two Houses on the last vote of the Senate except simply to recommit this report to our conferees. We do not express to the House whether we stand by what we have done before or do not stand by it, and there is the difficulty.

So then, with great respect—and I do not mean to appeal or do anything else, because we shall come to the substance of this thing by and by, in spite of all the technicalities and difficulties that may be presented—when we come to the end of this matter after all, whatever the Chair may rule according to his judgment, we come to the substantial question of whether this thing is to be set at sea again or whether we are to take, as some people suppose, our lives in our hands and go on with what we have.

Therefore, every Senator who is willing to trust to this experiment, as it is, will be willing to stand by it and vote against a motion to recommit simply, which the Chair holds to be in order; and every Senator who wants to go to sea in a bowl, and see how in thirty days we can manage to do something better or different, which, when it comes forth, will be open to the same criticisms of language as we have now no matter how clearly you, or I, or anybody else may state it, will come back to the same difficulties of interpretation we have now; so I do not think it is of any practical importance in what way we get at it except as a precedent for the future.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If Senators will indulge the Chair a moment more, the Chair, upon the question of the motion to commit, finds this rule:

When a question is pending no motion shall be received but—

The motion which the Chair has already read, including the motion to commit, and the Chair does not know from his own experience any question that ever came before the Senate of the United States that was not open to a motion to commit. A motion to commit is a favorite motion in parliamentary rules, to refer a matter to a committee for information.

In regard to the committee of conference, the committee of conference is still in existence. The report of the committee of conference has not been acted on in either House. The committee remains in existence until the conclusion of the action of the two Houses on the report of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. If this motion shall prevail, how does the Senate get in communication with the House of Representatives to act on this matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would think the papers, with the action of the Senate, would be at once communicated to the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRIS. The papers go to the committee if they are committed, and to the Senate committee, and the Senate has no papers to send to the House of Representatives.

Now, exactly how, by this very unusual proceeding, we are ever to get in communication with the House of Representatives on this subject, unless we take action one way or the other, agreeing or disagreeing to the report, and then send a message to the House informing them of the action we have taken, accompanied by the papers, I confess that I can not see.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator what occasion there is to send any message to the House of Representatives until there is final action upon the report of the committee? Suppose a motion is made to lay this on the table and it is carried, you do not send a message to the House. The House waits for final action by the Senate upon the report of the committee of conference before they take it up. When final action is had, a message is sent to the House communicating that fact.

Mr. HARRIS. That is all very true; but if the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, the two Houses have appointed managers; they have met and conferred; they have made their report to both Houses. How are you going to communicate with the House of Representatives?

Mr. DAWES. The committee on the part of the other branch do not make a report until they hear of final action here, for we have possession of the papers, and we deal with our committee, having possession of the papers. When we have taken some final vote it makes an end of this matter, and they get a communication to that effect, and then the report is made there.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not propose to appeal from the ruling of the Chair, though I am satisfied that it is wholly inconsistent with parliamentary law and every proper parliamentary usage; but I do desire to say that, in view of the weeks which have already been spent in conference on these disagreeing votes, and in view of the additional fact that I chance to know that two of the managers on the part of the House are each more than a thousand miles from here, and probably will be away for a week or two, or three or four, I am satisfied as to what the effect of recommittal is to be if a majority of the Senate shall recommit. It is an indirect method of killing this bill. Why, I would greatly prefer myself to confront the responsibility and either agree to it or kill it direct rather than by shrinking from that responsibility and slaughtering it by indirection.

But I think the conferees, three of the House of Representative and three of the Senate, who spent two or three weeks day by day and almost every day in considering this question, would, without one dissenting voice, agree with me when I say we never got to an agreement that approximates more nearly the views of the Senate as expressed by the bill which passed than the measure now before us. This motion, if adopted, whether so intended or not, will inevitably have the effect of killing the bill; and I desire that every Senator should vote upon the question with a knowledge of the fact that his vote to recommit is a vote to destroy and a vote to defeat legislation on this subject.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand that the motion to recommit is the one immediately before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I object very decidedly to being told that if I vote for that I am to be justly chargeable with the defeat of the bill, should such a defeat ensue. I do not indulge in that distrust of the Senate manifested by the Senator from Illinois.

I admire him for his zeal in this matter, for the interest he has displayed in the investigation, the vigor with which he has advocated the measure; but I think I am justified in saying that a majority of the members of the Senate believe that the bill must be amended. I think a majority believe there are serious defects in it; defects well worth consideration and well worth another attempt at adjustment; I am led to believe that quite a number of Senators will vote against it. I know from conversation that there are many who will vote for it who criticise it very severely, and you have an illustrious example of that in the speech of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

I am not to be driven by the intimation that I am to be considered an enemy of action on this subject because I vote for recommittal. The New York Chamber of Commerce made it known to us that, while in favor of the general proposition of the bill, there were two serious objections to it. Now, the Board of Trade send us a communication to-day urging us to vote for the bill, but they also intimate that there are objections, because they say it is the best we can get. I prefer to make another attempt to disappoint the New York Board of Trade, and show them it is not the best we can get.

I think it would have been an extraordinary, an illogical proceeding if we had been compelled to come to a vote direct upon concurrence without first making an attempt to improve. I might have felt bound then to vote against the report, and then I should have been recorded upon the final vote passing the bill as opposed to the measure, which I am not. I very much prefer the original Senate bill. I think that all the Senators who voted for the original Senate bill (and they were all but four of the Senate, I believe) to-day prefer that original bill. Now, why, for what reason in the world, shall we hesitate to see if we can not improve it?

I shall vote very cheerfully, very gladly, for the motion to recommit, and while I expect to vote for the measure, I will not promise until the last moment. I reserve my judgment till the end.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, what is desired now is that we should come as promptly as possible to the passage of the best bill regulating this subject so far as it should be regulated. We are nearer now to the passage of such a bill than Congress has ever been before, and we are nearer to being able to remove the objectionable features of this legislation and passing a bill that in substance shall not only be compatible with the public interest, but in furtherance of the special interest that has stimulated this kind of legislation, and nearer to having it in a shape that shall be received without repugnance and with a general desire to advance and complete the legislation in the sense for which it has been sought.

I shall vote, therefore, to recommit, believing by that vote I shall bring the Congress and the country nearer to a good bill than by any other vote; and I insist that under the discussion of the last few days it is apparent that we are getting nearer to the passage of a bill by giving our concurrence at once to recommit. We have not come as near to a good bill as we shall come if we adopt the proposition to recommit.

Mr. CULLOM. I only desire to say one word. I am not disposed to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I am not disposed to charge that any Senator who votes for a recommittal is against any legislation on the subject; but I do desire to say that I regard, and I think every Senator must regard, this vote to recommit as a test vote on the question.

Mr. HAWLEY. I protest that it is not.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it is.

Mr. FRYE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. We have forty-nine days more of this session, a period of time in which the Senate and the House many times have dealt with, matured, and considered in every part thirteen great appropriation bills; and it is utterly ridiculous, it seems to me, with all due respect, to say that the doubtful question of construction as to the meaning of this bill which has been raised here can not be settled between these conferees unless anybody means to say, which is not to be supposed for a moment, that they will not make an attempt to have this bill made clear in accordance with their claim as to its meaning.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I think for about seventeen years, in the House and in the Senate, the attempt has been made, from session to session, almost continuously, to have passed some interstate-commerce bill. The Committee on Commerce of the House for years undertook to prepare such a bill and secure its passage, the best bill that could be prepared, with seemingly a majority in the House and in the Senate approaching unanimity almost, as we thought at the period of its adoption, and yet by one process or another it has been cast aside, and there has never been an actual passage of any bill whatever. That has been so in the House for years, and so in the Senate.

I voted for this bill as it passed the Senate. I preferred and should prefer now to vote for the present bill if it could be amended so as to be just as it was when it passed the Senate. I have received from my own State communications from very respectable and intelligent people familiar with these subjects, advising me that, in their opinion, some of the provisions of this bill are dangerous to the business interests of the country. I took all that into my consideration; but I believe from the observations I have made in the long years that have passed; from the facility with which the passage of any bill of this kind has been prevented, that unless we accept this report of the committee of conference and pass this bill there will be no bill passed during this session of Congress.

I shall therefore vote against recommittal. I shall therefore vote to agree to the report of the committee, although I might desire that some of the provisions of the bill might be changed. And, sir, I consider that the passage of this bill, in its effect upon the public mind, in its effect upon railroad administration, will be very beneficial and desirable, not only to the railroads themselves as indicating what the will of Congress is in that direction, but in quieting the apprehensions of the vast body of the people of the United States that the Congress of the United States has refused to give them the relief which they have demanded so imperatively heretofore, and never with more positive affirmation than now.

So, sir; I shall vote against recommittal; so I shall vote in favor of agreeing to the report of the committee, not because it suits me in all respects, not because it suits very many of the people of my State, but because I think this is the last opportunity of the session to pass any bill whatever on this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit the report, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAMPTON (when Mr. BUTLER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. BUTLER] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK]. Were he present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. BECK (when Mr. CAMDEN'S name was called). The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] requested me to announce his pair with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. The Senator from West Virginia, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired on this bill, and all the questions connected with it, with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN (when Mr. KENNA'S name was called). The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. Were the Senator from West Virginia present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. COKE (when Mr. MAXEY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MAXEY] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. If he were here, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when Mr. RANSOM'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. CULLOM (when Mr. VAN WYCK'S name was called). The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] wrote me a note asking me to pair him in favor of the bill. I am satisfied he would vote "nay" on this motion.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MORGAN. I am informed that some arrangement has been made by which the pair between myself and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] has been changed to a pair between the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If that be so, I vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL. That is so.

Mr. MORGAN. I vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to say, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON], who is obliged to be absent, that he desired to be paired in favor of the recommittal of this bill, although he is in favor of the passage of the bill in case the motion to recommit fails.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Mitchell of Oregon,	Sewell,
Blair,	Gray,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sherman,
Brown,	Hale,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Hampton,	Morrill,	Williams.
Chace,	Hawley,	Payne,
Cheney,	Hoar,	Platt,
Evarts,	Mahone,	Sawyer,

NAYS—36.

Allison,	Conger,	Harris,	Sabin,
Beck,	Cullom,	Ingalls,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Teller,
Blackburn,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Vance,
Bowen,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Vest,
Call,	Fair,	Manderson,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	George,	Palmer,	Whitthorne,
Coke,	Gibson,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa,
Colquitt,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.

ABSENT—14.

Butler,	Jones of Florida,	Miller,	Van Wyck,
Camden,	Kenna,	Ransom,	Voorhees.
Dawes,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Harrison,	Maxey,	Stanford,

So the motion to recommit was not agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose the question now is on agreeing to the conference report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. I have so far taken no part in the discussion of this measure, preferring to leave that for those better qualified by experience and study of the question to speak upon it. I shall not discuss it now; but I desire before the vote is taken upon the report of the committee to briefly give my reasons for the vote I expect to cast.

I have no doubt that Congress has power under the Constitution to make needful rules for the regulation of interstate commerce. Just how far provisions fixing rates and prescribing rules for transportation will be upheld I am unable to say. It will probably be held that the rates fixed and the rules prescribed must be reasonable, and reasonable regulations will no doubt be upheld. There is, beyond question, I think, a general demand for Congressional legislation upon the subject of interstate commerce, and a general belief also that the pending bill, as agreed upon in conference committee, should become a law, and I am not sure but that the provisions of the bill which to me appear to be the most questionable are the most popular.

I fear, however, that the provisions of the bill concerning long and short hauls, as left by the Committee on Commerce, if construed strictly, will work to the disadvantage of the West, and so injuriously affect the whole country; but I do not think upon the whole it will be seriously detrimental to the State I have the honor in part to represent. I was much impressed with the forcible, lucid, and terse statements of the senior Senator from California upon the subject of long and short hauls, and as to the effect which, according to his judgment, the provisions of the pending bill upon that subject will have upon the Pacific coast, and if I construed the fourth section of the bill as he does I could not vote for the report, but I am inclined to think that the section is flexible enough to be adapted to the evident necessities of commerce in cases of long hauls from competitive points mentioned by the Senator.

I think that under this bill, if it becomes a law, a portion of the through traffic from the East to the Pacific coast will be transferred to the Canadian Pacific and to sailing vessels passing around the Horn, and that the rates of transportation from New York and Boston to San Francisco and Portland will probably be somewhat increased and local rates may not be reduced. Ocean transportation and the Canadian Pacific will, however, to a great extent, regulate the rate of freight for transcontinental traffic whether this bill becomes a law or not.

I doubt, however, whether freight rates from the East to interior towns along the transportation lines will be increased, and the bill, I think, will be beneficial, if it has any effect, to the farmers of Oregon and Washington Territory, as the agricultural products of that region reach the seaboard upon the Pacific by comparatively short hauls and are shipped to foreign markets around Cape Horn; and it is quite possible that if the effect of the bill is to increase the cost of transportation of the wheat of Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Iowa to the seaboard it will to some extent increase the value of wheat in Oregon.

The question is so complicated, important, and far-reaching, however, that I should have preferred to have left it for further consideration after investigation and report by the commission to be created by the bill, and would now vote, if I had opportunity to do so, to modify the provision. If I could have been convinced that by a further conference and an agreement the provision in question would have been modified, I should have been inclined to favor that course, but I am in favor of some legislation upon the subject of the regulation of interstate commerce at the present session of Congress; and the friends of the measure contend, and it is quite probable, that if the conference report is not adopted legislation upon the subject at this session is impossible.

I see no practicable way, therefore, of amending the bill by striking out the provisions I think of doubtful utility, or even of preventing by my vote their enactment into law. If I must either vote for the provisions as they stand in the bill concerning long and short hauls, or place myself by my vote in apparent hostility to the entire measure, and that without being able to accomplish anything practicable, I shall vote for the bill as it stands. I voted for the Senate bill and prefer it to the bill as agreed upon by the committee.

The States in my judgment which will be most disastrously affected by the pending bill if it becomes a law will be the grain-producing States of the Upper Mississippi Valley, but the representatives of those States upon this floor generally support the bill, and I do not feel called upon to set up for their protection my judgment against theirs.

It is quite possible also that the effect of the bill upon the Western States will not be as detrimental as supposed. It may be well to let the experiment be tried so that further legislation upon the subject may be had in the light of experience under the operation of the law. At all events, I am not disposed to be so tenacious of my own opinion concerning one or two provisions of the bill as to by my vote prevent any legislation upon the subject.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the State which I have the honor in part to represent has a population just about equally divided, on the one hand agricultural, on the other mechanical, or engaged in those pursuits and occupations which are to a great extent dependent upon agriculture.

The agriculture of the State is not such, however, as to afford sustenance or a sufficiency of the productions of the earth for the supply even of the farmers of the State, so that it is a fact in regard to New Hampshire more than it is true in regard to any other State in the Union, that our agricultural citizens as well as the remaining half of our population are dependent upon the far West for breadstuffs and provisions of every description to a very great extent. Probably at least five-sixths of the flour consumed in our State comes from the Northwest, perhaps even a larger proportion, and the corn that feeds our animals, and by the use of which our lumbering and other operations are carried on, comes very largely from the West.

On the other hand, the mechanical and manufacturing products of our State find there their chief market, and thus it is that in New Hampshire the question of the long and the short haul is the all-important question.

With such consideration as I have been able to give to this provision of the bill now that it has been pending these many years it is entirely clear to my mind that its inevitable operation, if it be an honest bill and be honestly enforced, will be very largely to increase the cost of the long haul.

If it be so its operation will be detrimental to the interests of my State in both respects. It will increase the cost of a large proportion of that which we buy and it will diminish the value of that which we manufacture and sell.

I am satisfied, too, that the provision with reference to the lessening of the expense of the short haul by limiting it to the expenditure of the long haul will not be practically of any efficient service to our State, and in fact I do not believe it will be anywhere.

I do not believe it will operate to diminish the cost of the short haul, and for this reason: A reasonable compensation will always be allowed to the capital of the railroads or of the transportation companies. Such rates of fare and freight will always be held to be reasonable as will yield a fair income on the value of the property and the services which are employed in the business of transportation.

If that be the case, and the income be not derived from one source, it will be reasonable to derive it from another, and if by virtue of law or in any way return for the long haul be diminished or inordinately increased, then the amount of revenue to be received from the short haul will be increased or will be lessened in the same way by the rigid rule of law which may be adopted. So that whatever may be deducted from the short haul at those stations where the amount may exceed the aggregate which is paid from the point of competition will be made up on the other intervening points between the two points of competition.

There may be a general evening or leveling of the cost of the short haul between the points of competition, but whatever is lost at one point of the short haul may be made up at another, and thus the aggregate of the receipts of the short haul will remain the same in any case, and the actual taxation to the people will be the same under the operation of this bill that it is under existing conditions. Thus the general benefit which it is anticipated will be derived to the shippers of the country at large will not be realized under the operation of this act.

I believe the operation of this bill will be to the injury of the consumers of the State which I represent, and from that standpoint I oppose the bill, and I oppose it all the way through. I voted for its recommittal, and on the final question I shall vote to disagree to the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. HARRIS, Mr. HAWLEY, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when Mr. DAWES's name was called). The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] left the Senate Chamber a few moments ago and asked me to announce his pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] and to state that he would vote against the motion to agree to the conference report.

Mr. COKE. I will announce now that my colleague [Mr. MAXEY] who is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], if here, would vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN (when Mr. KENNA'S name was called). The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. Were the Senator from West Virginia present he would vote "yea;" and his colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. Were Mr. CAMDEN present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL (when Mr. MCPHERSON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON] if present would vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. If he were present I would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BECK. I was requested by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to say that while he was in favor of the recommittal of the bill, he was in favor of its passage, and if present would vote "yea." The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] would also vote "yea."

Mr. HAMPTON. I announce again the pair of my colleague [Mr. BUTLER], who would vote against the bill if he were present.

Mr. GORMAN. Before the vote is announced, I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. WILSON, of Maryland], who is not present, I understand is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE]. At all events, if he were present he would vote "yea" on this proposition.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 15; as follows:

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 17, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 14, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SANITARY CONDITION OF TREASURY BUILDING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting reports upon the sanitary condition of the Treasury building and recommending changes in the system of sewerage and ventilation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR OF REFUGE AT LUDINGTON, MICH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with inclosures, a communication from the Pere Marquette Lumber Company, and recommending that authority be granted by Congress to accept the tendered donation by that company of land to be used in constructing a harbor of refuge at Ludington, Mich.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the Senate of the following titles; which were read twice, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 909) for the relief of the legal personal representatives of Henry W. Sibley, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 933) for the relief of M. C. Mordecai—to the Committee on Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SMALLS, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. SPRIGGS, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. MORGAN, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. HIESTAND, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, indefinitely, on account of ill health.

To Mr. BARRY, for the remainder of the week, on account of sickness.

REPRINT OF REPORT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] asks unanimous consent that an order be made for reprinting report No. 1234 upon the bill (H. R. 7208) the previous edition having been exhausted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 1413) which was yesterday referred to the Committee on Claims, be taken from that committee, the Senate amendments disagreed to, and the conference requested by the Senate agreed to. This motion was objected to yesterday by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], who has informed me that he withdraws his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

The SPEAKER. This bill was referred to the Committee on Claims yesterday morning. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, that the Senate amendments be non-concurred in, and that the House agree to the request of the Senate for a committee of conference.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the amendments had better be considered in the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] objects.

Mr. MORRISON. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to present the privileged report which I send to the desk.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred the resolution of January 10, 1887, providing for the consideration of Senate bills on Fridays the 14th and 21st days of January, 1887, have had the same under consideration, and report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it be adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask my colleague to allow me to offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On either of said days it shall be in order to consider any bill on the House Calendar referring private claims to the Court of Claims for a judicial ascertainment of the facts.

Mr. MORRISON. I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] proposes the amendment which has just been read. Does the gentleman [Mr. MORRISON] yield for the amendment?

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is only one bill of that kind, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BURROWS. That takes us out of the line of the consideration of Senate bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. The amendment refers to only one bill.

The SPEAKER. The amendment does not provide for one bill, but for "any bill."

Mr. SPRINGER. Any such bill on the House Calendar.

Mr. BURROWS. But not a Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] yield for the amendment?

Mr. MORRISON. No, sir; I have no objection to the amendment myself, but there seems to be objection by other members, and to avoid complications I demand the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. As the rule is reported from the committee, it will go into operation to-day.

Mr. MORRISON. It is intended to go into operation to-day.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask that the resolution itself be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the 14th and 21st days of January, 1887, after the morning hour, be set apart for the consideration of Senate bills on the Private Calendar of the House, except pension bills the consideration of which is already provided for at the Friday evening sessions.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose that under that rule the bills would be taken up in their order?

The SPEAKER. In the order in which they stand on the Calendar.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE NUEVO MOCTEZUMA.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to renew my request that the Senate bill which was objected to by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] yesterday be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is the objection withdrawn?

Mr. DUNN. The objection has been withdrawn. The bill was read yesterday, and I now ask that it be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2791) to provide for an American register for the steamer Nuevo Moctezuma, of Philadelphia, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the bill again demanded?

Mr. DUNN. The bill was read yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection a bill on the House Calendar (H. R. 10199) for the same purpose as the bill just passed will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

HENRY A. PAUS.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1261) for the relief of Henry A. Paus, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion resting upon the military record of Henry A. Paus, late a private in Company K, Nineteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and to issue to the said Henry A. Paus an honorable discharge from said organization as of the 20th day of April, 1862; and the said Henry A. Paus shall be entitled to the same pay, bounties, and benefits as if he, on said 20th day of April, 1862, had been lawfully discharged or mustered out of Company K, Nineteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is there a favorable report upon that bill?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WOLFORD) was read, as follows:

The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion resting upon the military record of Henry A. Paus, late a private in Company K, Nineteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and that an honorable discharge issue to said soldier from that organization. It also declares him entitled to the same pay, bounties, and benefits to which he would have been entitled if he had been so honorably discharged.

Your committee referred the bill to the Secretary of War for report and information, and received in response a letter, of which the following is a copy:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 12, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a bill (H. R. 1261, Forty-ninth Congress, first session) for the relief (removal of charge of desertion) of Henry A. Paus, late of Company K, Nineteenth Illinois Volunteers, referred by the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs for whatever the records of this office may afford, and the views of the Department relative to the case, and in compliance with your instructions on letter of transmittal, to report as follows:

The name of Henry A. Paus is not borne on any rolls of Company K, Nineteenth Illinois Volunteers, but one August Paus was enrolled June 17, 1861, to serve three years in said company and regiment, and served therein until reported "absent, sick at Nashville, Tenn., since March 17, 1862." On muster-roll of company for July and August, 1862, he is reported "deserted July 11, 1862," and on muster-out roll of company dated July 9, 1864, as "deserted April 20, 1862, at Nashville, Tenn." On November 11, 1862, he was enrolled as Henry A. Post, to serve three years in Company F, Sixth Iowa Cavalry, and served in that organization until October 17, 1865, when he was mustered out with company.

The following is a synopsis of evidence heretofore filed in the office, with a view to removal of the charge of desertion:

Henry A. Paus states that on the breaking out of the rebellion he had recently become a citizen of the United States, and was inexperienced in the military service; that he enlisted in Company K, Nineteenth Illinois Volunteers, and, after a few months' service, was stricken down with fever, and was sick for many months; that he was sent home on sick furlough, and when it expired he was too ill and feeble to return, and being badly posted in the geography and laws of the country, he did not know how to act. Upon his partial recovery, he was informed that a cavalry regiment was being organized, and believing that he could render effective service in that branch, and knowing that he could not serve as a foot soldier, he enlisted in Company F, Sixth Iowa Cavalry.

Mrs. Anna Paus, widow of Louis Paus, deceased (mother of Henry A.), swore that when Henry A. came home on furlough, in the spring of 1862, he was very sick and low with a fever, from which he did not recover for several months; although anxious to return, he was physically unable to do so.

Dr. Louis Verget certified that Paus was under his treatment, suffering from malarial fever, in the summer of 1862.

Albert Heller, formerly private, Company K, Nineteenth Illinois Volunteers, swore that he went home with Paus in April, 1862, both having sick furloughs, and that it was impossible for Paus to "get back to the command in time."

On October 14, 1884, the attorney in the case (Hon. J. Ambler Smith, Washington, D. C.) was informed that the Secretary of War, upon careful consideration of the case, was of the opinion that the recent act of Congress, in respect to the removal of the charge of desertion, was intended by Congress, while increasing the Secretary's power in some respects, to indicate all the cases which in the opinion of Congress it was proper for him to act upon favorably; that it is not provided that the charge of desertion may be removed from the record of a soldier who deserted while on sick leave and then enlisted in another command; that the statute provides for his return to his own command as soon as the physical disability was removed; that this case is not, therefore, within the statutes, and the charge can not be removed; the action of the applicant was desertion, under the law. It is proper to say that his act does not appear to have come from a desire to avoid rendering military service, or from any improper motive. It is a case in which the relief would be granted if it were not considered to be beyond the lawful power of the Department.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. C. DRUM,
Adjutant-General.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

It would appear from all the evidence that this man was a good and faithful soldier; that he served until broken down by sickness, on account of which he went home on sick furlough. He did not recover as soon as expected, and being too ill and feeble to go back to his command, as well as ignorant of the laws and the country, he having only recently come to America, he did not return. As soon as he was able he assisted in the organization of a cavalry regiment, Company F, Sixth Iowa Cavalry, and served therein three years, until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged. He served in all nearly four years without receiving any bounty, and was during that time four times promoted and twice wounded.

The report of the War Department shows that this is in no sense anything more than a mere technical desertion; that it was rather the result of ignorance and because he thought he could render more effective service in a cavalry regiment than he could on foot, and "not from any improper motive." The Department would grant the relief if they had the power, and consider it a proper case for such action.

Your committee are of opinion that this soldier was not a deserter in fact, nor guilty thereof in any moral sense, but his case yet falls, technically, within that class under the application of the 50th Article of War, which reads as follows:

"No non-commissioned officer or soldier shall enlist himself in any other regiment, troop, or company without a regular discharge from the regiment, troop, or company in which he last served, on penalty of being reputed a deserter and suffering accordingly."

This article reproduces one of the earliest of the rules and regulations adopted for the government of the British army, and was no doubt the outgrowth of feudal customs. It is not now, if indeed it has ever been, strictly applicable to our service in the sense in which it was intended to apply. The leaving of one organization and enlistment in another constitutes technical desertion, but it is in no sense a desertion from the service or what is understood in military parlance as desertion of the flag.

This case does not come within the provisions of the act of August 7, 1882, as this soldier enlisted in another command instead of returning to his old regiment.

Your committee, after a careful review of the whole case, believe that this act will do justice to a brave soldier, and therefore report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, it appears that this young man enlisted and served during the war, and that there was simply a change of regiment. He probably acted in ignorance of the law, and I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. OATES. I object.

O. F. ADAMS.

Mr. SKINNER. I move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9868) for the relief of O. F. Adams, and that it be now put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $1,450 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay O. F. Adams, of Washington, N. C., for services rendered the Government during the war between the States.

The report from the Committee on War Claims (by Mr. REID, of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The evidence, consisting of the affidavits of the claimant, O. F. Adams, and R. C. Windley, William Ebon, John Albert, and Thomas D. Smaw, shows that on the 1st day of May, 1862, the Federal forces took possession of the jail in the town of Washington, N. C., and used it is a military prison from that day until May 3, 1864, and during all that time, under orders of the Federal officers in command at that place, the claimant (O. F. Adams) acted as jailer and keeper of the said military prison, attending to the prisoners there confined and performing all the duties pertaining to the position of jailer faithfully under promises from the commanding officers that he should be fully paid for his services; and again, in August, 1865, the said jail was taken charge of by the Freedmen's Bureau, and used as a prison until January, 1866, and during all this time the claimant was employed by the officer in charge of said bureau at that place, for which services he has never received any compensation.

From the evidence, your committee find that O. F. Adams served the United States Government in the capacity of jailer twenty-nine months, and that he is justly entitled to receive as compensation therefor the sum of $50 per month.

In conformity to these findings, your committee report the accompanying substitute, and recommend that it pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BURROWS. I observe from the reading of the bill that it proposes to make an appropriation for services rendered "during the war between the States."

Mr. SKINNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not remember any such conflict; I do not know what war that was.

Mr. SKINNER. Well, sir; it was the war between what are now known as the Southern States and the United States.

Mr. BURROWS. I supposed that the war referred to was a conflict between the National Government on the one side——

Mr. SKINNER. That is it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I call for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. It has already been read, but will be read again, if there be no objection.

The bill was again read.

Mr. REED. No bill containing that language ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. I object.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SCRANTON, PA.

Mr. SCRANTON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4241) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa.," approved July 27, 1882.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORRISON. I object.

NICHOLAS LEVEMBER.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 7506) for the payment of pension money to Nicholas Levember was some time ago erroneously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. If there be no objection, that committee will be discharged, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

REPORT ON TRADE GUILDS, ETC.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, submitted a report; which was read, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 10, 1887.

Mr. BARKSDALE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

"Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives —— thousand copies of the volume of reports from the consuls of the United States on the trade guilds of Europe and the laws and regulations by which they are governed, published by the Department of State in 1885."

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution, report it back to the House amended so as to read as follows:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed, with pamphlet covers, 7,000 copies of the volume of reports from the consuls of the United States on the trade guilds of Europe and the laws and regulations by which they are governed, published by the Department of State in the year 1885; 5,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate."

And they recommend the passage of the resolution as so amended. The estimated cost is $1,606.15.

The substitute reported by the committee was agreed to, and the resolution, as amended, adopted.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. CALDWELL. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the bill with reference to the electoral count.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate agree to the amendments of the House numbered 1 and 2.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House numbered 3 with an amendment, to wit: On page 3, line 30, insert in the sentence proposed by the House to be inserted in the bill, after the word "been," and before the word "certified," the word "lawfully;" and that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House numbered 4, with an amendment, to wit: In lieu of the words stricken out by the House insert the following: "but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified;" and that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House numbered 5, with an amendment, to wit: In lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out and to be inserted insert as follows: "the two Houses shall concurrently decide were cast by lawful electors appointed in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State. But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted;" and that the House agree to the same.

ANDREW J. CALDWELL,
JOHN R. EDEN,
W. C. COOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. F. HOAR,
GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
JAMES L. PUGH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The statement of the House conferees which accompanies this report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: The effect of the House amendment numbered 1 is simply to correct a clerical error which omitted the article "a" before the word "controversy," and its effect is simply to restore it and preserve the sense of the sentence.

Amendment numbered 2: Amendment numbered 2 was put upon the bill by the House, and strikes out the words, in lines 20 and 21, "and the names of the persons, if any, elected," the effect of which is to prevent the President of the Senate from doing more than announcing the state of the vote as ascertained and delivered to him by the tellers; and such announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice-President.

Amendment numbered 3: The amendment of the House of Representatives was the insertion in lines 37, 38, 39, after the word "State," in line 37, the words "which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been certified to according to section 3 of this act," and striking out the words in lines 40 and 41 "except by the affirmative votes of both Houses." The word "lawfully" is to be inserted after the words "has been," in line 39. And the effect of the amendment is to insure the count of the lawful electoral votes from any State from which but one return has been received.

In addition, there are inserted the words "but the two Houses concurrently may reject votes which have not been regularly given by certified electors." The effect is to express in words what is of clear implication by the words preceding, thus leaving nothing to doubtful construction.

Taken as a whole this amendment will insure the counting of lawfully certified votes of States, objections of a Senator or a Representative to the contrary notwithstanding.

Amendment numbered 4: This amendment, as reported from the conferees, is a remodeling of the language of the House amendment, so as to clear up any ambiguity in the section and define accurately the meaning of Congress as to the decision of all questions as to counting the votes of States from which there are more than one return, or paper purporting to be a return, and when there has been no determination of the question in the States by making certain the counting of votes cast by lawful electors appointed by the laws of the State.

It takes the concurrent votes of both Houses, deciding that the votes are not lawful votes, in order to reject them. And, in the case of the two Houses disagreeing, then the electors whose appointment has been certified by the executive of the State shall be counted.

The general effect of all these amendments, and of the bill as reported to the House, is to provide for the decision of all questions that may arise as to its electoral vote to the State itself; and where, for any reason, that fails, then the Houses circumscribe their power to the minimum under any circumstances to disfranchise a State, and such result can only happen when the State shall fail to provide the means for the final and conclusive decision of all controversies as to her vote.

Mr. CALDWELL. I move the adoption of the conference report, and on that motion I call for the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to inquire whether this conference report has been acted on by the Senate.

Mr. CALDWELL. It must first be acted on here.

Mr. BURROWS. Then it has not been acted on by the Senate?

Mr. CALDWELL. Not yet.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not desire to retard action on this matter, but it is a very important subject, and I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether he has any objection to allowing the report to be printed in the RECORD and the question to go over until to-morrow morning. Of course, when a report is read in this way, there is little opportunity for its careful examination.

Mr. CALDWELL. This subject has already been fully considered and discussed; I think it best to ask for immediate action. I insist on the motion for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House, 30 minutes are allowed for debate; 15 minutes in support of the report, and 15 minutes in opposition to it. If no gentleman wishes to take the floor, the Chair will submit the question to the House.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. CALDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FORT SCOTT, KANS.

Mr. DIBBLE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1386) for the completion of a public building at Fort Scott, Kans., having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1, strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert the word "forty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
N. D. WALLACE,
W. H. WADE,
Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM MAHONE,
P. B. PLUMB,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement accompanying the conference report, under the rules, was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1386) for the completion of a public building at Fort Scott, Kans., present the following statement, in accordance with the rules, to accompany the conference report:

The bill, as it came from the Senate, provided for an increase of $50,000, making the total appropriation for Fort Scott, Kans., $100,000. The House amended by striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty-five," which would make the total appropriation $75,000. The effect of the conference report, if agreed to, will be an increase of $40,000 instead of "fifty-thousand" proposed by the Senate, and "twenty-five thousand" proposed by the House.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
N. D. WALLACE,
W. H. WADE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FEES FOR PASSPORTS.

The SPEAKER. A bill (S. 3014) relative to fees for passports was erroneously referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. If there be no objection, that committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is the call of committees for reports of bills of a private nature.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 1530) for the relief of the Merchants' National Bank of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH GLASSBRENER AND MARY GLASSBRENER.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10093) for the relief of Elizabeth Glassbrener and Mary Glassbrener; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REPORTED FAVORABLY.

BILLINGS AND COOKE CITY RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. PEEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 9677) to authorize the Billings, Clark's Fork and Cooke City Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Crow Indian reservation, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills embraced in the special order adopted to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

WRECK OF THE ASHUELOT.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special order adopted this morning. The first business in order is the unfinished business, the title of the bill involved in which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 250) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Ashuelot.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MARTIN], upon which the House was dividing.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to make a brief statement before the vote is taken.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, in justice to the bill, I think the gentleman from Alabama should be allowed that privilege, and that I should be allowed a few moments for a reply.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, since the House last had this bill under consideration I have received a letter from Mr. Entwistle, stating all the facts of the case, and I now ask that that letter may be read by the Clerk, for the information of the House.

The letter was read, as follows:

UNITED STATES STEAMSHIP MINNESOTA,
New York, January 11, 1887.

SIR: I noticed by the report of the late debate in the House on the Ashuelot relief bill that you took a great interest in my behalf by endeavoring to have my name inserted in the bill so as to give me the benefit of its provisions along with the rest of the officers of that ill-fated vessel.

Allow me to sincerely thank you for your kindness, which shall ever be remembered, and at the same time to make a statement of the facts of the case for your further information. On the 18th of February, 1883, at 4.20 a. m., I heard the hurried signal to stop the engines, followed by a great commotion on deck, which led me to believe that something was wrong, when I immediately started for the engine-room, but before reaching there the ship had struck a rock with a tremendous crash. To ascertain whether or no the breach was between the engine-room bulkheads I had the floor-plates raised, and finding no water in the bilges, I concluded that the breach must be forward of the fire-room bulkhead. At this moment I went on deck and reported to the commanding officer that the engine and fire-room bilges were clear of water, when I was informed by him that the ship had struck forward of the bulkhead, and that the ship was making water very fast. Being unable to use the forward steam-pump to clear the forward compartment of water, nothing could be done but await events, which culminated at the expiration of forty minutes from the time the ship struck.

When the captain gave the order "All hands abandon ship" I was at his side, when I immediately proceeded to the engine-room and ordered all officers and men to their boats, and before leaving my department I saw every man on deck, and so reported the fact to the commanding officer.

All these facts were proved by evidence before the court of inquiry as ordered by Admiral Clitz by order of the Secretary of the Navy, and before the general court, the former having exonerated me from all blame in connection with the loss of the ship. I was also honorably acquitted by the first decision of the general court, which decision was not approved of by Admiral P. Crosby, who had a short time previously relieved Admiral Clitz in command of the squadron, but was returned for reconsideration; and after some fifteen or twenty minutes' deliberation I was found guilty of "neglect of duty," and sentenced to one year's suspension from duty and to retain my present number on the register during that time.

It appears, and was afterwards shown, that the charge of neglect of duty against me was based upon the loss of one of my men, although the man was not on watch at the time the ship struck, nor had he been in the fire-room for four hours previous to the sinking of the ship, but met his fate in the same manner as the other ten poor fellows did whom no one is held responsible for.

If not for the decision of that court I would have received my promotion thirteen months ago, which in itself is sufficient punishment, to say nothing of the length of time that must still elapse before I am promoted, after an honorable and creditable service of twenty-five years in the United States Navy.

Very sincerely, yours,

JAMES ENTWISTLE,
Passed Assistant Engineer, U. S. Navy.

Hon. J. M. MARTIN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MARTIN. After a very careful examination into all the facts of the case, it seems to me that if there ever was an instance in which a man should be allowed to share in the relief given to others involved, this is the case and this is the man. The facts of the case are very simple, and I think that when they are again brought to the attention of the House the House will not be unwilling to let this man's name be inserted, and to permit him to share in the bounty that is granted to these officers who have lost everything without any fault on their part. In addition to the statements which I made the other day, I wish to say that I am sustained in those statements by the report made to the House in the Forty-eighth Congress by Mr. WISE, then and now a member of this House. The officer in command of the vessel was court-martialed upon three charges—drunkenness on duty, improperly hazarding the vessel under his command so that she was run upon a rock and lost, and neglect of duty. The vessel went down, as Mr. Entwistle states in this letter, within forty minutes after she struck the rock. There was, therefore, no time for those on board to save any of their possessions, and everything went to the bottom with the vessel. This was due to carelessness on the part of the commander, who was court-martialed and dismissed from the Navy. Mr. Entwistle was a passed assistant engineer. He came and reported to the commander that his department was clear; that there was nobody there to be lost. After that, a man who, as he states this morning in the letter which has been read here, was not immediately connected with his department, and who had not been on duty for hours, went back into that department for the purpose of bringing out something which belonged to him, and there lost his life, without any fault upon the part of Mr. Entwistle.

The report of the first court-martial, which was held under the direction of Rear-Admiral Clitz, was not approved by Admiral Crosby, who had succeeded to the command of the squadron, and the matter was re-referred. Then it was that the court reached the conclusion that the commander of the vessel had been guilty of this misconduct, and he was court-martialed and dismissed from the Navy. The court also declared that the two persons whose names I am now seeking to have put into this bill were guilty, and recommended that one should be reprimanded by the Secretary of the Navy, and that the other, Mr. Entwistle, whose letter has been read here, should be suspended for twelve months, receiving leave-of-absence pay during that time and retaining his number.

Mr. LONG. Found that they were guilty of what?

Mr. MARTIN. Guilty of neglect of duty. Now it turns out that the charge of neglect of duty, so far as Mr. Entwistle is concerned, grew out of the loss of this individual, who, without his knowledge, had gone back into his department.

If Mr. Entwistle had failed in his duty in that respect, and so had allowed this man to lose his life without any fault on his own part, the punishment inflicted was not commensurate with such an offense; but the fact is that Mr. Entwistle was not guilty of anything of the kind. That is to say he was not responsible for the death of the man, as is shown by the report of the committee, which was made after a most careful examination of the facts. Here is what Mr. WISE, a member of the committee in the Forty-eighth Congress, stated for the committee in his report:

It is proper to add, in justice to these two officers, that the finding of the court was that the evidence adduced did not sustain the allegation that the lives of the officers and men were imperiled by their neglect of duty.

Mr. Chairman, I am simply asking that this man, who lost everything, who has been punished, as I conceive, without any crime on his part, but who, if guilty of all that the court-martial found him guilty of, has been punished fully and completely, who has been put back thirteen months in his promotion, who has lost the difference between leave-of-absence pay and his regular pay for twelve months—I am only insisting that this man, who lost all that he had, just as the others lost all that they had, should be permitted to come in and share this bounty which the Government is giving to these unfortunate sufferers by the wreck of that vessel.

Mr. PETERS. How does it happen that the court-martial found him guilty of this offense if the evidence did not show that he was guilty?

Mr. MARTIN. They found him guilty simply of neglect of duty. They did not find that he was responsible for the loss of life. They first found him not guilty. The case was sent back to the court, and, on re-examination, they found him guilty of neglect of duty.

Mr. LONG. What was that neglect of duty?

Mr. MARTIN. What that neglect of duty was does not appear; but it is stated in the report of the committee that the neglect of duty did not imperil the lives of the officers and men.

I take the liberty of publishing with my remarks the report made on this subject in the Forty-eighth Congress by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] on behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7764) for the compensation of certain officers of the Navy for losses of their property by the loss of the United States steamer Ashuelot, have considered the same, and report:

That the United States steamer Ashuelot left the harbor of Amoy, China, on February 17, 1883, for Swatow, China, and shortly after 4 o'clock on the following morning was run upon some rocks off the southeast end of East Lamock Island, and in consequence thereof was lost. The fog was very thick at the time of her striking, and the sinking of the ship thereafter was so sudden that the officers and men were barely able to save themselves. In fact, 11 of the crew went down with her and were lost. The survivors were able to save none of their personal effects, except such articles of clothing as they were wearing at the time of the disaster. By order from Rear-Admiral J. M. B. Clitz, a court of inquiry was convened on board the United States flag-ship Richmond, at Hong-Kong, China, February 26, 1883, to inquire into the circumstances attending the loss of the United States steamer Ashuelot, on the Asiatic station. After diligent and thorough investigation and mature deliberation on the testimony recorded on the trial, this court reached the conclusion—

"That the loss of the said vessel was mainly due to the fact of want of caution on the part of Commander H. E. Mullan, United States Navy, then commanding the said vessel, in that no specific directions for speed were given in the night orders of the 17th of February, and that the dangerous Lamock Islands were steamed for in foggy weather, and with a possibility of variable currents; and that the loss of the said vessel did not occur through the instrumentality or the neglect or inattention of any other officer or officers, or any other person of the said United States steamer Ashuelot."

Afterwards Commander Horace E. Mullan and Passed Assistant Engineers Robert R. Leitch and James Entwistle, who were officers serving on the Ashuelot at the time of the disaster, were arraigned and tried before a general court-martial which convened May 2, 1883, on board the United States flag-ship Richmond, at Hong-Kong, China, by order of Rear-Admiral Peirce Crosby, commanding the United States naval force on the Asiatic station. There were three charges against Commander Mullan, as follows:

"1. Drunkenness on duty.

"2. Improperly hazarding the vessel under his command, in consequence of which she was run upon a rock and lost.

"3. Neglect of duty."

He was found guilty of all three charges, and sentenced "to be dismissed from the United States naval service," which sentence, having been approved by Rear-Admiral Crosby, was on the 6th day of July, 1883, confirmed by the President. It thus appears that the responsibility for the loss of the Ashuelot has been placed upon Commander Mullan by two courts. As to the two passed assistant engineers mentioned above, it is sufficient to say that each was found guilty of "neglect of duty," consisting in a failure to see the officers and men of the engineer's department, who were at the time in the engine-room and fire-room, sent up from below after all hands had been called to abandon ship, the Ashuelot being then in a sinking condition; and that Passed Assistant Leitch was sentenced "to be publicly reprimanded by the honorable Secretary of the Navy," and that Passed Assistant Entwistle was sentenced "to be suspended from duty for one year on leave of absence pay, and to retain his present number in his grade for that period." It is proper to add, in justice to these two officers, that the finding of the court was that the evidence adduced did not sustain the allegation that the lives of the officers and men were imperiled by their neglect of duty. The proceedings, findings, and sentences in their cases were approved by Rear-Admiral Crosby, who convened the court by which they were tried and condemned, and the sentence in each case was executed.

With these facts before them, the committee do not think that the proposed relief should be extended to Commander Horace E. Mullan, and Passed Assistant Engineers Leitch and Entwistle; as to the first-named there can be no doubt, because he was adjudged to be responsible for the disaster by which the losses were occasioned. His name is omitted from the bill, and therefore it is unnecessary to say more in reference to him. And as to the two engineers, your committee are of the opinion that they also ought to be excluded from the provisions of the bill because found guilty of neglect of duty at a time of great peril; when it was incumbent upon them to be more than ordinarily active, prompt, brave, and vigilant. Your committee believe that it would furnish a bad precedent to remunerate them for their losses. As to the other officers of the Ashuelot, it appears that they were guilty of no neglect of duty, and that the amounts proposed to be paid for their losses are not in excess thereof.

Your committee therefore report back the bill (H. R. 7764) with the recommendation that it do pass with the amendment incorporated therein as reported.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the gentleman from New Jersey being heard in response to the gentleman from Alabama? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, having been directed by the Committee on Claims to report this bill favorably to the House, it is my duty, as I conceive, to lay before this Committee of the Whole all the facts. When I have done this, my duty and my responsibility in this matter are at an end. It will be necessary for me to restate a few facts which were stated on Friday last, when there was a very small attendance in the House.

This bill was originally introduced, as I understand—and if I make any misstatement of fact, I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MARTIN] to correct me as I go along—the bill was originally introduced in the Forty-eighth Congress, and at that time contained the names of two officers whose names the gentleman from Alabama now desires to have inserted in this bill. When that bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs by the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] it was reported with an amendment striking out the names of these two engineers. The bill as introduced in the present Congress did not contain those names. No one came before our committee to urge the claims of these two gentlemen, to have their names inserted in the bill. Nothing was heard from them until last Friday, when they came in with this proposed amendment, desiring to have their names placed in this bill, thus seriously endangering, in my judgment, the passage of the bill during this Congress.

The facts, as I gather them from the papers (for the papers are the only source of information which I have), are that these two officers were tried by court-martial, and were found guilty of neglect of duty.

One of them comes in to-day with a letter of his own, undertaking to explain the circumstances. If that letter tells the truth, the finding of the court-martial was erroneous. It is for this Committee of the Whole to say whether it will reverse the finding of that court-martial upon the ex parte statement of the convicted person.

In the first place, allow me to say that while this amendment proposes to insert the names of these two gentlemen, one of them does not even come here with any statement whatever; and as to him the finding of the court-martial remains unchallenged. Why should his name be put in? As to the other, we have his own unsupported statement of the facts. If he was not guilty, the only way for us to say so is to have before us all the testimony produced before that court-martial and review it carefully and judicially. I undertake to say from my observation that no officer of the Navy is convicted by any court of inquiry composed of naval officers without sufficient proof to warrant the conviction.

Mr. WISE. The gentleman will allow me to state that the report which I made upon this case in the last Congress from the Committee on Naval Affairs was the unanimous report of that committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am obliged to the gentleman from Virginia for the statement that the report made by him from the Committee on Naval Affairs in the last Congress was unanimous; and I will add that the report which I made in this Congress from the Committee on Claims is also unanimous.

Mr. WISE. I will say further that we had before us all the proceedings of the court-martial.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am further obliged to the gentleman for the information—which I repeat to the Committee of the Whole—that at the time of the finding by the Committee on Naval Affairs they had before them the whole proceedings of this court-martial. It is only justice to that committee to say that the inference is, and no doubt the fact is, that they carefully examined the whole of the record of the court-martial.

Mr. MARTIN. The gentleman will allow me to inquire whether the Committee on Naval Affairs, in reporting this bill, did not distinctly state that the loss of the lives of the officers and men was not due to the conduct of these two men?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is true, as the gentleman has already said in the course of his remarks; but the committee also say—I quote the exact language of that unanimous report from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

As to the two engineers, your committee are of the opinion that they also ought to be excluded from the provisions of the bill, because found guilty of neglect of duty at a time of great peril; when it was incumbent upon them to be more than ordinarily active, prompt, brave, and vigilant.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment upon two grounds: First, that we ought not in this way to reverse the finding of that court-martial; and, secondly, that these gentlemen do not come here with so strong a case as to entitle them to endanger the relief which is granted by this bill to these other and deserving claimants.

The question recurred on Mr. MARTIN'S amendment.

Mr. MARTIN demanded a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 12, noes 54.

Mr. MARTIN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. MARTIN and Mr. BUCHANAN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 13, noes 72.

Mr. MARTIN. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Senate bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill (H. R. 2110) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Ashuelot was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie upon the table.

H. A. MYERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (S. 390) for the relief of H. A. Myers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Paymaster-General of the United States Army be, and he is hereby, required to cause to be paid, out of any money appropriated, or which may hereafter be appropriated, for the payment of the Army of the United States, to H. A. Myers, late a private in the Eleventh Kansas Volunteers, a sum that shall be equal to the pay of a private soldier from the 17th day of September, 1862, to July 7, 1864, the date of his discharge from the service of the United States, deducting therefrom any amount that may have been paid to him as such private soldier and any amount that may be due from him to the Government.

The report (by Mr. GEDDES) was read, as follows:

The committee find the facts to be as stated in Senate report No. 47, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, which report is hereto annexed and made a part of this report, and is as follows:

"Hiram A. Myers was enrolled and mustered in September 17, 1862, as private in Company D, Eleventh Kansas Cavalry, and served honorably to July 7, 1864. The muster-out roll of his company, dated September 13, 1865, says:

"'This man enlisted in good faith, and served faithfully as a soldier from enlistment to July 7, 1864. His old enlistment papers were lost, new ones were made out, and upon examination he was rejected by T. Sinks, surgeon, board of examiners of District N, Kansas, July 7, 1864, when he was dropped from the company rolls. There is due him for use and risk of horse and equipments from date of last payment to June 20, 1864, and he is indebted to the United States, for horse equipments, $31. He was last paid by Major Bowen to February 29, 1864.'

"The Adjutant-General says:

"'There would appear to be no objection to this bill becoming a law.'

"The Secretary of War, in his letter to the committee touching this case, says:

"'The legislation proposed by the bill (S. 160) is approved by this Department.'

"Your committee therefore, upon examining all the facts in the case, recommend the passage of this bill."

Your committee therefore adopt said Senate report as the report of this committee, and recommend that the bill (S. 390) do pass.

On motion of Mr. GEDDES, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HARRY I. TODD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 30) for the relief of Harry I. Todd, late keeper of the Kentucky penitentiary.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. We certainly should know something about it before doing that.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the report be read in this case before action is taken. When the bill was before the Committee on Claims I was of the opinion the income tax had been imposed on the salary of this officer, and therefore agreed to the report; but on careful examination I find the income which he returned while he was an officer of the State, namely, warden of the penitentiary, was the profit he made on the convict labor of the penitentiary. That changes, it seems to me, the nature of the case.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. What is the amount claimed?

Mr. SPRINGER. Thirty-five thousand dollars is the amount of income tax he desires to recover.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That would indicate his income was $350,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No; it runs through a series of years—$35,000 is the aggregate amount.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is the income tax on $350,000, amounting to $35,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is the aggregate amount for 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, and 1867.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The aggregate of his whole income during those years must have been $350,000 to produce that amount.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask for the reading of the report, and then will take the floor and make an explanation. It is just as the chairman of the committee thought it was when he agreed to the report, but it seems that a change of heart has come over him since.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not a change of heart, but the correction of a mistake.

The report (by Mr. BUCHANAN) was read, as follows:

This case seems to have been repeatedly considered by Congress, and the committee adopt the Senate report from the Committee on Finance, first session Forty-ninth Congress, which is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 127, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 30) for the relief of Harry I. Todd, late keeper of the Kentucky penitentiary, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

This case was reported favorably from the Finance Committee June 1, 1880; it was also reported favorably from the same committee February 5, 1885, and passed the Senate, but failed to pass the House of Representatives. As embodying the present views of the committee, we beg leave to refer to and make part of this report Senate Report No. 683, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, and recommend the passage of the bill.

"The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1628) for the relief of Harry I. Todd, late keeper of the Kentucky penitentiary, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

"Harry I. Todd was duly elected by the General Assembly of Kentucky keeper of the State penitentiary, and held that position from March 9, 1863, until March 1, 1871.

"He was elected under, and his duties, liabilities, and rights were prescribed by, chapter 922, enacted in 1862, and chapter 2045, enacted in 1867, of the laws of that State.

"He received no compensation except such profits as he might make in selling the articles manufactured by the labor of the convicts, over and above their support, the cost of materials, &c., and certain sums which he was required to pay into the treasury of the State by the laws under which he was elected.

"Chapter 922 of the Laws of Kentucky declares:

"'The keeper of the penitentiary shall hold his office for four years.

* * * * * * *

"'If the keeper of the penitentiary fail or refuse to comply with the obligations imposed on him by this act, or shall be guilty of any malfeasance in office, the governor shall have full power, and it shall be his duty, to remove him forthwith.

* * * * * * *

"'In the event of the death or removal from office of the keeper of the penitentiary, the governor, secretary of state, and auditor shall make a contract with a suitable person to take charge of the penitentiary according to the provisions of this act until the next ensuing meeting of the General Assembly, and until a new keeper be elected and qualified.'

"These sections and various sections of chapter 2045, Laws of Kentucky, 1867, described the keeper as an officer subject to the control of the State. He was required to and gave a bond as an officer to perform the duties of his office as required by law.

"As keeper of the penitentiary he was required by the statute to keep the convicts at labor, and for this purpose the State furnished buildings, machinery, &c., for the manufacture of certain articles, among them bagging, wagons, chairs, &c.

"While in the performance of his duties as keeper from 1863 to 1869 he was called upon by the United States internal-revenue officials to pay taxes on articles manufactured by the convicts and sold by him. The taxes were paid under protest, and a claim for refunding the amount paid was duly made to the Internal-Revenue Bureau. The papers submitted showed beyond a doubt that the articles were made exclusively by convict labor, and on being presented to the law officer of the Treasury, Hon. W. H. Smith, Solicitor, the claim was allowed July 27, 1879; but the Commissioner thereupon submitted the case to C. P. James, and on his opinion the claim was rejected.

"The present Commissioner of Internal Revenue declines to reopen the case, under the rules of the Department that a case once decided by a former Commissioner cannot be reopened by a succeeding Commissioner, unless in certain contingencies, which the Commissioner does not think exist in the present case.

"The amounts of the taxes exacted by the United States officials and paid into the United States Treasury are as follows:

"STATEMENT OF TAXES ASSESSED AND PAID.

For 1863-'64. For manufacturing and sales of bagging and chairs, and tax for slaughtering animals to feed convicts	$2,320 25
1865. Same, and manufacturer's license for each employment	6,691 64
1866. Same	17,751 99
1867. Same	4,481 00
1868. Same	3,761 69
	35,006 57

"Your committee are of the opinion that whether Mr. Todd was liable to pay any part or all of the sums exacted is a question which should be decided by the courts. The committee therefore report back the accompanying bill, with an amendment, and authorizing Mr. Todd to institute an action against the United States in the Court of Claims to recover the amount of said internal-revenue taxes alleged to have been improperly collected from him, and recommend its passage."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey whatever time he may want.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this report was made by myself from the Committee on Claims, and with the unanimous action of the committee, I deem it necessary to say a word in explanation after what has been said by the chairman of the committee.

It appeared before the committee that Mr. Todd was keeper of the penitentiary of Kentucky, and that while such keeper the United States Government collected from him an income tax. Knowing the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, that such collection was illegal, the bill was ordered to be reported favorably. I do not hesitate to say that had it come to my notice this compensation was not by salary or commission, but, as alleged now by the chairman of the committee, from profits on convict-made goods, I would for one have declined to vote for the report. I do not hesitate to say further that if this bill should pass and this question should go to the Court of Claims under that state of facts, Mr. Todd will receive nothing whatever at the hands of that court.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Has this claimant paid any greater income tax working convict labor than other citizens employing free labor?

Mr. BUCHANAN. But as the facts were presented to the committee, this was a public officer, and as such not liable to the payment of any income tax upon his compensation; and when any other individual presents a case of this kind the committee will, in my opinion, do right to consider it on its merits.

I deemed it simple justice to myself to say as much as I have with reference to this matter. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is much more familiar with the law of Kentucky governing their affairs than I am, and I yield the floor to him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this is purely a question of law. There is no dispute whatever about the facts, and it is simply a question as to what, under the internal-revenue law and the law of the State of Kentucky, ought to be the rights of this applicant.

In 1862 or '63 Mr. Todd was elected keeper of the penitentiary of Kentucky, an office created by the laws of that State, which office is filled by election by the Legislature for a given term of years, to wit, four years; but there was no salary paid to the incumbent of the office under the name of salary; the only payment or allowance of compensation was a certain proportion of the profits of the labor of convicts in the penitentiary, under the supervision of a board of inspectors and the sinking-fund commissioners. A certain amount was paid by the keeper to the State, and the remainder, arising from the profits on the work done, was the sole compensation of the keeper.

He was nominated in the law as officer; he was elected by the Legislature, and was removable for certain causes by the governor, and all he could do and all that he did was in accordance with the prescribed provisions of the law or the rules and regulations made by the board of sinking-fund commissioners of the State.

The amount of tax that he paid under the internal-revenue law was not the income tax only, but it was claimed by the collector of internal revenue that he was liable for the manufacturer's tax on every form of manufactured article produced in that penitentiary. In the penitentiary of that State were manufactured chairs and cabinet work of all kinds; there was a bagging factory, a bucket factory, wagon factory, and various other forms of industry, and on all of these it was claimed by the United States collector of internal revenue that he was responsible for taxes, not only for his own income tax but for the tax imposed on manufacturers of every single one of these separate forms of manufacturing carried on in the penitentiary. This tax he paid under a protest.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that it is improper for me to say, for I know this gentleman very well, the son-in-law as well as the stepson of the late John J. Crittenden, that he was a man intensely in favor of what was called in Kentucky at that time the Union; and he believed that he ought not to raise any question under the conditions then prevailing as to the propriety of this tax if it were possible by any means to avoid it. He was also a prosperous man at that time. The fortunes of life have gone against him, and he is now not a prosperous man, and he asks this Congress solely the privilege, not of any payment by it of the money which he had been required to pay into the Treasury, but simply the right to present this question of law to the Court of Claims, subject to an appeal to the Supreme Court, as to whether he ought under the law to have been compelled to pay those taxes.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case cited in 7 Wallace, has decided, and indubitably decided correctly, that the compensation an officer of the State receives for services rendered to the State was not taxable by the United States Government. It was the old principle which had been decided years before, that the compensation received by an officer of the United States for services rendered to the United States could not be taxed by the authority of the State.

The whole question, then, in this case to be presented to the court of the United States is was this person in the language of the decision of the Supreme Court an officer of the State, and was the compensation that he received by profits—his proportion of the profits of the labor of convicts—his compensation as an officer of the State. Undoubtedly, I can say as a Kentucky lawyer, that if it was a proposition to be decided by the Kentucky courts there is no question that he would be decided to be an officer of the State, and that this compensation was received as an officer of the State and for services rendered by him. That, Mr. Chairman, is the whole case; that is the sole question involved.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I feel constrained to oppose this bill because I think there is no equity in it. This man entered the field of industry and saw proper to employ convict labor while the internal-revenue laws were in force. Others entered the field of industry and saw proper to employ free labor, and they were subject to the same provisions of law precisely, and, if they followed the same pursuits, must have paid exactly the same amount under like circumstances and like incomes. Now the only privilege that is claimed for this man over an employer of free labor in open market is that he claims to have been an officer under the Government of the State of Kentucky, and hence was not liable under the internal-revenue law to pay this tax. I claim that there is no equity in that position. It is a mere technical advantage he had, if any, in that sense. I think the correct policy is, in this country, to tax incomes. All ought to be taxed over a given amount. In this case the amount was paid long years ago, and paid by an individual who was receiving enormous profits as compared with those employing free labor. I am opposed to the whole convict-labor system, particularly to rewards for such labor; and this would be nothing but a reward to a person engaged in employing that class of labor over and above his brother who employs free labor.

I think the bill ought not to pass.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa a question as to the matter of fact. Was this man employing this labor and obtaining the profits of it, or did they go to the State?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. They went to himself.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I beg the gentleman's pardon; they did not. The State of Kentucky elected a keeper of the penitentiary. The convicts were at work inside the penitentiary; the machinery belonged partly to the State, partly to the keeper. The sinking-fund commissioners lent $30,000 to the keeper to run the business, and he was obliged to keep those prisoners—to feed them, to clothe them—and to pay to the State a sum of money that varied according to the particular statute that might be in force.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Only a deduction from his profits.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Sometimes $8,000, sometimes $16,000; more in one year, less in another.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. In proportion to his profits.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No; it was a fixed sum he had to pay.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It came out of his profits.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It might come out of his losses.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But you do not say it did. It was a tax he paid to the State of Kentucky, and he saw proper, with the internal-revenue law pending over him and the law of the State of Kentucky in operation, to make this contract and employ this convict labor; and I think he ought to pay his share of the burden. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman from New Jersey will allow me, I will say that Mr. Todd never employed this convict labor at all. The convicts were in the penitentiary at work, and by the law of Kentucky they were confined in the penitentiary at hard labor. They were obliged, under the law of that State, to labor. A keeper was elected by the Legislature and commissioned to supervise that labor which, by the sentence of the court, these prisoners had to perform; and all in the world this man had to do was to see that that labor was performed under his supervision; and out of the proceeds of the labor they were taken care of, not under his control, but under the supervision of a board of State officers; and out of the remainder of the proceeds the State was paid a certain sum, and if there was any remainder he got it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I do not care anything about the terms of the arrangement. These prisoners were under this man's supervision, and, less certain taxes, he got the profits of their labor. I use the term correctly when I say they were in his employment, or that he employed convict labor.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN], and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I feel bound to express my opinion that if the statement of fact now made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] had been made before the Committee on Claims this bill would never have been reported. Sum it up and it amounts to precisely this: This man took that institution and its labor and ran it and paid the State a gross sum varying from time to time, being greater or less as the statutes of that State provided. Was he not in business on his own hook? And if that be the case, how is he a State official? And why out of those profits which remained in his possession after enough had been taken out to feed and clothe these prisoners and enough to pay the State the rate agreed upon—why should there not be out of that sum an additional amount taken to pay the income tax.

The facts as they appeared before the committee—and I feel bound to say the gentlemen from Kentucky did not present those facts to the committee—the facts as they appeared before the committee justified the committee in believing this man was a State official, or at least that he was so colorably such that the question ought to be determined by the Court of Claims. But according to the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky as just now made it appears to me he is not even colorably a State official.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Did this manufacturer pay any greater tax than other manufacturers in the country at that time?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not know; I do not suppose he did. But I know and the gentleman from Missouri knows that we did not understand when the case was before the committee that this was a manufacturer.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I wish to ask another question in order that this matter may be understood. Is not this a question of limitation—whether we will remove the statute of limitations which runs against this party and send him to the court with an equitable claim?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN].

Mr. EDEN. Upon an examination of this report it occurs to me that this is not an income tax, but it is a manufacturer's tax, just such as everybody else had to pay who was engaged in the same line of manufacture as Mr. Todd was. And I suppose under the internal-revenue laws, as they then existed, all persons engaged in similar work had to pay a similar tax, and that the amount of the tax was paid out of the price of the goods; when the goods were sold they got the money back; so that I cannot see injustice was done to this man unless the same injustice was done everybody else who was engaged in the business of manufacturing under the law as it then existed.

I would make the further suggestion in reference to this claim, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who had jurisdiction to pass upon it, has passed upon it, and has decided against Mr. Todd, and unless there is more merit in the claim than I can discover from this report, I do not think we ought even to refer it to the Court of Claims.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. I simply want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] a question. Why was it that this party did not pursue his remedy in the Court of Claims before the statute of limitations expired?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If I am correctly informed there was no remedy for him in the Court of Claims.

Mr. PETERS. Then the object of this bill is to give that court jurisdiction over a claim that it never had jurisdiction over.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am not prepared to say, because during those years I was not practicing much in the Court of Claims. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The income-tax law provided no tribunal to which an appeal could be taken from the decision of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The only way in which this man could have proceeded to recover was by paying the tax under protest, and then bringing suit in the civil court against the collector for the illegal exaction of taxes. That remedy he did not pursue.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to understand from some one who knows about it whether this party did not have the right to go to the Court of Claims to recover this income tax within a certain statutory time?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I suggest to the gentleman that if this man had not that right he had the right to file his application for a rebate or refund of the tax within a certain time.

Mr. STEELE. And he could go to the civil court and recover.

Mr. PETERS. I do not care to consume any more time.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to treat this case in a purely judicial manner. I do not know the claimant, but I would be glad to furnish him any relief to which he is entitled. I do not think, however, that the case presents such a state of facts as justifies us in even sending him to the Court of Claims. This tax levied upon him was on his income as a manufacturer, using the convict labor in the penitentiary of the State of Kentucky. Under the law in force at that time, before the tax could be imposed, the manufacturer had the right to deduct all of his expenses, all of the taxes that he had paid to the State of Kentucky, or to the United States, and those sums were doubtless deducted from the gross amount of his income before the sum was reached upon which the income tax was assessed. The law provided, I believe, that on all sums over $10,000 of income, 10 per cent. should be paid as the income tax. So it seems that during this period of four or five years this gentleman's income must have been quite large, as the aggregate of taxes that he paid amounted to more than $35,000.

Hence it appears that his net profits as a manufacturer, after deducting all taxes paid and all amounts paid to the State of Kentucky for the use of the prisoners, and also deducting his outlay for the subsistence of the prisoners, for raw material, &c., amounted during that period to over $350,000. Now, as this gentleman was engaged in the manufacture of chairs and other articles for sale, and as he probably sold them, because he carried on his business from year to year, I assume that, as these taxes were imposed and paid, he charged them up as a part of the cost of manufacture, and they were added to the price, so that when he sold the goods he actually got back this tax from the consumers. Therefore, the consumers having repaid him this tax, if we pass this bill and he is permitted to recover again, it will be simply a second recovery in a case in which the party has already been fully reimbursed. He must have charged up these taxes and expenses in that way, or else he probably could not have carried on the business, but would have been compelled to throw up his contract, because the income tax amounted to 10 per cent. upon his net income over and above a certain amount; and as he did go on with this business from year to year, the presumption is reasonable that he must have added these taxes to the price of his goods and recovered them from the consumers. For these, and for other reasons which have been stated by gentlemen who have spoken, I think this bill ought not to pass.

Mr. REED. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that it is quite doubtful whether it is within the power of a manufacturer to compel his customers to pay anything and everything he chooses to charge up. I should think that the price of an article in the market would depend somewhat on the competition that was encountered.

Mr. SPRINGER. It would depend on several things. One element would be competition, another would be the cost of production.

Mr. REED. Why do you assume, then, that this man must have got back the amount of these taxes from the consumer?

Mr. SPRINGER. I assume it just as I assume that an importer, when he pays a tax for importation, adds that tax to the cost of the goods and gets it back in the price which the consumer pays.

Mr. REED. Oh, that is a well-established fallacy. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, if the gentleman thinks that is a fallacy, I can very well understand how he fails to see that this manufacturer probably recovered the amount of these taxes when he sold his goods, and if the gentleman has such an idea of business as to think that an importer of manufactured goods can afford to pay the importers' tax and not recover it in the price which he exacts from the consumer, I can only say that his notions upon economic questions are such as require but little attention from this House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I confess I always have some hesitation in undertaking to answer an argument made in the name of the Government of the United States that it ought not to pay back money which it had no right to receive, because perhaps for some other reason the man to whom payment is proposed is not an object to whom justice should be meted out. If I understand the argument of my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], it is that, even if the Government received this money when it had no right to receive it, it ought to keep it, unless the injustice done can be shown to have been an injury to the man from whom the money was taken.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And you do not agree with the gentleman's corollary either, do you?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No, sir.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said before, this is a pure question of law. There is no question here as to whether convict labor ought or ought not to be employed. The question is simply a question of law. Was this man subject to that tax? And what we ask is that this Congress remit that question of law to the courts. No argument which has been offered on this floor answers that appeal. A citizen without means of redress comes to the door of Congress, and says: "An injustice has been done me in the name of the law; I ask that I may be permitted to go to the courts of law to have it determined whether such injustice was or was not done." No form of appeal to prejudice in regard to convict labor, no argument as to whether the tax improperly collected may have been added to the cost of production, is a fair and just answer to this appeal. My friend from Illinois, though he says he takes his position in a judicial spirit, demands that a man shall be condemned unheard. The gentleman, having in his hands the power to perpetuate the wrong, will not give an opportunity by opening his hand to see whether there has been a wrong or not.

Without assuming to be much of a lawyer, I affirm that this man was not a contractor, but an officer. He had to be elected by the votes of the Legislature of Kentucky; he had to be commissioned; he had to be qualified. He had not absolute control of the laborers whom he employed, but acted under the supervision and inspection of the State. He did not, therefore, occupy in any sense the relation of a manufacturer in the ordinary use of the term. He was an officer of the State, charged with certain duties. In accordance with the system adopted in that State—whether wise or unwise, I do not choose to argue—the convicts in the penitentiary are sentenced to confinement at hard labor, which they perform under rules and regulations prescribed by a board of officers appointed by the State. The persons thus convicted and sentenced to hard labor must be supervised by some one; and the mode adopted by the State—whether wise or unwise, is not a question here—was that a warden, called a keeper, should be elected, and should be charged with the payment for the supplies necessary to take care of them, and that his compensation should be somewhat dependent upon his mode of doing this.

Upon that compensation a tax has been levied. Now, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and under the broad line of demarkation between the States and the Government of the United States, the machinery of the one for governmental purposes can not be taxed by the other. Indubitably, this whole mode of conducting the penitentiary is a part of the machinery of the State government—is a means used by the State of Kentucky for the purpose of executing its criminal law. The question of law presented is simply this: Can the means thus adopted by the State be made subject to taxation by the United States? That is the sharp issue here. Are the means employed by a State for a purpose of this kind subject to taxation by the United States for any purpose? The Supreme Court has decided this question in the negative. That is the law of the land as laid down by the highest tribunal. This money has been paid in violation of that law. There is no escape from that conclusion, be it equity or unequity. I confess, however, I do not understand the equity which would require that the Government hold money which it has collected contrary to the law of the land. That is the whole of this case.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Chairman, I gather from this report, and from what has been stated on the floor of the House, this state of facts: In the State of Kentucky it was found necessary that the penitentiary convicts should have some directing head to apply their labor; and so a keeper of that penitentiary was elected. I assume that this position was not forced upon the citizen who accepted it, but that he desired it. I assume, in the next place, that he expected to be compensated. We are told by the gentleman who has just addressed the House, as well as by the report, that this man received his compensation in this way: First, it was provided that the convicts should be fed and clothed; next, that a certain sum should be paid to the State of Kentucky for the use of their labor; and then, as compensation for his services, this man was to receive what he could make in addition to the cost of keeping the convicts and the amount which he paid to the State. Is not that true?

The gentleman nods assent. If that be true, it is true he was both an officer and a manufacturer. I assume a man can be a contractor and a manufacturer on the one hand, and an officer of a State on the other.

But he did not pay this tax because he was an officer of a State; it was not made because he was the keeper of the penitentiary in the State of Kentucky, but because, having that convict-labor in his control, he, as a manufacturer of chairs and other furniture, made these articles and put them upon the market, and, as a result, after paying to the State of Kentucky what he had agreed to pay, he put the balance into his pockets as his profits, as one who had directed this labor.

Call it what you will, as a matter of fact I defy any casuist to get away from this conclusion and this result, that that man hired that labor from the State of Kentucky. If he lost, if he did not succeed as a business man, he got no compensation.

But what is the fact here? It seems he made about $350,000, and that, as income tax, he paid $35,000. If that be true, he must have made $350,000 by handling these convicts. When he went to sell his goods he went into the market as any other manufacturer of the United States did.

I do not agree with my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] in his conclusion that he could charge over whether the people wanted to buy or not. I know other manufacturers who were making fortunes at that time had to pay their income taxes. In that way he was on a par with the balance. When income taxes are laid all over the country on manufacturers, prices increase on goods. As a matter of fact the price of commodities rose as the taxes increased. Higher prices were paid for commodities. They could not so cheaply be produced.

But he had the advantage of cheap labor, and made $350,000. He was a citizen of the United States at that time, and was, like every other good citizen, bound to bear his proportion of the burdens of the Government. Now that he has failed since he paid that tax, to make his case an exception and to have refunded to him the amount he paid, I would remind gentlemen this will not end there, for there are other manufacturers who were engaged in business at the same time who paid income taxes and who have since failed, and they will also ask to have the income taxes paid by them during those years also refunded to them.

It strikes me when we consider the fact that this tax was not put upon this man as the keeper of the penitentiary in the State of Kentucky, but as a manufacturer who had made $350,000 out of this convict labor in pursuit of his occupation as a manufacturer, it is absurd we should give him any standing in this House by proposing to refund to him the income tax which he paid like every other citizen at the same time engaged in the same way.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 49.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do not pass.

The motion was agreed to.

A. A. THOMAS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (S. 391) for the relief of A. A. Thomas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to pay to A. A. Thomas, or his assigns, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $540, as a reimbursement for money paid by A. A. Thomas for the use of the United States while register of the United States land-office at Cawker City, Kans., and the further sum of $67.14, balance due said Thomas as compensation as such register for the quarters ending September 30, 1872, and March 31, 1875, respectively.

The report (by Mr. WARNER, of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The claimant, A. A. Thomas, in the years 1872 and 1873 was register of the land office at Cawker City, in the State of Kansas, known as the Cawker City or Northwestern land district in Kansas. Said district was created May 23, 1872 (U. S. Stats. 17, p. 157), out of territory formerly belonging to the Concordia or western land district of Kansas. The tract-books turned over to Mr. Thomas by the officers of the land office at Concordia were in an incomplete condition, there being nearly 8,000 entries made in the Concordia office, covering lands lying within that portion transferred to the Cawker City district which had never been posted on the tract-books, and were only designated by marks and numbers upon the official plats or maps. To avoid trouble and litigation to settlers, it became necessary to at once cause all the entries made as aforesaid at the Concordia office to be posted upon the tract-books in Cawker City office. This he did, employing a clerk for that purpose at $90 per month. The clerk so employed was engaged in said work from August 1, 1872, to January 31, 1873, inclusive, for which services Mr. Thomas paid of his own money $540, no part of which has been repaid him.

Your committee is of the opinion that the employment of said clerk by Mr. Thomas to perform said work was necessary, and that the amount paid for such services was reasonable.

He was not paid by the Department of Interior, for the reason that there was no statute authorizing the employment of a clerk for the purposes above indicated.

There also appears to be due Mr. Thomas a balance of $67.14 for fees and commissions earned by him and turned into the Treasury.

Your committee recommend that the Senate bill do pass.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. J. PULLIAM—ADVERSE REPORT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 605) for the relief of J. J. Pulliam, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas under the provisions of the act of June 16, 1864, certain claims were allowed and reported to Congress by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department, in 1882, for payment, including the claim of J. J. Pulliam's estate for wood supplied to the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army; and

Whereas there was a mistake in the amount that should have been reported in favor of said Pulliam's estate, as appears by the report of the committee to whom said bill was referred, made before the passage thereof:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to re-examine and settle the claim of the estate of J. J. Pulliam, deceased, late of Fayette County, State of Tennessee, for wood taken by the United States forces during the late war, from 125 acres of land located near the village of La Grange, in said State; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum that may be found due said estate: Provided, That the amount shall not exceed $4,167.

Mr. EDEN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. LYMAN) was read, as follows:

This claim was originally for quartermaster's stores amounting to $7,323.35, alleged to have been furnished the United States Army during the civil war, by J. J. Pulliam, deceased, who was a resident during the war of La Grange, Tenn. The claim was first presented to the Quartermaster's Department in 1876, and after a thorough and exhaustive investigation, the Quartermaster-General allowed and reported to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury the sum of $1,223, which was duly reported to the Forty-seventh Congress, and the necessary appropriation made for the payment of the same in what is known as the 4th of July bill of that year. Claimant applied to the Forty-eighth Congress for further relief, and also to this. The application to the present Congress has thus far resulted in the passage of the bill now under consideration by the Senate.

The further facts necessary to a full understanding of this claim are stated in Senate Report No. 347, of the Forty-Seventh Congress, as follows:

"On the 4th of July, 1864, Congress passed an act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States (13 Statutes at Large, page 381).

"Section 2 of this act provides 'that all claims of loyal citizens in States not in rebellion for quartermaster's stores actually furnished to the Army of the United States, and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same, or which may have been taken by such officers without giving such receipt, may be submitted to the Quartermaster-General of the United States, accompanied with such proofs as each claimant can present of the facts in his case, and it shall be the duty of the Quartermaster-General to cause such claim to be examined, and if convinced that it is just, and of the loyalty of the claimant, and that the stores have been actually received or taken for the use of and used by said Army, then to report each case to the Third Auditor of the Treasury with a recommendation for settlement.'

"Section 3 of the same act provides 'that all claims of loyal citizens in States not in rebellion for subsistence actually furnished to said Army, and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same, or which may have been taken by such officers without giving such receipt, may be submitted to the Commissary-General of Subsistence, accompanied with such proofs as each claimant may have to offer, and it shall be the duty of the Commissary-General of Subsistence to cause each claim to be examined, and if convinced that it is just, and of the loyalty of the claimant, and that the stores have been actually received or taken for the use of and used by said Army, then to report each case for payment to the Third Auditor of the Treasury with a recommendation for settlement.'

"The provisions of these two sections were subsequently extended by act of Congress to embrace the State of Tennessee and the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson in the State of West Virginia. Until 1874 these claims thus audited were paid directly out of the appropriation for the Army; but by section 2 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes,' approved June 16, 1874, Congress provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should thereafter make report of each claim allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury at the commencement of each session of Congress to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who should lay the same before Congress for consideration.

"In compliance with section 2 of the said act approved June 16, 1874, the Secretary of the Treasury, on the 10th day of January last, transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives lists of 1,359 claims arising under the act of July 4, 1864, and the various acts amendatory thereof, which claims were examined and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury since December 4, 1880. These claims amount in the aggregate to $291,148.04. They arose in the States of Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, West Virginia, in the Territory of New Mexico, and in the District of Columbia. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury was referred by the House of Representatives to the Committee on War Claims. The bill was prepared by that committee, reported to the House, and recommitted to the committee. After the bill was so recommitted it was carefully compared by the clerks of said committee, aided by a clerk of the Treasury Department, under the direction and supervision of said committee, with the papers and records of the cases allowed, and all errors apparent on the face of the same noted and subsequently corrected. The Committee on War Claims of the House did not add to or take from any claim which had been allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury. In the report made by Mr. HOUK, the chairman of said committee, he states that 'the committee assume the equity and justice of the allowances made, as well as the judicial impartiality and correctness of the action of the officers by whom such allowances were made.'

"Your committee have compared the House bill with the claims allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury. They find the names and amounts correctly stated in the bill. The claims seem to have been examined with great care, and particularly in the Treasury Department, and your committee are satisfied that the awards made by the accounting officers of the Treasury are fully sustained by the evidence in each case, and that the award is made to the proper party in each case.

"John J. Pulliam, of Fayette County, Tennessee, is allowed in this bill the sum of $1,223. We are satisfied that Mr. Pulliam ought to have been awarded a larger sum by the accounting officers of the Treasury, but your committee do not feel justified in delaying the passage of this bill by amending it, even for the purpose of doing justice to Mr. Pulliam.

"If Mr. Pulliam hereafter makes a claim for the balance equitably due him, and such claim is referred to your committee, as we now understand the matter, we will favor the payment to him of some additional amount."

Your committee do not agree with the concluding statements of the above-quoted Senate report, to the effect that Mr. Pulliam ought to have been allowed a larger sum by the accounting officers of the Treasury. This committee believe that the evidence shows that the claimant had a fair and patient hearing before the officials of the Quartermaster-General's Office upon the ground, and by personal examination of the witnesses, and do not think that manifest injustice has been done him, or that the action of the accounting officers of the Treasury should be overruled.

Your committee recommend that the bill do lie on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands it is customary to report bills to the House in such case, with the recommendation that they be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM ERVIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 542) for the relief of William Ervin.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William Ervin, his heirs or assigns, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $7,650, being the value of 180 head of beef cattle seized unlawfully and taken out of his possession, in the State of Kansas, in the year 1862, by order of Col. Charles R. Jennison, commanding the Seventh Regiment Kansas Cavalry, United States Volunteers, said beef-cattle having been used as subsistence for the officers and soldiers of said regiment.

Mr. EDEN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDSON) was read, as follows:

The committee, having a similar bill for the relief of this claimant before them, after full consideration, on April 20, 1886, reported same to the House with recommendation that it do pass. Said bill is (H. R. 3713), and the report accompanying it is No. 1821. The committee recommend the passage of the Senate bill.

Mr. EDEN. That report furnishes very little information.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Committee on War Claims simply adopted the report as presented by the Committee on Claims of the Senate and refer to it there; but there is a report accompanying the bill (H. R. 3713) which states fully the facts embodied in the Senate report, and I therefore ask that this report which I hold in my hand be read.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDSON) was read, as follows:

The committee find the facts to be as stated in Senate report No. 682, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, which report is hereto annexed and made a part of this report, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1025) for the relief of William Ervin, having considered the same, beg leave to make the following report:

"In the year 1862 the claimant was a resident of Kansas and the owner of 180 head of cattle, which were pasturing near Emporia. About April 15, 1862, the said cattle were taken from the claimant by the order of Col. Charles R. Jennison, commanding the Seventh Regiment Kansas Cavalry, and used by said regiment for food.

"This appears from the sworn statement of the claimant himself, and the affidavits of Col. Charles R. Jennison and First Lieut. John A. Tanner. Colonel Jennison says the regiment was in want of beef, and he ordered the seizure of the claimant's cattle, and the same were used for the subsistence of his officers and men, and he did not pay for them. Lieutenant Tanner swears the cattle were taken by the command of Colonel Jennison, and were used for the subsistence of the regiment.

"Charles F. Garrett and James S. Emery, residents of the city of Lawrence, Kans., swear they were well acquainted with the claimant from 1857 to 1866, and during that time they knew he was thoroughly loyal to the United States Government.

"James Angus swears he was employed by the claimant in the month of April, 1862, herding 180 head of cattle, and that about the 15th day of April the said cattle were taken from the possession of the claimant by the Seventh Regiment Kansas Cavalry. Furthermore that he has a distinct recollection that a few days prior Saint Louis cattle dealers offered the claimant $42.50 a head for these cattle, but the claimant declined to sell them at that price.

"The claimant himself swears to receiving the same offer, but that he declined because he considered them worth $55 a head.

"In explanation of the long delay in presenting his claim to Congress the claimant swears that in the year 1867 he placed his claim in the hands of a Mr. L. M. O'Brien for prosecution, who, being unable to attend to it, turned it over to Chipman & Hosmer, claim agents in Washington, D. C., together with a number of affidavits of persons who knew of the taking of the cattle. Chipman & Hosmer told the claimant he must furnish the statements of some officers in command of the Seventh Regiment Kansas Cavalry relative to taking his cattle. The claimant was unable to find officers who had knowledge of the transaction until last year, when he procured the affidavits above mentioned of Colonel Jennison and Lieutenant Tanner. For the lack of such evidence Chipman & Hosmer did not present and prosecute the claim.

"A letter from Chipman & Hosmer, dated April 30, 1867, acknowledges the receipt of the claim and accompanying papers.

"The claimant holds no receipts from Colonel Jennison or any of his command for the cattle, but from records in the War Department it appears that the Seventh Regiment Kansas Cavalry were careless and reckless, accustomed to appropriate property of both friend and foe to their own use, rarely, if ever, giving vouchers therefor. Many complaints were entered against them by different generals who commanded the divisions in which they were, and finally Colonel Jennison was obliged to leave the service on account of his unsoldierly conduct.

"For the above reasons your committee attach less importance to the want of vouchers.

"Your committee think the claim is fully substantiated by the evidence, and that the amount offered for the cattle by the Saint Louis cattle dealers—$42.50 per head—just prior to their seizure, is a fair price."

The committee therefore adopt said Senate report as the report of this committee, and report the accompanying bill (H. R. 3713) for his relief, with recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee why it is that this claim was not presented under the act of July 4, 1864, and considered by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems that this claimant in 1867 filed his claim with the Department, or rather he presented it by putting it in the hands of his agents here, the firm mentioned in the report, Chipman, Hosmer & Co., I believe. They informed him that it would be necessary to have the proof of the colonel or some officers of the regiment, or some other persons familiar with the facts.

The proof shows that he was unable to find these parties until the last year—that is, the year before the report was submitted—and after finding them and obtaining the testimony the report was made. In the meantime it seems that the claim had not been filed with the Quartermaster's Department, or, if so, it had been disallowed. I have not the facts before me and am not positive as to what action was taken in that Department. But, at any rate, it was held up to await the proofs of the officers of the regiment, and when they were found and the case was clearly made out in the judgment of the committee, the statute of limitations had barred it.

Mr. LONG. But it appears by the report, if I understood the reading of it, that these officers were so worthless that they were dismissed the service.

Mr. PETERS. They were not dismissed because of being worthless officers in that sense of the word.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all; the gentleman from Kansas is more familiar with these officers than I am.

I only know that the proof was taken, and shows conclusively that 180 head of cattle had been seized by the regiment and used by the Army for which payment was never made. This man was a citizen of Kansas at that time, residing near Emporia in that State, and his loyalty is not questioned.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Chairman, this claimant, if I understand it correctly, had until January, 1880, to file his claim with the proper Department of the Government and have it investigated, and if found to be correct to have it allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. SAYERS. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the claimant did put his claim in the hands of claim agents as far back as 1867 and has been prosecuting it all the time since then.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to make this suggestion: That Colonel Jennison, the colonel of the Seventh Kansas Cavalry—I do not know anything about the claim—but this gentleman was a very prominent citizen of Kansas and there would have been no difficulty whatever in finding him and obtaining his testimony.

Mr. EDEN. I have no information whatever about the claim, except in what appears in the report; but I am satisfied it could not have been difficult to have found him during that time, and while, as a matter of course, I can not pretend to know anything about the facts on which the claim is based, the mere fact that it was not presented to the proper Department which had authority and jurisdiction to hear and determine the rights of the claimants is a suspicious circumstance against the validity of the claim itself.

Mr. LONG. Is this a bill to pay or refer the claim to the Court of Claims?

Mr. EDEN. It is to pay it, and that, too, when the party had a day in court if he chose to take it, because the Commissary-General and the accounting officers of the Treasury had full jurisdiction to hear the evidence, to put all the machinery in their hands in motion, and to send an agent to Kansas or elsewhere, if necessary, to ascertain the facts on which the claim was based. If the claim had been presented in that way the Government would have been represented; and I do not feel that it would be doing justice to allow a claim to pass where a party has been guilty of such great laches, in view of the fact that there is liability to do injustice to the Government thereby.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, the evidence is that a bill of a similar character passed the Senate in the Forty-eighth Congress. According to the proof before the Senate committee it appears that the claimant, who was entitled to relief under this bill, was prevented from having his claim allowed before 1880, by reason of the fact that he was not able to procure the necessary vouchers. Since that time he has procured the necessary evidence, and it does occur to me that the mere fact that some time has elasped, fourteen or fifteen years, since the claim ought to have been presented does not, in view of the statements accompanying this report, furnish any sufficient ground to warrant the rejection of a valid claim.

Mr. LONG. Has this been passed upon by the accounting officers?

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know; I presume not, however, as they could not have passed upon it.

Mr. LONG. Has it ever been passed upon by any tribunal?

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir; except that it has been acted upon by the Senate and twice passed the committee of the House.

Mr. LONG. Would it not be better to send this to the Court of Claims?

Mr. SAYERS. I would prefer to have the bill pass as it is. I am satisfied it is a just claim. The claimant removed from Kansas to Texas, resides in my district, and I know him to bear the reputation of an honorable and just man. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MORRISON. It can hardly be that any honest claim of this magnitude among our wise people away up North, with Congress always open to them, would have been delayed this long without being presented and prosecuted. In my judgment it ought not to be allowed.

Mr. MORRILL. The claim was presented in 1867.

Mr. STEELE. When were the cattle taken?

Mr. MORRILL. In 1862. Some of the affidavits were lost and had to be replaced.

Mr. MORRISON. The claim is rather too cold.

Mr. STEELE. The cattle were taken in 1862, and the claim, it is stated, was first made in 1867. Why did it lie so long?

Mr. SPRINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to consider the claim of William Ervin, his heirs or assigns, for $7,650, being value of 180 head of beef cattle, alleged to have been seized unlawfully and taken out of his possession in the State of Kansas, in the year 1862, by order of Col. Charles R. Jennison, commanding the Seventh Regiment of Kansas Cavalry, United States Volunteers, and used as subsistence for the officers and soldiers of said regiment, and to make report to Congress thereon as provided in the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government."

Mr. SPRINGER. That simply sends this claim to the Court of Claims for judicial ascertainment of the facts as provided in the Bowman act. The facts in the case are so complicated and the claim has been delayed so long that I think the ordinary means of obtaining information by ex parte affidavits are too unreliable to warrant us in passing this bill as reported.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not hear the whole of the amendment distinctly. Does it relieve the claimant of the statute of limitations?

Mr. SPRINGER. It does. Jurisdiction is given to the Court of Claims to ascertain the facts and report them to Congress under the Bowman act.

The amendment was adopted; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. RICHARDSON took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia.

The message further announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 10) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. PUGH the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

W. H. POWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 269) for the relief of W. H. Powell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to pay to W. H. Powell, surviving partner of the firm of W. H. Powell & Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $498.54, which shall be in full compensation for damage sustained by reason of an erroneous assessment, and seizure therefor, on or about the 1st day of March, 1871, of a certain distillery bonded warehouse numbered 16, with cattle-pens, machinery, and fixtures, then owned by the firm of W. H. Powell & Co., of the third collection district of Ohio, and in full satisfaction of all claims of the said W. H. Powell & Co., and of said W. H. Powell, against the Government of the United States, in any manner arising out of the said assessment, and the seizure and sale or loss of said property; and to release the judgment now standing against said W. H. Powell & Co., and John Mills and others, of Dayton, Ohio, as their sureties.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This is an important bill. It seeks to release a judgment now standing against this claimant. I think the report should be read.

Mr. PETERS. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. HOWARD) was read, as follows:

That we have examined the claim, and adopted the report of the Senate Committee on Claims, No. 42, which is inserted herein and made a part of this report, and recommend to the House that said bill as amended by the Senate do pass the House.

The following is the printed report of the Senate committee, to wit:

[Senate Report No. 42, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 269) submit the following report:

The claimant is the surviving partner of the firm of W. H. Powell & Co., which was engaged in business as distillers at Chambersburg, in the third collection district of Ohio, from some time in November, 1868, to the 26th day of January, 1869. During this period the monthly assessments upon their business were regularly made by one O. C. Maxwell, the United States assessor for that district, and the same were promptly paid by the firm, the amounts paid by them aggregating $834.33, which were receipted for in full by D. W. Schaeffer, United States collector for that district.

Subsequent examinations by the proper officers of the Internal-Revenue Department developed the fact that the sum of $834.33, so paid by said firm during the period mentioned, was $65.76 in excess of the amount justly assessable upon their property.

The business of the firm was discontinued on the 26th day of January, 1869, because of scarcity of water and the inferior quality of grain then obtainable. The water supply was variable, being inadequate for the regular operation of the distillery, even at its minimum producing capacity, and necessitating reductions and increase from time to time in their capacity, and even temporary suspensions of the business.

Due notice was given by the firm of the commencement of business, and the reduction and increase of capacity from time to time, and of the suspensions and final discontinuance of business, and upon due applications to the proper revenue officers the permits required by law in the premises were obtained by the firm. The assistant assessor, however, in making returns to his superior officer of the temporary suspensions, omitted to state, in some of his certificates, what the papers showed to have been, in fact, true—that there were at those times no mash, wort, or beer in the distillery, or on the premises.

Upon each notice of suspension or resumption of business, the proper locks, seals, and fastenings were placed upon and removed from the doors, tubs, &c., by the proper officers.

After the discontinuance of the business Mr. Maxwell retired from the office of United States assessor, and was succeeded by George G. Johnson, who, because of technical defects and omissions in the certificates of the assistant assessor before mentioned, made a reassessment in form 89, for the month of January, 1869, upon the maximum capacity of the distillery.

Mr. Maxwell, who was assessor during the entire period in which Powell & Co. were in business, says, in an affidavit on file in the Department:

"It was my duty to make the assessment, and it was made with full knowledge of the facts. It was reported to, and confirmed by, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the parties, on my recommendation, settled the same in full, and quit the business of distilling. I am of the opinion, and then was, that they were assessed the full amount authorized by law, and believe that any reassessment, such as is made in form 89, is erroneous and consequently illegal."

The reassessment thus wrongfully made amounted to $1,491.87, which Powell & Co. declined to pay, and the property was seized by the Government and sold for $226.50, which was the sum required to cover the expenses of seizure and sale. The Government bid it in, and subsequently sold it for the same amount.

Suit was also brought on the distiller's bond, and judgment obtained after the death of McDowell, the junior partner of Powell & Co., for $1,586.56, which covered the reassessment, penalty, and interest. Powell, the surviving partner, paid $206.28 on the judgment in 1874, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue ordered that it be no further enforced.

The United States district attorney, Mr. Bateman, who had charge of the suit upon the bond, states in a letter before the committee that the defendants offered to show the facts as to the erroneous reassessment, but the court ruled out the evidence, holding under the law the reassessment to be conclusive in the suit upon the bond. The district attorney declares it to be his opinion that the reassessment was in fact illegal, and that if the parties had paid it they would have been entitled to recover back the money.

The seizure and the first and subsequent sale of the property by the Government were made while the claimant was absent from the State of Ohio; were without his knowledge, and he had therefore no opportunity to bid in the property or procure it to be done, or to appeal for relief to the proper officer of the Treasury Department.

The committee are of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to receive from the Government the sum of $498.54, the amount named in the bill, made up of the following items: For original overpayment, $65.76; the amount received by Government on sale of property, $226.50; the amount paid by Powell, as surviving partner, on the judgment rendered upon the bond, $206.28; and that the judgment in the action in the bond should be satisfied, and Powell & Co., and W. H. Powell, as survivor, and their and each of their sureties, relieved from further liability and obligation, of every kind, in the premises.

It is proper to mention the fact that the claim embracing the items last above mentioned was reported favorably by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, in the Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, and Forty-sixth Congresses. It was also reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Claims in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses, and the bill passed the Senate on the 2d day of June, 1884.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by inserting after the word "Powell," in the fourth line, the words "surviving partner of the firm of W. H. Powell & Co.;" also, by inserting after the word "Ohio," where the same occurs in the twelfth line thereof, the words "and in full satisfaction of all claims of the said W. H. Powell & Co. against the Government of the United States, in any manner arising out of the said assessment, and the seizure and sale, or loss, of said property," and that as so amended the same do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. The claim of B. B. Connor has been reported favorably by the Committee on War Claims, and the House bill which stands on the Calendar has just been passed over. There is a Senate bill identical with the House bill, the bill (S. 1537), and I ask, if it be in order, that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill, and that it be now considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Indiana. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Does not the order provide that we shall take up the Senate bills on the Calendar in their order? The only objection I have to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky is that, if we agree to it, we open the door to many similar applications.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the order of the House under which the Committee of the Whole is proceeding does not regulate the order in which the Senate bills shall be taken up. But the order of business is that they shall be taken in their order. The Chair submitted the request of the gentleman from Kentucky so as to allow the committee to act upon it. Unanimous consent is necessary. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] object?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Indiana. I do.

EDWAY A. GRANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 267) for the relief of Edway A. Grant.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that bill be laid aside informally, not losing its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

WILLIAM H. GRAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 165) for the relief of William H. Gray, of Kentucky.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay William H. Gray, or his legal representative, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $648.25, the said sum of money being the payment in full to the said William H. Gray for services rendered to the Government of the United States, while under the orders and in the employment of the officers thereof, during the month of December in the year 1866 and the months of January and February in the year 1867.

Mr. EDEN. I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. HOWARD) was read, as follows:

That they have examined the same and have adopted the report of the Committee on Claims in the Senate as their own, and report said bill back to the House, and recommend that it do pass without amendment; which report of the Senate is as follows:

[Senate report No. 97, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 165) for the relief of William H. Gray, having considered the same, submit the following report:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the date of December 21, 1866, directed R. M. Kelley, collector of internal revenue for the seventh district of Kentucky, to make an examination of the distilleries in said district, and if he could not perform the duty in person, to send a competent and trustworthy deputy. Under these instructions he appointed the claimant to make the examination and report. The claimant did make the examination in a manner satisfactory to Mr. Kelley and the Government, visiting and examining one hundred and five distilleries, which occupied him from December 28, 1886, to February 16, 1867, a period of fifty-one days. The money actually expended by him for necessary expenses amounted to $444.25; his compensation $204, which account was approved by Collector Kelley.

After having completed the examination, the claimant made a full report to Mr. Kelley and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, both of whom stated that the work was done satisfactorily. Mr. Kelley told him to make up his account and he would approve it and the Commissioner pay it. Some time later the claimant did make out his account, presented it to Mr. Kelley, who approved it, and then he forwarded it to the Commissioner. The Commissioner returned it with a blank form, saying that when it was made out according to this form it would be paid. The claimant made it out accordingly and forwarded it again to the Commissioner, in whose bureau it remained till 1875 before he received any definite answer about it. Then he was informed that his claim was rejected on the ground that Mr. Kelley should have paid him from his own compensation, according to section 3148 United States Revised Statutes, which provides that—

"Each collector shall be authorized to appoint * * * as many deputies as he may think proper, to be by him compensated for their services."

Mr. Gray appealed from this ruling, and in a later consideration of the case by the Revenue Bureau it was held that Mr. Kelley was paid for such special work by special allowances under the provisions of section 3145 of the United States Revised Statutes, which reads:

"The Secretary of the Treasury may make such further allowances from time to time as may be reasonable in cases where, by reason of the territorial extent of the district or the amount of internal taxes collected, or other circumstances, it may seem just to make such allowances."

It was further held that he should have submitted Mr. Gray's account in his estimates for additional allowances to the Treasury Department, and because Mr. Gray's account did not come to the Department in that way it was not allowed; and, further, that the act of February 8, 1875, providing that "no such allowance shall be made except within one year after such services are performed," left the Department no means then of paying the claim.

It was also stated that the claim should be paid, but that it could not be without further legislation.

It is plainly established that Mr. Kelley did not submit Mr. Gray's account to the Department in his own because he did not know but that it was just as correct for Mr. Gray to submit his account direct to the Department as it would be for him (Kelley) to send it in with his.

Secretary Bristow, in a letter to the claimant, said:

"While the Department recognizes the justice of compensating you for your services, there is at this time no appropriation available for that purpose, and Congress must pass a special act for your relief before any allowance can be made to you."

In Senate report 918 of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, made by Mr. Sheffield, of the Committee on Claims, section 3145 of the United States Revised Statutes is confounded with section 3148. The latter section does provide that collectors shall pay deputies out of their own compensations. But section 3145 provides that extra allowances may be made to collectors in certain cases where it may seem necessary, and the Revenue Bureau, in its last consideration of the case, finds that it was under this section Gray was employed and would have been paid had it not been for the mistake in the manner of the presentation of his account.

It is evident to your committee that Mr. Gray was properly and regularly employed; that he did his work in a manner satisfactory to all concerned; that the amount of the compensation he asks is reasonable; that it has not been paid him because it came to the Department directly from him instead of through Mr. Kelley.

It is undisputed that the Government received the benefit of his labors and expenditures, and your committee are of the opinion that the claimant should be paid, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JABEZ BURCHARD.

The next business was the bill (S. 570) for the relief of Jabez Burchard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow to Jabez Burchard, assistant engineer on the retired-list of the United States Navy, an amount which, with payments heretofore made to him, will be equal to 75 per cent. of the sea-pay of the grade or rank held by him at the date of his retirement by a naval board of the United States Navy; said amount to be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to take effect from and after the date of his retirement by said naval board.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask that the report in that case be read.

The report (by Mr. SOWDEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2026) for the relief of Jabez Burchard, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

A bill for the relief of Jabez Burchard passed the Senate in the Forty-sixth Congress, but was not reached on the Calendar of the House. The bill, as now introduced, provides that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow to Jabez Burchard, assistant engineer on the retired list of the United States Navy, an amount which, with payments heretofore made to him, will be equal to 75 per cent. of the sea pay of the grade or rank held by him at the date of his retirement by a naval board of the United States Navy; said amount to be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to take effect from and after the date of his retirement by said naval board.

Mr. Burchard entered the United States Navy March 14, 1865, as acting third assistant engineer. He served five months on the monitor Naubue; was detached and ordered to the United States steamer Powhatan. He served a little over two years and six months on this steamer; was detached and granted one month's leave of absence, and was honorably discharged. He re-entered the Navy September 1, 1870, as second assistant engineer, and was ordered on special duty at League Island, Pennsylvania; detached from there January 11, 1872, and ordered to the United States monitor Terror, at Havana. While attached to this monitor at Key West, Fla., in July, 1872, he was taken with an affection of the eyes, was examined by a board of medical officers, condemned, and sent home. After remaining on sick-leave for nearly a year he reported as fit for duty, and was ordered to join the United States steamer Tuscarora, at San Francisco. After joining this ship he was again attacked with affection of the eyes, and was again condemned by a medical survey and sent home. After his arrival home he placed himself under the treatment of Dr. P. D. Keyser, an eminent oculist, who pronounced his disease to be one of the worst forms of inflammation of the retina. While in this condition he was ordered before the retiring board at Washington, under sections 1448 to 1454, Revised Statutes.

Those sections provide that a retiring board shall find and report the cause of an officer's incapacity. If the board finds it to be the result of an incident of service the officer is paid three-fourths of the sea pay of his grade, under the first clause of section 1588 of the Revised Statutes, which for an assistant engineer is $1,275 per annum (see section 1556, Rev. Stat.). If the board finds that the incapacity is not due to incident of service the officer is retired on furlough pay, which is fixed by section 1593, Revised Statutes, at one-half of leave-of-absence pay.

In Mr. Burchard's case the board made the following negative finding:

NAVAL RETIRING BOARD,
Washington, D. C., October 12, 1874.

SIR: We have examined Jabez Burchard, assistant engineer, United States Navy, and find him affected with chronic retinitis. He had been twice condemned by medical survey of disease for the eyes, and there is no evidence on record that his disability originated in the "line of duty." He is at present unfit for duty, and, in our opinion, is permanently incapacitated to perform the duties appropriate to his commission.

Respectfully, &c.,

GEORGE PECK,
Medical Inspector.
DAVID KINDLEBERGER,
United States Naval Surgeon.

Commodore J. W. NICHOLSON,
President Naval Retiring Board.

This finding, being construed to mean that Mr. Burchard's disability was not caused by incident of service, he was, on the 26th of October, 1874, retired on furlough pay, which for his grade amounted to $500 per annum.

Mr. Burchard applied to the Secretary of the Navy, asserting that he had been wholly unprepared with evidence before the retiring board to show that his disability originated in the line of duty. Upon a full examination of the case the Secretary wrote the following letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 1, 1877.

SIR: Upon a full review of all the facts in the case of Assistant Engineer Jabez Burchard, United States Navy, the Department is of the opinion that the causes which incapacitated him for active duty were incident to the service, and that he should receive the higher rate of pay allowed to retired officers by section 1588 of the Revised Statutes.

Very respectfully, &c.,

GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. S. J. W. TABOR,
Fourth Auditor of the Treasury.

In accordance with the supposed authority of this letter, the accounting officers paid Mr. Burchard at the three-quarter rate ($1,275 per annum) from the date of his retirement to 1878. It was then decided by the Second Comptroller that the Secretary had no authority to review the finding of the retiring board, which had been once approved, and Mr. Burchard's pay was again reduced to $500 per annum. The President thereupon nominated Mr. Burchard to the Senate for transfer from the furlough to the retired-pay list, under section 1594 of the Revised Statutes, and he was confirmed.

This section is a re-enactment of section 3 of the act of January 16, 1857 (11 Stats., 154), a reference to which will clearly show that it was intended to correct the possible mistakes of a retiring board in the case of an officer whose disability had been erroneously found not to have arisen from an incident of service. By subsequent acts, however, retirement had been provided for other causes than physical disability, and the pay of officers retired for such miscellaneous causes was fixed in the second clause of section 1588 of the Revised Statutes, at one-half of the sea-pay of their grades. The Comptroller decided that Mr. Burchard's transfer, by nomination and confirmation, under section 1594, only operated to give him this one-half pay, or $850 per annum, instead of three-fourths pay allowed by the first clause of section 1588.

Believing this decision erroneous, Mr. Burchard brought suit in the Court of Claims for the difference between $850 and $1,275 per annum, but the court affirmed the decision of the Comptroller. (19 Ct. Cls. Reps., 137.)

In this suit the Government set up a counter-claim of some $2,500 on account of the difference between $500 and $1,275 per annum, paid Mr. Burchard under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy, above quoted, between the date of his retirement and the date of his transfer. While this counter-claim was dismissed, the reasoning of the court in its opinion shows that they regarded it as well founded. The Government thereupon appealed to the Supreme Court, where the case is now pending.

The committee are of the opinion that the court was correct in deciding that the Secretary of the Navy could not review the finding of the retiring board, conceding that finding to have been such as is required by the law. It would therefore appear that this officer, receiving a salary of $850 per annum, upon which he and his familly are totally dependent, and who is prevented by his disability from doing any work requiring the use of his eyes, will be condemned to pay some $2,500 out of his meager salary on account of the mistake of the Secretary of the Navy in not having him transferred by nomination to the Senate in the first place, instead of attempting to regulate his pay by a letter to the Fourth Auditor.

While the committee do not dispute the correctness of the decision of the court, that an officer transferred under section 1594 is entitled only to half-pay instead of three-quarters pay, they believe that it was the intent of the law now embodied in section 1594 to fully correct the mistakes of a retiring board, which can only be done by giving the transferred officer the pay he would have received if his disability had been found, in the first place, to have originated in the line of duty.

Your committee therefore report the accompanying bill, which will give Mr. Burchard the pay of an officer of his grade retired for disability incident to the service (namely, $1,275 per annum) from the date of his retirement, and recommend its passage.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, there are some things about this bill which I think do not commend it to favorable consideration. If I understand the bill, it proposes to change the rating of an officer on the retired-list of the Navy and to give him an increase of pay beyond what the law entitles him to. Not only that, but the increase is made retroactive; it goes back to the date of his original discharge, in 1874, and involves, I think, some four or five thousand dollars. I had occasion to look into this claim in the Forty-eighth Congress, where it was reported adversely. The facts, as I remember them, are about these: This assistant engineer, after a very brief service, was discharged or left the Navy; then he was received back and was retired by a medical board for disability on an allowance of $500 a year; or rather he was furloughed at that rate. Afterwards he was placed on the retired-list at $850 a year, where he now stands.

So far as my recollection of this service goes, it is very doubtful whether the right to remain on the retired-list, even at this rate, has been earned, but this bill proposes to increase the pay which the law allows him on the retired-list, from $850 to $1,275 a year, and, if I understand it correctly, the increase is to be made retroactive, extending back to 1874, covering $4,000 or $5,000 of arrears. I will say nothing of the disability, but I am satisfied that this bill has not such merit as to commend it to the House, and I therefore move that it be reported back with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, this bill, I think, ought to have some further investigation, and pending the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, if he will permit me, I will move that the committee now rise.

Mr. MORRISON. Oh, no. Let us dispose of this bill.

The motion of Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HAMMOND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had instructed him to report back sundry bills with various recommendations.

UNITED STATES STEAMER ASHUELOT.

The first business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 250) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Ashuelot.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCHANAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The House bill (H. R. 2110) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Ashuelot was laid on the table.

H. A. MYERS.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 390) for the relief of H. A. Myers.

The question was taken on ordering the bill to a third reading, and it was decided in the negative.

HARRY I. TODD.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 30) for the relief of Harry I. Todd, late keeper of the Kentucky penitentiary.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to recommit that bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. As the bill will go to the foot of the Calendar under that motion, I do not think it necessary to oppose it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Even the foot of the Calendar is a dangerous place for such a bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes; it is dangerous.

The question was taken on the motion to recommit; and there were—ayes 50, noes 45.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] to act as tellers.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point that no quorum has voted is withdrawn. The ayes have it, and the bill is recommitted.

A. A. THOMAS.

The next bill reported from the Committee on the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 391) for the relief of A. A. Thomas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAMMOND). This bill has been reported from the Committee of the Whole with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAULBEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ESTATE OF J. J. PULLIAM.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 605) for the relief of the estate of J. J. Pulliam, deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill has been reported from the Committee of the Whole with a recommendation that it be laid on the table.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I move to non-concur in the report of the Committee of the Whole. Let the bill go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] is unnecessary, as the object can be reached, if a majority so desire, by a negative vote on concurring in the report of the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, shall this bill be laid on the table?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I hope that will not be done.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 30, noes 39.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object. I would not object to recommitting the bill to the Committee on War Claims. I make that motion.

The motion of Mr. SPRINGER was agreed to; there being—ayes 40, noes 33.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1458) to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan at Bay City, in said district; asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. GEORGE.

H. A. MYERS.

Mr. SPRINGER. There was a misapprehension in regard to the bill (S. 390). Before making a statement in regard to it, I ask the Clerk to read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 390) for the relief of H. A. Myers.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill was reported with a favorable recommendation from the Committee of the Whole; but by misapprehension it was laid on the table, having been confounded, I presume, with another bill soon afterward reached, in regard to which the recommendation was that it lie on the table. There was no objection to the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House refused to order this bill to be read a third time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to reconsider that action, in order that this bill may receive the favorable consideration of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to reconsider was made, and was laid on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I ask unanimous consent that the action of the House upon this bill may be revoked. There was certainly a misapprehension. There is no opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the order laying on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order this bill to a third reading may be vacated. Is there objection?

Mr. STEELE. Before that question is determined, I would like to hear what the bill is.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Paymaster-General of the United States Army be, and he is hereby, required to cause to be paid, out of any money appropriated, or which may hereafter be appropriated, for the payment of the Army of the United States, to H. A. Myers, late a private in the Eleventh Kansas Volunteers, a sum that shall be equal to the pay of a private soldier from the 17th day of September, 1862, to July 7, 1864, the date of his discharge from the service of the United States, deducting therefrom any amount that may have been paid to him as such private soldier, and any amount that may be due from him to the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] who reported this bill may be permitted to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can do so by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Speaker, I am well satisfied that the unfavorable action of the House on this bill must have been taken under some misapprehension. I did not notice at the moment that any action was being called for, or that this particular bill was before the House. Upon the reading of the report, I think every member would give his assent to the measure. The Adjutant-General and the Secretary of War have recommended the payment of this claim. The bill proposes to pay to a private soldier an insignificant amount for about four months' service actually performed by him. The soldier was examined by a surgeon, was dropped from the roll, or left the service, and in that way lost pay for about four months. I do not recall all the facts connected with the case; but the sum which the bill proposes to pay is very small. I was entirely satisfied, as was the committee, that the claim is just. As payment was recommended by the Adjutant-General and the Secretary of War, we did not regard any extended consideration of the facts as very material.

Mr. BRAGG. I insist on my objection. The bill has received the unfavorable action of the House, and a motion to reconsider has been laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] can not be entertained.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: Is not a motion to reconsider the action of the House upon this bill in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to reconsider has been made and laid on the table. Therefore the motion is not now in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. As I understand, the question taken was on laying the bill on the table. Is not a motion to reconsider in order now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House refused to order the bill to be read a third time. Then there was a motion to reconsider and to lay that motion on the table, which was agreed to. The Chair thinks that perhaps the object can be reached by a motion for a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. STEELE. Is the motion to non-concur in the action of the House not in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion it is not. The question has been disposed of, the motion to reconsider having been laid on the table.

WILLIAM ERVIN.

The amendment of the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar to the bill (S. 542) for the relief of William Ervin was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAYERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. GRAY.

A bill (S. 165) for the relief of William H. Gray, of Kentucky, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar favorably, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JABEZ BURCHARD.

The question next recurred on the bill (S. 570) for the relief of Jabez Burchard, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let that be laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was reported to the House with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SOWDEN. I demand a division on that question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 4.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. SOWDEN and Mr. PETTIBONE.

Mr. BLAND. Evidently we have no quorum, and I move the House do now adjourn. [Cries of "No!" "Oh, yes!"]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 57.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If this carries, will it not cut off the evening session?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will.

Mr. ROWELL. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let me inquire of the Chair whether, if this motion be carried, it will not dispense with the evening session for the consideration of pension bills?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 107, not voting 147; as follows:

YEAS—65.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. MORRISON, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I am paired with Mr. HARMER, but not regarding this as a political question, learning he would vote "no" if present, I have recorded my vote in the negative.

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York.

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. MORGAN with Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR.

Mr. HOLMAN with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. KING with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. GILFILLAN.

Mr. REAGAN with Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. WEST.

Mr. DANIEL with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. WILSON with Mr. MCCOMAS.

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. PAYSON.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. GALLINGER.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. BURLEIGH, until January 17.

Mr. BARBOUR with Mr. ROCKWELL, until Monday next.

Mr. VIELE with Mr. HIESTAND, until Monday next.

For this day:

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. NELSON.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. WADE.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts.

Mr. BARRY with Mr. WAKEFIELD.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. COWLES with Mr. BURROWS.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, with Mr. CASWELL.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. BUCK.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. PERKINS.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. RICE.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. WARNER, of Missouri.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. WORTHINGTON with Mr. BAKER.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. MOFFATT.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House now take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening, for the consideration of the special order fixed for Fridays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order while the House is dividing.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that the House now take a recess until the hour fixed for the evening session.

Mr. ROGERS. I object.

Mr. SOWDEN. I will withdraw the demand for a quorum, in order to permit a motion to be made to take a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker has decided that a motion to take a recess pending a division is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the withdrawal. If the point of no quorum is withdrawn, the Chair will announce the result of the vote just taken.

Mr. MORRILL. I now renew my motion that the House take a recess until half past 7.

Mr. SOWDEN. I withdraw the point only for that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will then announce the vote on the motion to postpone indefinitely the consideration of the bill, which was 44 in the affirmative and 4 in the negative.

Mr. SOWDEN. If that will dispose of the matter I renew the point.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can not the gentleman reach his object by entering a motion to reconsider? Let that motion be entered, then the House can take a recess, and the motion to reconsider will bring it up at any time the gentleman chooses to call it up within the time fixed by the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion can be entered, of course.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is the order for a session on Friday evenings a continuing order; and if the House remains in session until 5 o'clock will it not then be the duty of the Chair to announce the House in recess until the hour fixed for the evening session?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will then take a recess. The 5 o'clock order is still in force, and when that hour arrives the Chair will necessarily declare the House in recess until half past 7.

The point of order of no quorum being insisted upon, the tellers will resume their places and continue the count.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think this all can be arranged now. The point, I believe, of no quorum will be withdrawn if it can be understood that the motion to reconsider shall be pending.

Mr. MORRISON. No; nothing can be understood now. Let us continue until 5 o'clock.

Mr. STEELE. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the pending motion.

Mr. STEELE, Mr. BUCHANAN, and others demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Pending the execution of the order of the House for the yeas and nays, would it be in order to move to take a recess?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 91, nays 35, not voting 193; as follows:

Mr. EDEN. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

The names of members voting were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. HAMMOND]. On this question the yeas are 91, the nays 35.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair takes notice of the fact that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the House take a recsss until half past 7 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order. In the absence of a quorum only two motions are in order—a motion to adjourn or a motion for a call of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that there be a call of the House.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 20, noes 25.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered—39 members voting therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. PETTIBONE, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BROWN.

Mr. STEELE. I make the point that both the gentlemen whom the Chair has named as tellers voted the same way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know how either gentleman voted.

Before the count by tellers was reported,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House, under its order, takes a recess until 7.30 p. m. The evening session is for the consideration of pension bills.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 7.30 p. m., Mr. DOCKERY in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore directed the following communication from the Speaker to be read:

January 14, 1887.

I hereby designate Hon. A. M. DOCKERY, a Representative from the State of Missouri, to preside at the session of the House this evening.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the special order under which the House meets this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on each Friday the House shall take a recess from 5 o'clock p. m. until 7.30 p. m., at which evening sessions private bills granting pensions reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills reported from the Judiciary Committee to remove political disabilities only, be considered.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the transaction of business under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, under the special order of the House.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the members present may be recognized for the purpose of calling up bills. It occurs to me that less time is likely to be consumed in discussion when a member is willing to be responsible for the bill he calls up. For that reason I make the request.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no objection to that order being made on condition that the report in each case shall be read without its being necessary to ask the Clerk to read the report.

Mr. MATSON. I have no objection to that suggestion, and I incorporate it as part of my request.

Mr. RYAN. I would ask the gentleman from Louisiana what necessity there is of reading a report unless some member calls for it?

Mr. WALLACE. I ask this as a matter of convenience, so that we may know what we are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] asks unanimous consent that members present may call up for consideration bills on the Calendar coming within the special order of the House, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] asks unanimous consent that the reports accompanying the bills be read without any member making a special request for the reading of the report. Is there objection to those two requests?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

GRANT E. Q. LATHERMON.

Mr. MATSON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9157) granting a pension to Grant E. Q. Lathermon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Grant E. Q. Lathermon, dependent son of George Lathermon, late a private in Company I, Fifty-second Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, and pay him a pension of — per month from and after the passage of this act.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 7 fill the blank with the word "twelve," so that it will read "pay him a pension of twelve dollars per month from and after the passage of this act."

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

Claimant's father, George Lathermon, enlisted as a private in Company I, Fifty-second Indiana Volunteers, December, 1863, and died of typhoid fever on board the United States steamer Charles McDougal April 30, 1864.

Soldier's widow applied for and was granted a widow's pension, and drew the same until her remarriage, March 12, 1867.

Claimant's guardian, Francis Little, filed an application for a dependent son's pension August, 1867, which was granted and paid to claimant until he became sixteen years of age, 1880. This beneficiary became blind when five days old, and has been and will so continue, as the result of an attack of erysipelas. He is now as much dependent as when a child, and we cheerfully recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, with the following amendment: Insert the word "twelve" in line 2, between the words "of" and "dollars."

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was adopted: and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN WINES.

Mr. CONGER. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2478) granting a pension to John Wines.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Wines, father of Rufus H. Wines, late a private in Company E, Twenty-sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2478, report that they have examined the same and adopt the Senate report, which is as follows:

[Senate report No. 1221, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The complainant was the father of Rufus H. Wines, late a private in Company E, Twenty-sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteers. The son was killed in battle, and the Pension Office refuses a pension on the ground that the father was not dependent at the time the son was killed; that he was able to support himself by his labor, and that he did so, and accumulated property.

In 1864, the year the son was killed, the claimant earned $64 at his trade of shoemaker. Taking nineteen consecutive years, he earned one year $315, and as low as $44.16. The average earnings of these years would not support a family or furnish a decent supply of comforts. A surgical examination finds him at the age of sixty-nine totally incapacitated by physical unsoundness to labor. It also appears that he had disabilities at the time of his son's death. The committee are of the opinion that he was compelled, at the time his son was killed, to work beyond his strength; that this has been the case ever since, and that now he is not able to work at all. By exchanging work with a carpenter, and after a hard struggle, he managed to get a cheap house to shelter him, and this is the accumulation of property that has stood in the way of his being allowed a pension. In the opinion of the committee he has been very poor every since 1864, when his son was sacrificed; is poor now, and totally unable to earn a living.

It is a case that calls for the relief provided in the bill, which is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZA WILKINS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2459) granting a pension to Eliza Wilkins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eliza Wilkins, widow of Orrin Wilkins, late a private in Company A, First Regiment of Iowa Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2459, report that they have examined the same, and adopt the Senate report, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 1204, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The claimant was pensioned as the widow of Orrin Wilkins, late a private in First Regiment of Iowa Cavalry, who died of lung disease, contracted at Little Rock, Ark., in March, 1864, when the soldier took a violent cold, being compelled to lie on the wet ground, in wet blankets, during a storm. The widow was allowed a pension of $8 a month, commencing April 27, 1870; certificate dated February 19, 1880.

Subsequently the widow's name was dropped from the rolls, on the ground that her husband was not sound when he enlisted. There have been a number of special examinations held, respectively, in Iowa, New York State, Wisconsin, and Illinois, and it is evident that the Pension Office has committed an error, under its pressure of work, in striking her name from the roll. The committee have given this case a very careful investigation, and submit the following as the result:

They find that the pension was granted on the most positive proof that the soldier was sound prior to enlistment. As a sample of this evidence, reference is made to that of William Parker, who knew the soldier before he enlisted, worked with him on a farm in 1863, and swears that "he was undoubtedly a man in good sound health." James McKay, another neighbor, gives similar and unreserved testimony as to prior soundness. Cyrus Palmerton knew soldier's father and family thirty-six years; father still living, aged seventy-five; mother lived to be seventy-two; none of the family show any tendency to consumption; on the contrary, they are healthier than the average. The soldier was healthy and able to do a good day's work on a farm or at any job he undertook. Eleven other witnesses swear to thirty-five years' knowledge of the family, to the entire absence of hereditary consumption, to soldier's soundness at enlistment, and to his condition after discharge. Henry Hammer and his wife lived within half a mile of soldier; never knew or heard of his being sickly; always able and ready to work; no tendency to or appearance of consumption. Other witnesses, who saw and talked with him every day, say he was able-bodied. The father says he was the toughest of all his boys. Dr. J. H. Campbell says he is acquainted with the Wilkins family, and can safely say consumption is not hereditary with them; has lived with the family during the past four years; is now, January 19, 1886, boarding with the soldier's father.

With such testimony, from such a crowd of accredited witnesses, the Pension Office could not do otherwise than allow the pension. It was withdrawn on the supposed discovery of evidence showing prior unsoundness, and then there ensued a series of special examinations. One of the special examiners who was sent to Illinois in search of a Dr. Goodhue, who it was supposed could give the desired evidence, concludes, as a result of his investigation, "I am of opinion that claimant should be returned to the rolls." This Dr. Goodhue is at last found in Iowa, and he says as to the soldier's prior condition, "He was not a robust man, but was considered a healthy man." He gives no testimony showing tendency to lung disease before enlistment. A special agent was sent to Chatham, N. Y., and all the proof was favorable to restoration. The special examiner who was sent to Iowa says, "It seemed to be a case of Wells vs. Wilkins," and his conclusion was that there was nothing on which to base a belief that Orrin Wilkins was in the least affected by lung difficulty, but, on the contrary, was sound and free from disease of every kind.

The committee are of the opinion that the effort to have the widow dropped from the roll, and its final success, is the result of a family feud; that the action of the Pension Office in stopping the pension can not be approved in view of the mass of testimony in favor of and justifying its allowance. The sole ground of this action is the possible existence of prior disability. In the opinion of the committee the admission of a soldier's soundness by the recruiting department should be conclusive on this point. In this case the testimony is voluminous and positive, but were it otherwise, a conclusion supporting the decision of the Pension Office would be to convict the recruiting service of having enlisted a man far gone in consumption.

Your committee are of the opinion that the claimant should be restored at the full rate of a widow's pension, and the bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH S. DE KRAFFT.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I call up the bill (S. 2730) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth S. de Krafft.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth S. de Krafft, widow of John Charles Philip de Krafft, late a commodore and rear-admiral in the United States Navy, and pay her a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of that which she is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. STRUBLE) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2730) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth S. de Krafft, have examined the same, and having considered the report made to the Senate on the bill, July 20, 1886, adopt it as the report of this committee.

A bill for the relief of this applicant was reported from your committee during the present session, but by a clerical error the final clause, "and pay her a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that which she is now receiving," was omitted, although it was clearly set forth in the report which accompanied the bill. Without that clause the bill only placed her on the pension-roll, which had already been done by the Pension Office under the general law, and it was on that ground vetoed by the President. The present bill is in proper form to correct the evident mistake in the previous one, and to reach the object proposed in the former report (Senate report No. 723), which we hereto annex, and we recommend the passage of the bill.

The petitioner, Elizabeth S. de Krafft, is the widow of John Charles Philip de Krafft, late commodore United States Navy. She was pensioned under the general law at the rate of $30 per month, commencing November 25, 1885, with an addition of $2 a month for one minor child.

By her petition, which is hereto appended, she asks that her pension be increased to $50 a month. It appears from the record of services of her husband that he was promoted to the rank of rear-admiral October 23, 1885, and that he died on the 29th of the same month.

It is believed that your committee have uniformly reported in favor of granting this increase to the widows of officers of this rank, and they therefore report a bill to increase her pension to $50 per month, with the recommendation that it do pass.

[Petition of Mrs. Elizabeth S. de Krafft for increase of pension.]

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The prayer of your petitioner showeth that she is the widow of Rear-Admiral J. C. P. de Krafft, United States Navy, who died October 29, 1885, after forty-five years' service in the Navy; that she is left with two children dependent upon her; that the small pension ($30 per month) she now receives is insufficient for her support; that she is not able to provide a living by her own exertions for herself and children; and she prays that Congress will grant her an increase of pension to the sum of $50 per month, as has been done in recent years in the case of widows and dependent families of senior officers of the Navy.

ELIZABETH S. DE KRAFFT.

The undersigned concur in this request of Mrs. de Krafft, and desire that it be granted by Congress.

He died at Washington, D. C., on the 29th of October, 1886

Mr. WALLACE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] tell us in what way this bill is changed so as to meet the objections made by the President?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. There was simply a clerical correction to be made. The bill as passed by the House at the last session did not do what it proposed to do. It put this lady in no better position than she was in before, and the President vetoed it on that account, and so stated, I think, in his veto.

Mr. WALLACE. Has the gentleman a copy of the veto message?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I can get it by sending for the RECORD; but it is as I have stated.

Mr. WALLACE. If the gentleman will assert of his own knowledge that that is the reason which the President gives for vetoing the bill I am satisfied.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. That is the reason. The omission was made, I suppose, by the draughtsman of the bill. It was clearly a mistake, and the bill was vetoed by the President on that account.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the mistake?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. The mistake consisted simply in this, that the bill did not do what it purported to do. It did not fix the rate of pension. She was already on the pension-roll, and the bill was introduced and passed by the House for the purpose of increasing her pension, but it did not do that. Therefore it left her just where she was before.

Mr. ROWELL. The President stated in his veto that the bill as passed by the House did only what was already done. That is, it put her on the pension-roll, but she was already on the pension-roll, and therefore the bill was of no account.

Mr. WALLACE. The object of the bill is to increase the pension from $30 to $50 a month, is it not?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALLACE. And was not that why the President vetoed it?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. He did not so state. There was no such provision in the original bill; it was omitted.

Mr. PETTIBONE. As I understand it, this lady was on the pension-roll for $30 a month, the amount to which she was entitled under the law.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes.

Mr. PETTIBONE. And the bill as passed did not increase that amount?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. No, sir.

Mr. PETTIBONE. And therefore the President vetoed it?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, and he so stated in his veto message—that the bill did not do what it purported to do, and was therefore of no benefit to the pensioner.

Mr. WALLACE. If that was the substance of the veto I will not object. I will ask the gentleman, however, to inform the House whether this increase is made under any law, or whether it is a mere gratuity.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. This is like a great number of other cases of the same kind where pensions have been increased by the House, and, as I stated when the bill was up before, this pension comes out of the naval pension fund.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES G. MATHES.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I call up the bill (S. 2220) granting a pension to James G. Mathes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James G. Mathes, late a corporal of Company L, Eighth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which gives a clear statement of this case, is herewith adopted:

The claimant was a private in Company L, Eighth Missouri Cavalry. He enlisted August 16, 1862, and was discharged June 14, 1865. The military record shows that he was treated in hospital for chronic diarrhea and debility, and that he was sick at the time of his discharge.

The testimony furnished by physicians who have attended him shows that he has chronic diarrhea and that he has rheumatism of the spinal muscles and limbs; that he is generally broken down.

Dr. Berry, of Carthage, Mo., says his health is bad; that he has muscular rheumatism; that he is generally broken down, and never will be able to perform full manual labor; that he is temperate and honorable in every respect.

Dr. Dalton, of Neosho, Mo., says:

"When I last saw him he seemed to be suffering from kidney disease and from abdominal pains. He has always appeared to me to be a run-down man—physically disabled."

Dr. Wills, of Neosho, Mo., says he has not been very stout and healthy since the war, and that he supposes his disability is at least one-fourth below that of a sound man. All the physicians speak positively as to his good habits and standing.

The claimant asks for a pension for chronic diarrhea and disease of kidneys, both of which, with rheumatism, are identified by the testimony of the doctors referred to above. An examination by the medical board in 1883 pronounces him entirely free from disease. An examination by this board in 1885 rates him one-half disabled.

The doctors who have attended him and the medical board of examiners disagree to some extent, which is not an uncommon occurrence, but the aggregate of testimony shows that for a long time heretofore he has been badly broken down, and that he is still to a pensionable extent disabled.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALLACE. Can the gentleman tell us how it happened that the medical board passed this applicant as free from disease so late as 1883? It seems to me that no medical board could, at so late a period, pass a man who now has the number of diseases set forth in that report. Can the gentleman explain that?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I do not know, sir, how the medical board happened to do that. I observe from the report filed by the Senate committee that the medical board did, in 1883, pronounce this man free from disease; but the medical board subsequently, in 1885, held that he was pensionable one-half. It is a fact well known to those who have had occasion to examine many pension cases that these medical boards often differ, not only as to the character of diseases but as to the general effect of them. I do not know on what ground the medical board made their report in 1883, but they did make it, and both the Senate and the House Pension Committees, after having investigated the case, have adopted the report which has just been read in the presence of the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. WALLACE. I think if this applicant was so seriously disabled as the report would indicate he would be entitled to receive a pension under the existing law at the Pension Office. In view of the fact that so late as 1883 a medical board made a report of the character described, I move that the bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I hope that will not be done on the report of the medical board. I know an instance in which a pensioner who came to my house to see me was complaining of varicose veins, which stood out thicker than my thumb; but when he went before the medical board they reported that nothing was the matter with him. These medical boards are fallible, as well as the rest of us.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Yes, they are very unreliable.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WALLACE that the bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that it lie on the table, there were—ayes 1, noes 33.

Mr. WALLACE. No quorum, I believe, has voted.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I think the Chair made a mistake in announcing the affirmative vote. No one rose to vote in the affirmative.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] voted in the affirmative.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. He only raised his hand. The direction of the Chair was that those in favor of the motion should rise, and remain standing until counted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana makes the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Louisiana whether it is his purpose to defeat the passage of this bill by insisting upon the point that there is no quorum?

Mr. WALLACE. I will answer the gentleman in very few words. In my opinion, at these sparsely-attended meetings of the House there is no possibility of these bills receiving fair consideration. No matter how strangely weak a bill which is reported here may be, it is very rarely that you see more than one or two members vote against it; and the only method I can find of securing a fair consideration for the interests of the Government in these matters is to resort to this method. It is very disagreeable to me. I invariably let every bill go through that seems to me fair, and right, and just; but when a bill of this kind comes up, presenting a case in which it is entirely within the power of the Pension Office to grant the pension if the party is entitled to it, and when even the report of the medical board, as embodied in the papers, is strangely at variance with the statements of the report of the committee, I see no recourse for me except to adopt some measure of this kind.

I claim that these bills are an outrage upon legislation. They are gotten up in the most reckless manner; and, as I have said, the only recourse I can see is to adopt such a measure as this, because it seems impracticable to get the House in these cases to consider the question as I do, from the standpoint of fairness, and justice, and proper care for the interests of the Government.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Will the gentleman from Louisiana consent that this bill go into the House——

Mr. WALLACE. I will not. I consider that the House has all the business it can attend to. These night sessions are especially set apart for the purpose of considering these pension bills; and no matter how friendly we may feel toward pensioners, I do not think we can ask more than this.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Is the gentleman willing to trust the question to the vote of a full House?

Mr. WALLACE. I will not consent to it in that way, because I do not consider it would be fair toward the House, or fair in reference to other legislation.

Mr. ROWELL. I will ask the gentleman whether he ever knew a bill go over at one of these night sessions and be voted for in full House, that was not passed?

Mr. WALLACE. I notice that a great many of these bills go through without even the reports being read. I notice that they are generally brought up when a majority of the House has gone home, as is usually the case on Friday afternoons. To-day we could hardly, at any time, get a quorum to vote on bills of great interest.

Mr ROWELL. Have not these bills always been passed upon a yea-and-nay vote when it took a majority of the whole House to pass them?

Mr. WALLACE. I refer to last Friday's work in this House, when bills which I claim to be decidedly objectionable were passed, and the reports were not even read. I claim that the vote of the House in such cases is no fair test. These bills are brought up at a time when invariably the House is thin. At about 4 o'clock members have generally left; and that is the hour when these matters are sprung upon the House.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I do not want any controversy with the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he has indulged this debate in the hope that a settlement would be reached. But the question is not debatable.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Let me make one additional request——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. So I understand; but I desire unanimous consent to make this request: that this bill may go into the House and be voted on after the report has been read. Will the gentleman consent that there may be a vote in the House under such circumstances? So far as I am concerned, I am willing the vote shall be taken without debate further than what may be involved in the reading of the report.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no objection to one bill going over; but there are other bills which may be objected to here, and I announce before hand that whenever there is a bill to which I see objection, I shall resort to this measure to try to defeat it; and I will not consent to a dozen bills going over every Friday night to take up the time of the House on the following Friday. Every possible obstacle seems to be thrown in the way to defeat the consideration on Fridays of business on the Private Calendar. In this way claims of large moment, and of quite as much importance to the parties concerned as these bills, are deprived of their proper consideration and the claimants debarred of their legitimate rights. When we give up an entire night every week for the consideration of these pension bills, I see no reason why we should yield and allow them to go over.

If members of the House do not take sufficient interest to come here and pass these pension bills, unless it be a small minority of thirty members, it is not my fault. I can not help it. I come here to do my duty, and I will resort to all means to carry out what I believe to be my duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint Mr. WALLACE and Mr. STONE, of Missouri, as tellers.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let us go into the House and have a call of the House. If the Democratic party is going to stop all pension business we might as well know the matter at once.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is a very small minority of the Democratic party.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 1, noes 32.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of no quorum?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir; I do not see anything else for me to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I suggest this bill be passed over, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

Mr. PETERS. Can that be done unless by unanimous consent?

Mr. WALLACE. I will agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to that suggestion?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MARY JANE MAGOON.

On motion of Mr. HAYNES, the bill (H. R. 9862) granting a pension to Mary Jane Magoon was taken up and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Mary Jane Magoon, widow of Nathan Magoon, late a private in Company H, Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.

The report [by Mr. HAYNES] was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Jane Magoon, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

Petitioner is widow of Nathan Magoon, a private in Company H, Seventh New Hampshire Regiment. Said Magoon was pensioned by special act of the present Congress, the disability upon which the act was based being rheumatism, as shown by the report of this committee in said case. He died May 1 last, very suddenly, from rheumatism of the heart, as shown by the affidavit of his attendant physician. The claimant's petition and affidavit of Dr. Gould are appended as a part of this report.

This committee report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

To the honorable Members of the United States House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN: My deceased husband, Nathan Magoon, late a private, Company H, Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers, was pensioned by a special act of Congress, passed during the past month. Since its passage, and before the act became complete, he fell from the chair upon which he was sitting, a corpse, his death being instantaneous. A physician was called (whose affidavit is herewith inclosed), who pronounced the cause of death rheumatism of the heart, a disease that Mr. Magoon had suffered with for many years, and upon which he claimed pension. By his death I am left in very straitened circumstances, and dependent on my daily labor in a shoe manufactory for the support of myself and the partial support of our two children. In consideration of these facts, I would most respectfully petition and ask that the generosity bestowed upon him, and which would have been shared by his family, be extended to myself, and that I be granted a widow's pension.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

MARY JANE MAGOON.

CANDIA, N. H., June 1, 1886.

GENERAL AFFIDAVIT.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,
County of Rockingham, ss:

In the matter of Nathan W. Magoon, a private of Company H, Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, personally came before me, a justice of the peace in and for aforesaid county and State, True M. Gould, aged fifty-four years, citizen of the town of Raymond, county of Rockingham, State of New Hampshire, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

I was the family physician of Mr. Nathan W. Magoon; I attended the said Magoon professionally during his sickness. He suffered from rheumatism contracted while in the service of the United States. He suffered severe pain. There was rheumatic disease of the heart. The said Magoon of late suffered from fainting fits. I have treated him for the same, and have made a physical examination of the heart and found the same diseased from the effects of rheumatism, and while at one of the neighbor's (his sister's), May 1, he suffered from one of the fainting spells and fell from the chair and expired. I was called, and from the history given me by those present I have no doubt that his death was from rheumatic disease of the heart. The appearance of the corpse had the usual external signs of death from rheumatic heart disease.

I further declare that I have no interest in said case, and was not concerned in its prosecution.

TRUE M. GOULD, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day by the above-named affiant; and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant, and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same. I further certify that I am in nowise interested in said case, nor am I concerned in its prosecution; and that said affiant is personally known to me; that he is a creditable person, and so reputed in the community in which he resides.

Witness my hand and official seal 1st day of June, 1886.

JOHN T. BARTTELL,
Justice of the Peace.

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANDREW J. VANORDER.

On motion of Mr. NEECE, the bill (H. R. 8067) to pension Andrew J. Vanorder was taken up and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Andrew J. Vanorder, late of Company —, Twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8067), beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant enlisted August 15, 1861, in Company D, Twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteers. He served until February 15, 1864, to take effect January 4, 1864, and was mustered out, and he re-enlisted January 5, 1864, and was mustered into the same company and regiment, and served until the close of the war, and was discharged March 15, 1866. He filed his application for a pension January 24, 1876, alleging that in line of duty in April, 1865, he contracted disease of the heart and liver. His application was rejected on December 24, 1882, on the ground that there is no medical evidence to the treatment of the diseases in the service.

The evidence shows that the claimant enlisted while quite young; that to all appearances he was a sound and healthy man, and free from any disease whatever; that when he was discharged he was in very poor health, completely broken down, and has remained so ever since. A large amount of evidence is taken in the case, all going to show that since he came out of the Army he has been in very poor health and not able to perform any labor more than half the time; that he is a very poor man and compelled to make whatever living he gets by manual labor.

Dr. Kemper, the surgeon of his regiment, testifies that he remembers the claimant and thinks he treated him in the service, but can not remember for what.

H. Rhodes, late captain Company H, Twenty-eighth Illinois, testifies that claimant was a sound man at enlistment, and on or about May, 1865, near Mobile, Ala., he was taken sick while in the service; that the regiment was ordered to Texas, and that afterward he returned to the regiment in Texas in ill health and was detached to commissary department on account of it.

G. H. Kirkland and I. W. Sargent, late of said company, testify that claimant was taken sick while in the service, about April, 1865, and that his disease was of the heart and liver.

G. H. Courtland, a comrade in said regiment, testifies substantially to the same state of facts.

Dr. J. W. Root testifies to treating claimant in 1865 for chronic inflamation of liver and general debility.

Dr. Prentiss testifies to treating claimant in 1877 for a pain in the left side and breast and general debility.

Dr. Clark testifies to treating claimant several times for torpid liver.

G. W. Day says he has read medicine; that he has been personally acquainted with claimant for over twenty years; that he has been since his return from the Army suffering from the disease of liver and heart, and that he has in consequence of said disability been unable to work more than one-half his time.

J. M. Bansee and W. E. Mason testify May, 1877, that they have known claimant for the last twelve years; that he is a man of good habits, and that he has in consequence of his sickness been disabled at least one-half the time. Mason also testifies that he served in said company with the claimant, and that he was with him at the date of his discharge, and that to his knowledge he knows him to be at the date of his discharge suffering from a disease of the heart and liver.

G. H. Kertland testifies to the same as Mason.

B. C. Gillam, late captain of the said company of claimant, testifies that the claimant was a sound and healthy man at enlistment. Mr. Gillam resigned and was not with the company after November 21, 1862. He visited the regiment in July, 1863, at Vicksburg; he saw Vanorder; he was well and on duty; he saw no more of the claimant until after he returned home. On the 7th day of December, 1882, the same witness swore before the special examiner that the claimant had been sick of late years; he has been sick a good deal, but whether it was on account of his service affiant could not say; thinks claimant was persuaded to apply for a pension.

This same witness, B. C. Gillam, on September 10, 1880, states, in a letter to the Pension Office, that claimant "is in as good health as any man, and I think there is some false swearing; that claimant is a very lazy, shiftless creature, and not entitled to a pension," &c.

The contents of this letter was not known to claimant in all probability, and seems to display malice toward the claimant, and no doubt largely influenced the action of the Pension Office in rejecting his claim. The medical examiner in the case has rated claimant at one-half disability. Just how Mr. Gillam can reconcile his swearing in December, 1882, and his letter of September, 1880, is hard to understand, and when contrasted with all the other evidence in the case, the great number of doctors who have treated claimant since discharge, and the four comrades and a large number of neighbors, who have testified to claimant's disability since discharge, there can be but one conclusion, that the letter written by Mr. Gillam was the result of malice. The great array of witnesses who have testified in claimant's favor are known to be reputable, and so certified. The evidence seems to make out a strong case in claimant's favor. Therefore your committee recommend that the bill be amended by adding the letter "D" after the word "Company," in the fifth line, and that the bill do pass.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ARCHBELL DONNELLY.

On motion of Mr. STRUBLE, the committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9734) for the relief of Archbell Donnelly; which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Archbell Donnelly, late a private in Company B, Fourth United States Artillery, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and to pay him such rate of pension as under this act, and such other laws upon the subject of pensions not inconsistent herewith, he may be entitled to receive.

The report (by Mr. STRUBLE) was read, as follows:

The soldier enlisted May 1, 1878, in Company B, Fourth United States Artillery, to serve for five years, and was discharged April 3, 1883, because of disease of the eyes contracted in the line of duty.

On June 29, 1883, he filed his declaration for a pension, alleging that while a member of Company B, Fourth United States Artillery, in the service and in the line of his duty at Fort Adams, in the State of Rhode Island, on or about the 11th day of December, 1882, he was detailed in the Quartermaster's Department, at mason work, he received injuries to the eyes, caused by cement and gravel falling into them, which by the evidence is shown to have occurred while he was engaged at mason work in a cistern. He was granted a pension November 8, 1883, at $24 per month, commencing June 29, 1883.

On April 9, 1885, he filed an application for increase, alleging total disability on account of disease of the eyes. This application was rejected July 7, 1885, after medical examination, on the ground that "disease of eyes was the result of syphilis," and on December 8, 1885, the pensioner's name was dropped from the rolls upon the opinion of the medical examining board of Washington "that his present disability was not incident to the service and line of duty."

In order to justify the conclusions to which your committee have arrived, it is necessary to present with some measure of fullness the facts in the case. The certificate of discharge, signed by C. B. Throckmorton, captain Fourth United States Artillery, contains the following statements:

"This man Donnelly was injured on the 16th of June, 1882, and returned to duty on the 12th of January, 1883. I was informed by Dr. Hammond, post surgeon, on January 31 and February 28, 1883, there was nothing the matter with him, and he should be made to take off his goggles; but when Dr. Hammond went on the sick report, I sent the man to the hospital to Dr. Loring, who directed this certificate to be made out. This man's eyes were so much injured that he was obliged to wear goggles. * * * This man was injured in repairing a cistern while employed in the Quartermaster's Department, and the injury was contracted in line of duty."

The usual medical certificate of disability is attached to the discharge, although part of it has been torn off, and hence the full certificate of the surgeon cannot be made out.

Under date of October 14, 1885, Captain Throckmorton forwarded to the honorable Commissioner of Pensions, through the Adjutant-General of the Army, from Jackson Barracks, Louisiana, a communication, as follows:

"Archbell Donnelly was a private in Light Battery B whilst I commanded it, and was on extra duty in the quartermaster's department at Fort Adams, Rhode Island, as mason and plasterer. Whilst engaged in this duty his eyes were injured by cement or mortar falling in them. He was treated by Dr. Hammond and returned to duty. I, as his commanding officer, was not satisfied with the result of the treatment, and therefore placed him on duty where, to some extent, he was enabled to keep his eyes shaded. As soon as the medical officer was relieved I sent him before the new surgeon, Dr. Loring, for treatment. Dr. Loring informed me officially that the eyesight of one eye was gone and the other eye badly affected. I had him discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability. The records of the Light Battery B, Fourth Artillery, and the post hospital at Fort Adams will show the facts. I know this man lost his sight whilst in the line of duty."

Under date of October 21, 1885, Augustus Strassmuster, hospital steward, United States Army, testified under oath, as follows:

"I hereby certify that Archbell Donnelly, late private of the Fourth Artillery, while serving at Fort Adams, Rhode Island, was instructed to repair or work in a cistern, and that he reported to the post surgeon, complaining of a severe pain in his eye, and stated that while in the cistern a lot of cement or some other matter had fallen into his eyes, and I know that they were highly inflamed, the inflammation being undoubtedly due to some intensely irritating substance having recently come in contact with the eyes. He was treated with sulphate of zinc, morphine, atropia, shades, and rest; and was finally discharged on surgeon's certificate for this contracted disorder. The soldier was dropped from the pension-rolls because of a report of the Washington medical board of examining surgeons, who, under date of June 12, 1885, reported, after detailing the condition of his eyes, that "He presents unmistakable evidence of constitutional syphilis, and it is most probable that the disease of eyes is attributable to that cause."

The case having been subsequently referred to said examiners for further examination, said board, under date of September 15, 1885, reported that they had again examined the claimant and found enlargement of the bicipital gland, and also of the inguinal glands of each side; also, that they found symmetrical copper-colored blotches in the skin. They conclude this second report by saying "we are satisfied of the presence of constitutional syphilis in this case."

The report of the Surgeon-General of the Army, giving the record of the soldier's treatment, shows nothing of any venereal disease. He was examined August 22, 1883, by the Washington medical board, Drs. Stanton and Tyler present, who said nothing about any such disease or of any indications thereof. He was again examined May 18, 1885, by the Washington medical board, then composed of Drs. Brackett, Tyler, and Walsh (all being present), who say nothing of any disease except that of the eyes.

On July 5, 1883, and again on April 3, 1885, Dr. DeWitt, surgeon in the United States Army, and in attendance upon the Soldier's Home, examined the soldier and reported his condition, but said nothing about syphilis or any other private disease.

Dr. Clifton Mayfield, in an affidavit made November 11, 1885, testifies as follows:

"That he had said Donnelly under treatment while he (the doctor) was resident physician in Barnes Hospital, United States Soldiers' Home, District of Columbia. Said Donnelly entered that hospital in June, 1883, and remained until January, 1884. He frequently presented himself at sick-call for treatment. From March, 1884, to June, 1884, he was again in hospital. The disability for which he entered the hospital was optic neuritis. His statement was, that some months previous, while yet in the United States Army, he had suffered injury to the eyes from gravel and cement falling into them while he was on duty working in a well, and that he was discharged the service for the resulting disability.

"At the time of entering the hospital he had lost the sight of the left eye and partially lost the sight of the right eye. He was able with the right eye only to recognize persons or objects at close range; could not do any reading or fine work. Loss of sight of right eye became steadily more complete. At the present time (November 10, 1885) when a hand is held close to his face, he recognizes with the right eye some obstacle between himself and the light, but nothing more. During the whole course of his treatment he has suffered with brain trouble, as evidenced by greatly impaired muscular power, unsteady gait, and epileptic form of convulsions. While under treatment at Soldiers' Home no evidences of syphilis were found, though careful examination was made as to such cause. Treatment for syphilis as a test also failed to give any results. The loss of sight necessitates an attendant, and he is unable to perform any manual labor."

Dr. John J. Stafford, of Washington, under date of November 12, 1885, testifies to treating the soldier for six weeks for epilepsy; that he had made a thorough examination of Donnelly, and had come to the conclusion that his present condition, as far as his nervous disease was concerned, was due to an injury of the head (scars of which injury are still plainly visible), said to have been received while in the United States service.

Under date of January 28, 1886, Dr. F. B. Loring, of 1407 New York avenue, this city, an eminent specialist in eye and ear difficulties, as your committee are informed, certified as follows:

"I have examined Mr. A. Donnelly's eyes, and find that his blindness is the result of double optic neuritis, followed by atrophy of ball disks of long standing, and incurable."

Under same date Dr. Z. T. Sowers of this city, certified:

"I have made a careful examination of Mr. Archbell Donnelly, and can find no evidence of his having had syphilis."

Under date of January 29, 1886, Dr. D. W. Bliss, of this city, testified:

"I have carefully examined Archbell Donnelly, and am unable to find any typical evidence of syphilis."

Donnelly under date of November 23, 1885, swears that he has never, at any time, had venereal disease in any form, nor any disease of the eyes prior to receiving injuries while in the United States service and on duty at Fort Adams, Newport, R. I.

The report of the Assistant Adjutant-General shows that Donnelly was present for duty on all rolls up to the time of the incurrence of the disease of the eyes. By the report of the assistant surgeon, United States Army, it appears that on June 13, 1882, he entered the post hospital with sprained left ankle, but was returned for duty the third day thereafter, and by the same report, that on August 1, 1882, he entered same hospital with contusion of right ankle, and returned to duty the second day thereafter, making in all five days in hospital prior to the injury to his eyes. This is a good record, and from a careful consideration of all the evidence in the case your committee are satisfied that this man was a good, faithful soldier, and that he is worthy of the most charitable and liberal treatment at the hands of the law-making power of the Government.

It seems to have been the theory of the Pension Department that if, prior to or at the time the soldier was working in the cistern, he had syphilis, then no matter, though there might have fallen into his eyes cement and sand, and by reason thereof irritation was caused, which, but for the physical condition of the soldier occasioned by syphilis, would readily have yielded to treatment, but which in consequence of the syphilis, or the condition of the system occasioned thereby, did not and would not yield to treatment, but led to a permanent incurable condition of the eyes, that then, and in that case, no pension could be allowed the soldier. This position is, in the judgment of your committee, untenable. If the man had had, or did have, syphilis, which had not and might not cause serious disease or any disease of the eyes had not the cement or sand or some other irritating cause fallen into them, and while in the service and the line of duty, as is clearly shown in this case, cement and sand fell into his eyes and caused a degree of irritation and disease which the syphilis would not have caused, then, in the judgment of the committee, the Government should at least pension the man for the disability which it occasioned him, be it much or little.

If the man had syphilis or had had it, that was bad enough without the Government of the United States, when he was clearly in the line of his duty as a soldier, adding to his affliction by causing a degree of disease which the soldier, but for the accident, might never have suffered. Your committee desire not to be understood as in any manner holding that the evidence shows the soldier ever had syphilis; on the contrary, we hold that, by a clear preponderance of the evidence, it is shown he did not have such disease when the accident occurred, nor had he primarily suffered from such disease. Therefore the Committee on Pensions, without hesitation, recommend that the original bill (H. R. 6843) do lie on the table, and that the following substitute be passed:

A bill for the relief of Archbell Donnelly.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Archbell Donnelly, late a private in Company B, Fourth United States Artillery, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and to pay him such rate of pension as under this act, and such other laws upon the subject of pensions not inconsistent herewith, he may be entitled to receive.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill (H. R. 6843) for which the present bill has been substituted, has already been laid on the table.

Mr. STRUBLE. I move that the bill (H. R. 9734) be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALLACE. No one here can approve of a bill like this becoming a law. The whole report is one which I think should not be offered to any intelligent body. In the first place, it is an indorsement of immorality, not to speak of and irrespective of that it is an insult to the medical board. If we have a medical board for this purpose, surely the first requirement we can make of them is to diagnose a case referred to them; and this is so clear a diagnosis I do not see how the Committee on Pensions could come to the conclusion submitted in this report.

I dislike to take issue in this small House, but I shall be compelled to do so on this bill. If my friends think proper to pass it, I give them notice they will have to do so with a quorum.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a moment. I do not know to what extent the gentleman from Louisiana may go in opposition to this bill. He has substantially remarked that, in his opinion, the report in this case is an insult to the House of Representatives, as well as to the medical board to which he alluded. I am here to say, Mr. Chairman, that, in my opinion, no gentleman in this House possessing a fair mind would make any such assertion. Whatever is true in connection with the right of a soldier to pension ought to be stated in the presence of this House, although it may be a matter of delicacy. I take no pleasure in investigating cases which may involve questions of delicacy, but it became my duty, as a member of the Committee on Pensions, to examine into this case, to examine the papers, which I did carefully, because I concede when I commenced the examination it was with prejudice against the case, occasioned by the ground upon which the Commissioner of Pensions ordered his name dropped from the rolls.

But, sir, when I came to examine it carefully, and re-examine it, against my prejudices, there came to my mind the irresistible conviction that this man had been done a grave wrong by the Pension Department. Sir, it is uncontradicted that this man was as good a soldier, and I doubt not from the record, as any we have in the regular service. It is uncontradicted that he was a mason, and was detailed for service in the place named in the report; and that while he was engaged at work in a cistern there fell into his eyes cement and gravel, and from that moment his eyes, according to the undisputed testimony of his captain, became sore and troublesome, the condition growing in severity gradually until blindness was the result. He applied for a pension, and his application was granted. His pension rose until at a later period he applied for an increase because of increasing disability; and then, upon the report of the Washington city examining board, in 1885, the Commissioner of Pensions deemed it his duty not only to deny the application for an increase, but also to drop him from the pension-rolls altogether, because the board referred to had reported that, in their opinion, the man had had this unfortunate disease, and that probably this disease was the cause of the soreness of the eyes.

Now, sir, it appears that a re-reference of this case was made to the same board, and they examined the applicant again and made a similar report; but as against this testimony I ask this committee and the gentleman from Louisiana, to consider the fact that there is embodied in the report the testimony of the hospital steward, the testimony of Dr. Clifton Mayfield, the testimony of Dr. Stafford, the testimony of Dr. Loring, of Dr. Sowers, and finally the testimony of Dr. Bliss, all contradicting the report of the Washington board.

Mr. Chairman, I have not the least desire, and shall not make any reflections whatever upon the competency and efficiency of the Washington board; but I submit as a fair question in view of this preponderance of testimony, what ought the committee to do?

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, where the case shows so plainly that the Washington board must have made a mistake in their judgment of the man's physical condition, and made, though unintentionally, such a report as caused injustice to be done the pensioner, I maintain it to be our duty to undo the wrong in so far as we may be able.

Sir, it appears that at the Soldiers' Home this man was treated in a manner and with a view to making certain whether or not he had such a disease, but the clear testimony of the physician who so treated him was that there were no symptoms of the disease named.

This test was applied to the man, as shown in the report, and did not develop the symptoms which, according to the report of the Washington board, ought, I presume, to have been manifest, and it is the testimony of the several physicians that no such disease existed, which testimony was subsequent to the examination by the board in this case.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit to this House upon the facts in the case whether the gentleman from Louisiana was justified in flinging out here before this committee his insinuation that offense should be taken simply because a plain statement of the case is made in the report, and made from that sense of duty which I apprehend governs each member of the committee and of the House in the discharge of his duty in investigating such questions.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this bill will be passed without further delay or discussion.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to recall most certainly any insinuation that may even have been implied in the remark I made as to the Committee on Pensions. I am sure that in making the report they were entirely sincere in doing it, but from my standpoint it does seem a most remarkable report to make upon a statement of facts such as is presented here.

In the conclusion of the report, in speaking of this disease, the committee finds it wise and proper to consent to the assertion that if this man had not been subjected to this injury by the fall of sand in his eyes he would probably not have had his eyesight affected. Although I do not claim to be much of a doctor, I know that the disease in this case is more likely to develop itself as a result of apparently outside causes, while the disease itself is the original cause, and will develop in a man in whose system it lurks as an apparent result of outside causes. But, I repeat, the disease itself is the original cause of the trouble. It is the disease inherent and dormant in the man, and therefore a slight injury, exposure to cold or dust from a railway train, may conduce to develop the disease if the physical condition of the man is such as the condition of this man unquestionably was.

Therefore I say that we are not here to reward by a pension cases which have proceeded from constitutional diseases acquired by immoral habits of life; and the mere circumstances of this case indicate that the gravel or sand was simply an exciting cause, but that the original trouble lay in the disease itself. So that in pensioning this man after the statement of the medical board whose duty it is to investigate these cases, we would simply be putting ourselves in the position of pensioning a soldier in the army because he had contracted a disease of that kind, which certainly is not a position in which I wish to find myself, and I do not think any other member of the House wishes to find himself. The stimulating influence has nothing whatever to do with the trouble, for the inherent disease is that from which the trouble comes. I do not think, out of respect to the medical board, placed in that position and for that particular business, that we have any right to go behind their testimony, and I shall not be a party to do it.

Mr. ROWELL. As I read this report, this man was for some four years in the active service.

Mr. MORRILL. Five years.

Mr. ROWELL. Nearly five years; and during that time he was ready for duty with the exception of five days up to the time when he received this injury. During the time when he was fit for duty he performed such service as soldiers of the regular Army are called on to perform. The gentleman from Louisiana says that he does not think proof should be taken, or that we have a right to go behind the testimony of the medical board. The medical board is composed of three doctors. Under that theory, then, if fifty of most expert physicians should come here and testify that the three doctors made a mistake, we are bound to take the report of the doctors based simply upon an opinion without any regard to other important testimony bearing upon the case, even if they have no knowledge of the facts.

They have no knowledge of any fact. They set up a fact denied under oath by the claimant himself. They give an opinion. That opinion is tested by medical treatment to see whether it is correct by another surgeon of the Army in charge at the Soldiers' Home, and when the test is put to their opinion, the test proves that their opinion is incorrect.

Now, I have a good deal of respect for these medical boards; but I know they have a great many people to examine, and I know they make a great many mistakes. I have in my mind a medical board who reported that a soldier had no disease, who, since he came home from the army, had been in bed three months each year from chronic rheumatism, and within a week from the time that they reported he had no disability he was down again in bed and remained in bed almost six months, suffering from that disease, and they found out they were mistaken. I knew another instance where a medical board testified as to a man who had his breast stove in by a horse in a charge, that he had no disability, yet it turned out that his lung was nearly destroyed by that injury. This only proves that these medical boards are fallible men. Doctors sometimes are mistaken, and very frequently disagree.

It is a question here of preponderance of testimony. All of the testimony shows an original injury—an original injury sufficient to put the man's eyes out. All of the testimony, except that of the medical board, was to the effect that the medical examination failed on a test to discover any such disease as the medical board thought the man must have had. We have here an original exciting cause, an original undisputed injury, sufficient to put the man's eyes out, and an overwhelming amount of medical testimony confirming that with additional proofs, and only the opinion of the medical board against it.

We ought to act here like a jury. We ought to act like reasonable men. Will any one say that this evidence submitted to any jury would not produce a verdict without the jury leaving the box, in favor of the theory that this disability was incurred in the service and was not the result of a disease, as intimated in the opinion of the medical board?

I hope that this blind man, who lost his eyes while a soldier, and in the service, shall not be permitted to be disgraced and to go down the balance of his life a blind man without Government aid.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] how he gets over such a statement as I find here in the report. I pass over several phrases that I suppose none of us exactly understand.

Mr. ROWELL. I suppose the gentleman has reference to what are stated as the indications of the disease.

Mr. WALLACE. Besides these other indications the examiners stated that they found symmetrical copper blotches in the skin, and these, as I understand, are the strongest testimonies that doctors find for that disease.

Mr. ROWELL. If you examine a great many men you will find copper-colored blotches that do not come from any such disease. Other doctors who have examined this man do not attribute this to any such thing. And the giving of medicine for the purpose of developing whether those copper-colored blotches were due to the cause attributed proved that the examiners were mistaken in so attributing them.

Mr. WALLACE. That was several years afterwards.

Mr. ROWELL. No, sir. It was in November, 1885; and it was in the summer of 1885 that this Washington board found their alleged facts.

Mr. WALLACE. But he was granted a pension in 1883; so that this must have been at least two or three years afterwards.

Mr. ROWELL. He was examined by the medical board here in Washington in 1885.

Mr. WALLACE. But he got his pension in 1883, did he not?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALLACE. And he was examined under this medical test——

Mr. ROWELL. In 1885.

Mr. WALLACE. In September, 1885.

Mr. ROWELL. And in November, 1885, the doctors at the Soldiers' Home made the medical test by giving him medicine.

Mr. WALLACE. Three years afterwards.

Mr. ROWELL. Two months afterwards; and the doctor in Rhode Island, the Army surgeon, did not discover anything: and it was then the time when a discovery could be made if any such disease existed.

Mr. WOLFORD. I want to say a word or two in relation to this case in order that we may all understand each other better. The Democratic party are all in favor of pensions, little as the gentlemen over on that side may think so. But they may disagree as to the amount of testimony necessary in order to give a man a pension, and they may disagree as to who are entitled to pensions and the amount of pensions that may be given. For my part I think I am tolerably liberal, although I am opposed to large pensions.

But I want now to talk a little about this case that we may understand each other. There is no disposition on the part of Democrats—I may say there is no disposition on the part of any Democrat here to vote against a pension. There is no hatred in the heart of any Democrat. My brother from Louisiana has no objection to a pension where the injury for which it is claimed is fairly proved. But here the question is about the injury being fairly proved. The question in this case brings to my mind an old saying that I have heard ever since I was a boy, "When doctors disagree what shall the sick do?"

There is disagreement among the doctors about this man, but I believe there is no disagreement as to certain important facts in the case. It is agreed that this man was a soldier, and it is soldiers that we desire to pension; it is soldiers that my friend from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] desires to pension. This man was a soldier for four years; that was long enough to test him in that capacity. There is no disagreement as to the fact that he is now blind and poor. He has done the best he could, he has served his country, he is now blind and disabled; the doctors disagree as to the cause of his disease, but the preponderance of testimony is in his favor, and shall we not give him the benefit of the doubt?

I will tell you what I would not do, and I do not believe that my distinguished friend from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] would do it either in a case like this—the case of a man who has done his duty as a soldier, who has served his country, and who through misfortune has become blind and helpless, and in need of sympathy and assistance—in such a case, even if there was some doubt as to the cause of the disability, I would not take advantage of that circumstance to deny him the recognition and aid which he has earned from a grateful country.

Mr. WALLACE. This man was not in the war.

Mr. WOLFORD. He was a soldier for four years.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes; he entered the army in 1878.

Mr. WOLFORD. Well, he was a soldier.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes; but not in the war.

Mr. WOLFORD. I do not know that it matters anything whether a man was in battle or not, provided he was a soldier. This man was a soldier, and although he may not have been in the war in which we brothers fought each other, he undoubtedly stood ready to defend the flag of his country against all assailants. He may have served his country in fighting against the Indians. At all events he did his duty; he stood by his flag, and I care not whether he was in the war or not, if he did his duty as a soldier, he is entitled to the sympathy and aid of this Government now that he is helpless and unable to care for himself. I ask my friend from Louisiana to come up as I would do under such circumstances, and as I propose to do upon this occasion—to come up and show his Democratic faith by voting in accordance with the Democratic platform and the Democratic doctrine, which is that we shall vote for all reasonable pensions. This being, according to my judgment, a reasonable pension, I intend to vote for it. This is a case about which the doctors disagree.

It is a case about which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] disagree, but let us all agree here that we will exercise our best judgment and, having exercised it, that we will vote as we please, and not raise the point of "no quorum."

The question was taken on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, and the Chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALLACE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 4.

Mr. WALLACE. No quorum.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over, so that the business of this session may proceed.

Mr. STRUBLE. I make the same request, but I do not wish the bill to lose its place on the Calendar.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let it be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. WALLACE. I shall have to object to that, Mr. Chairman. I have no objection to the bill being passed over, but if it is to retain its place and come up here evening after evening, and we are to have this whole discussion over again, I must object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] that there is no way to take the bill out of its place on the Calendar.

Mr. DOCKERY. I withdraw the request that the bill retain its place on the Calendar, and merely ask unanimous consent that it be passed over informally.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JOSEPHINE DA COSTA THOMAS.

Mr. WOLFORD. I call up the House bill (H. R. 4688) granting an increase of pension to Josephine Da Costa Thomas, and I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, May 26, 1886.

Resolved, That this bill pass with an amendment: In line 2, strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "forty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. WOLFORD. I want to make a brief statement before the vote is taken. This bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions unanimously, fixing the pension at $40. In the House the amount was cut down to $30. The bill went to the Senate, and that body again fixed the pension at $40. Considering the great services of the man whose widow is to receive this pension, we thought that $40 was not too much, and we reported in favor of concurring in the amendment of the Senate. There has been a report from the Senate Committee on Pensions fixing this pension at $40, and two reports from the House committee, both unanimous, to the same effect. I ask that the amendment of the Senate be agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH E. NORTON.

Mr. SAWYER. I call up the bill (S. 2699) granting a pension to Sarah E. Norton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. Norton, a volunteer nurse during the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, from an examination of the papers on file, believe that this is a meritorious case, and that the report of the Pension Committee of the Senate contains a fair statement, and would adopt that report as the report of this committee.

[Senate Report No. 1372, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The facts upon which this bill is based for a pension for Sarah E. Norton, a volunteer nurse in the late war, are fully set out in the following petition and accompanying papers. Your committee, after an examination of the same, report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment: Add at the end of the bill the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

To the honorable Committee of Pensions, United States Senate:

GENTLEMEN: I, Sarah E. Norton, was a volunteer nurse during the war of the rebellion, and respectfully petition your honorable body to consider this my sworn statement and the accompanying proofs of service, and if upon merits as thus shown, and because of my physical weakness and suffering during all the years since the war closed and to continue as long as I live, can favorably do so, to grant my petition for a pension at $25 per month. In Genesee County, New York, up to 1863, after the war began, I labored with other loyal women in gathering hospital supplies for our soldiers. Then I decided, as for myself, I must take a more active part, and so tendered my services by letter to Mrs. D. P. Livermore, of the Chicago Sanitary Commission; accepted by letter of April 29, 1863, where I went in readiness for duty, and received my appointment May 8, 1863 [see appointment], and was assigned to duty at Benton Barracks Hospital, Saint Louis, Mo., where I labored as faithfully as I knew how and as was the will and wish of all there, where, if at any hospital in the land, it could speak for itself, to any one, it did, whether patient or visitor, and it was one of those hospitals so well recognized in every way it needs no praise of mine. And as one of its corps of workers—and there were many—do I ask credit or consideration. I was there six months, when I was taken violently ill, caused by my arduous work and the malaria of the country, from which I have never fully recovered. I am a frail woman, and in no condition of health to labor.

The physician who attended me in 1864, Dr. Clark, of Batavia, is dead. I inclose an affidavit of Alonzo Henshaw, now assistant principal Omaha high school, at Omaha, Nebr., at whose father's house I was ill. [See affidavit.]

I frequently received supplies from friends as a donation for my sick.

My present physical condition is weak. I am lame from an accident, and obliged to wear a cork lift 3 inches. As to my present physical condition, I submit a certificate from Dr. Thomas Hood. As to my need and worthiness as a woman I submit a letter from William C. Watson, attorney and counselor-at-law, of Batavia, N. Y., with an accompanying petition signed by about one hundred of the leading citizens of Genesee County, New York, who thus show their interest in my welfare, and have vainly tried to aid me to reach some Government employ which would comfortably support me, but which I have never in all the years since the war been allowed, notwithstanding earnest efforts on their part and my own.

I am a member of the Army Nurses' Association, from which I submit a letter (Exhibit H), with an earnest hope my case may receive favorable consideration.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SARAH E. NORTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 12, 1886.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 14th day of June, A. D. 1886.

[SEAL.] JAMES H. SMITH,
Notary Public.

OFFICE OF CHICAGO SANITARY COMMISSION,
Chicago, May 8, 1863.

Miss Sarah E. Norton has been this day appointed nurse in the military hospitals of the Western department by authority delegated to Mrs. A. H. Hoge and Mrs. D. P. Livermore by Miss D. L. Dix, general superintendent of nurses in military hospitals in the United States.

For D. L. Dix:

Mrs. D. P. LIVERMORE,
Chicago Sanitary Commission.

Miss Sarah E. Norton has been detailed to service in the Benton Barracks Hospital.

N. B.—If the place of service is changed a new certificate will be issued.

JAMES E. YEATMAN,
Appointment Office.

OMAHA, NEBR., May 7, 1886.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that Miss Sarah Eunice Norton, after quitting service in Benton Barracks Hospital, Saint Louis, Mo., and coming to Batavia, N. Y., was ill for many months in my father's house, where I was then living, and that her physician, Dr. Clark, who is now dead, attributed her illness to the overwork and exposure she had undergone in the capacity of nurse in Benton Barracks Hospital.

ALONZO NORTON HENSHAW,
Assistant Principal Omaha High School.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 7th day of May, A. D. 1886.

[SEAL.] WM. L. McCAGUE,
Notary Public.

The bearer, Miss Sarah E. Norton, has been personally known to me since 1879, during which time she has constantly been an invalid, and often required the use of crutch or cane in walking. In addition to this special cause of disability (disease of one of the hips) she has suffered in general health. That she is seriously disabled is apparent to the most casual observer who sees her attempt to walk.

Miss Norton, when I first made her acquaintance (when she applied to me for professional service), referred her disability to the hardships, exposure, &c., to which she was subjected when she served, during the late war, as a nurse, and I have always believed that to have been true. She is a lady of most benevolent Christian character, who enjoys the confidence and esteem of all who know her, and since all her friends believe that her disabled condition is due to the service she rendered as an army nurse, they join in the hope that she may receive from Congress the aid which she so much deserves.

Late Surgeon and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Volunteers, and Medical Referee of the Pension Office.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 14, 1886.

BATAVIA, N. Y., March 23, 1883.

DEAR MISS NORTON: I inclose your petition, with indorsement of the county officials, bank officers, and leading business men of Batavia. You will see that it embraces the very best men in our community. No stronger recommend could possibly be procured in this vicinity. I have not tried to secure the greatest number of names, but have only presented it to persons who know you and who are known and recognized as among our most influential citizens, and every one to whom I have shown the paper has signed it willingly and expressed an earnest desire to aid you. The people of this town know that you are worthy and competent, and you may be assured that it affords them real pleasure to try to aid you. I sincerely hope you may succeed.

Very truly and respectfully,

WILLIAM C. WATSON.

PETITION.

The undersigned citizens of Genesee County, New York, are personally acquainted with the petitioner, and heartily indorse her application:

[Office of the secretary of Army Nurses' Association, 534 Twentieth street NW.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 15, 1886.

The honorable Committee of Pensions, United States Senate:

GENTLEMEN: Miss Sarah E. Norton became a member of this association early in 1882, upon the most conclusive evidence of an honorable service as a nurse in the Western army, chiefly at Benton Barracks Hospital, Missouri, resigning her work there in the fall of 1863 only because of a serious illness incurred by her arduous duties there and the care of those sick with malignant fevers, which illness became a very dangerous one for her, being afflicted with a terrible abscess in the stomach, from which she was very ill for many months, and from which, as her every appearance proves, she has never recovered from the effects of, and is a frail and suffering woman. For this cause she became unable to resume hospital work after the fall of 1863, as the war closed before she recovered sufficiently to do so.

This association most earnestly sympathizes with Miss Norton in this tardy effort to reach the much-needed relief a pension will be to her. Her present necessities are great, inasmuch as her health, as stated (and because of extreme lameness making the constant use of a cane in walking necessary), precludes her from filling places she might otherwise to earn a living, as she is an intelligent, practical woman, and one most worthy of the benefit she seeks, and we request a most favorable consideration of her case, feeling few have the same claim by their unceasing suffering as this petitioner.

We have the honor to be, most respectfully,

HARRIET P. DAME,
President Army Nurses' Association.
H. A. B. CORTS, Secretary.

The committee would recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "twenty-five" in the seventh line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twelve," and that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS G. POLLEY.

Mr. LAFFOON. I call up the bill (H. R. 5629) granting a pension to Thomas G. Polley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas G. Polley, late of Company D, One hundred and tenth Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) was read, as follows:

Thomas G. Polley enlisted as a private August 15, 1862, in Company H, One hundred and tenth Illinois Volunteers, and was discharged June 8, 1865.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground of "no record and no competent evidence of origin."

Claimant states in the latter part of 1862, at Stone River or Murfreesborough, Tenn., he was marched into battle with the measles broke out on him, and waded Stone River, and after the battle was over he was placed on picket duty, and there became unconscious, and was removed to hospital, Nashville, Tenn., with typhoid pneumonia.

Adjutant-General shows claimant was in hospital at Nashville, Tenn., in December, 1862, and remained to 30th April, 1863, and in hospital at Big Shanty, Ga., in June, 1864.

W. C. Pace, claimant's regimental surgeon, states he examined him before he entered the service and found him free from disease.

W. Polley and J. R. Polley, neighbors, knew claimant from infancy, and know he was free from any disease.

F. J. Hoge, John and James P. Brown testify claimant was a sound, stout, and able-bodied man before he enlisted.

J. L. Murphy, claimant's sergeant-major, states, near Nashville, Tenn., claimant took the measles and was sent to the hospital and remained away for several months.

R. G. Williams, claimant's late sergeant, testifies in November, 1862, claimant took the measles and was taken to the hospital at Nashville, Tenn., and remainded absent several months, and never had good health afterward during the war. Claimant's disease seemed to result in general debility, diarrhea, weak lungs, &c., and claimant, in July, 1864, got so bad he was unable to keep off the flies, and that he kept the flies off and picked fly-blows off claimant, and that claimant was sent to hospital at Chattanooga, and says when claimant was sent off he never expected to see him again alive.

J. P. Campbell and William T. Cunningham, privates in claimant's regiment, state substantially as above.

Doctors testify to claimant having a broken-down constitution.

John Brown, neighbor, testifies claimant took dinner with affiant the day he came home from the Army, and that he was in very feeble health.

Other neighbors testify claimant to have been sound at enlistment, but now has a broken-down constitution.

Examining surgeons report him three-quarters disability.

Your committee, from the facts in the case, think the claim a meritorious one, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM F. HARMON.

Mr. FUNSTON. I ask the consideration of the bill (S. 1642) granting a pension to William F. Harmon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William F. Harmon, late of Company C, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report of the Committee on Pensions of the Senate sets forth the facts in this case, and your committee adopt the report and recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate report No. 772, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The claimant in this case was a private in Company C, One hundred and forty-eighth Ohio National Guards, enlisted for one hundred days. He alleges that he had measles while in the service; that while sick he took cold, which resulted in pains and weakness in the chest; that it became permanent, and disabled him from performing manual labor.

His application for pension is rejected "on the ground that the evidence fails to connect alleged disease of chest with measles, or that it is otherwise due to the service."

Reputable witnesses testify that he was a sound man before he entered the service, and that he has not been well since his discharge. The Adjutant-General's report shows that he was sick at the home of the sanitary commission, Washington, D. C., but the Surgeon-General furnishes no evidence on the subject.

The soldier has filed ample testimony from his physicians and acquaintances, but he is unable to produce evidence of the character required by the Pension Office.

There is sufficient ground for the conclusion that he was accepted as a sound man, and that he was otherwise when he was discharged, and that he continues to be in a condition that prevents him from engaging in labor for his support.

The committee are of the opinion that the claimant may properly be relieved to the extent he claims, and report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MAHALA BROWN.

Mr. HALSELL. I call up the bill (H. R. 8384) granting a pension to Mahala Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mahala Brown, dependent mother of John W. Brown, late of Company D, Thirty-second Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) was read, as follows:

The claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the claimant was not dependent upon the soldier for support.

Dr. J. H. Grady testifies that he has known claimant's husband since 1868, and his condition has been that of an old, decrepit man, and not able to perform manual labor.

Thomas Vincent and L. S. Shelby testify they have lived near claimant since 1862, and were acquainted with her husband, and regarded husband's service worth about $40 per year up to 1870, and after that time it was worth nothing.

Dr. J. M. Sheldon states he examined claimant's husband in 1880, and considered him in a bad condition, and had been so for some time.

Abundant testimony by neighbors shows that claimant's husband owned a small farm of about 100 acres and some little personal property, and all together was not worth more than $600 or $700; that the son worked on the farm from the time he was old enough up to the time he enlisted, except when working for some of the neighbors, and all his earnings went to the support of his parents, and his labor was considered worth $15 per month, and that the soldier contributed to his mother's support up to the time of his death.

John Atherton testifies that claimant's husband's farm is poor and does not yield enough to support her and husband.

L. S. Shelby, Thomas Vincent, and James E. Brown testify claimant has been supported by products of husband's farm and her own labor as midwife.

The testimony in this case shows that the claimant is old and poor, and her husband is not able to support her, and she has no one else to depend upon for her support; that her husband's farm is small and the land poor, and would not bring a rental of more than $40 per year.

The soldier enlisted November 1, 1862, and died June 13, 1863, leaving no wife or child.

Your committee are of opinion that the claim is a meritorious one, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MISS MARGARET STAFFORD WORTH.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I ask the consideration of the bill (S. 2030) granting a pension to Miss Margaret Stafford Worth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Miss Margaret Stafford Worth, dependent daughter of Maj. Gen. William J. Worth, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let us have the report read.

The Clerk read the report in part, when—

The CHAIRMAN said: The body of the report has been read; and the portion now remaining is an appendix giving the facts and evidence upon which the report is based. If these are read they will occupy a considerable time.

Mr. TAULBEE. I shall not insist upon the reading of the whole report. I can scarcely conceive of a state of facts which would justify the passage of such a bill as this. There are many particulars in which this bill goes far beyond the ordinary rules for the granting of pensions. One objection is that the pension is to a daughter of the person who rendered the service; another is that the rate is excessive. I shall certainly oppose the bill, for, as I have stated, I can scarcely conceive of any state of facts which would justify a measure of this kind.

Mr. PETTIBOME. I hope, then, that by common consent this bill may be passed over, so as not to obstruct the passage of other measures to which there is no objection.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE].

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be passed over informally.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

MRS. MARGARET DUNLAP.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask the consideration of the bill (S. 2167) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Dunlap.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Margaret Dunlap, mother of James F. Dunlap, late a private in Company H, Seventh Missouri Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was submitted the bill (S. 2167) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Dunlap, have examined the same, and make the following report thereon:

They fully agree with the conclusions of the Senate Committee on Pensions, hereto attached, and adopt it as a part of this report. They report the bill favorably and ask that it do pass.

The petitioner is the widow of Archibald Dunlap, who died in 1850, and the mother of James F. Dunlap, a corporal in Company H, Seventh Cavalry, Missouri State Militia Volunteers, who enlisted at Sedalia, Mo., April 21, 1862, and died at Warrensburg, Mo., July 9, 1864, of wounds received in the service, leaving neither widow nor minor child to him surviving. The cause of death is clearly set forth in the following affidavit:

STATE OF MISSOURI,
County of Johnson, ss:

On this the 22d day of April, A. D. 1872, before me, circuit clerk in and for said county and State, personally appeared G. Will Houts, a resident of Warrensburg, Mo., who, being first duly sworn according to law, declares that in the summer of the year 1864 he was duly commissioned and on duty as second lieutenant of Company H (R. M. Box, captain), in the Seventh Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, United States Army; that at the time mentioned affiant was in command of an outpost near Warrensburg, in the State of Missouri, and kept out a picket or patrol guard day and night; that on the 5th day of July, in said year, James F. Dunlap, a corporal in said company, and then under affiant's immediate command, was in camp during the afternoon, and observing some of his comrades engaged in a scuffle or fight, interfered and undertook to separate the combatants, whereupon one of the parties engaged, without just cause or provocation, inflicted a wound on the person of said Dunlap by stabbing him in the breast; that he was immediately removed to the United States hospital at Warrensburg, Mo., and every attention given to him, but within a few days the injury resulted in death; that the soldier who inflicted the wound was a member of the same company and regiment as Dunlap, and was, in July, 1864, sentenced to five years' imprisonment in Missouri State prison by sentence of a general court-martial. His name was James Capehart (see muster-out roll of Company H, Seventh Cavalry Missouri State Militia); that said Dunlap left surviving him no wife or children, and that his dependent mother, Margaret Dunlap, a widow, is a resident of Churchville, Va.

And to his testimony that said Dunlap died of a wound received in the line of duty, affiant adds the statement that said Dunlap always bore with his officers and comrades the highest character for knowledge of and devotion to his duties as a soldier.

Affiant further reports that he has no interest whatever in the prosecution of this claim for pension to Margaret Dunlap, and that his post-office address is Warrensburg, Mo.

G. WILL HOUTS.

Sworn to and subscribed before me the day and the year above written; and I certify that I am personally acquainted with the affiant and know him to be credible, and that I have no interest in the prosecution of this claim.

C. C. MORROW,
Circuit Clerk, Johnson County, Missouri.

The record of the court-martial proceedings obtained from the War Department is as follows:

CHARGE: Murder.

Specification: In this case that he, James Capehart, private, Company H, Seventh Regiment of Cavalry Missouri State Militia, being a regularly enlisted soldier in the United States service, did, on or about the 5th day of July, 1864, wantonly, maliciously, willfully, and with malice aforethought, kill and murder one James Dunlap, private, Company H, Seventh Regiment of Cavalry Missouri State Militia, by stabbing him with a knife. All this at Hobson's Station, on the line of the Pacific Railroad, in Johnson County, Missouri.

FINDING.

Of the specification, "guilty," except the words, "with malice aforethought." Of the charge, "not guilty," but guilty of manslaughter in the second degree.

SENTENCE.

To be imprisoned for the term of five years in the Missouri State penitentiary.

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT CENTRAL MISSOURI,
Warrensburg, Mo., July 28, 1864.

Finding and sentence confirmed. In accordance with the provisions of the sentence, the prisoner will be forwarded to the Missouri State penitentiary, at Jefferson City, for confinement therein during the time specified in the sentence, under the direction of the provost-marshal of this district.

A. PLEASONTON,
Major-General Commanding.

Official copy.

J. HOLT,
Judge-Advocate-General.

It further appears from the papers in the case that James F. Dunlap for years paid rent, and contributed to his mother's support continuous sums of money until the outbreak of the war, when communications were destroyed. Mrs. Margaret Dunlap is eighty-two years old, and her worldly possessions consist of meager household furniture of no appreciative value.

Your committee think, from the peculiar circumstances of the case, the extreme age of the claimant, and the hardships she endured, that she is deserving of a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania why this claim was rejected at the Pension Office.

Mr. SOWDEN. I can not say. That is a matter, I suppose, for the Pension Office to determine.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to know why the claim was rejected, or whether it ever has been rejected, at the Pension Office.

Mr. SOWDEN. I can not say whether the claim was ever pending there, and hence I do not know whether it was rejected or not. The case is one of very great merit, and the bill ought to pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALONZO RAYMOND.

Mr. OWEN. I call up the bill (H. R. 2388) granting a pension to Alonzo Raymond.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alonzo Raymond, father of Platt Green Raymond, late a private in Company E, Fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, and pay him the sum of twelve dollars per month.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2388, report that they have examined the same, and adopt the Senate report as follows:

[Senate Report No. 1207, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The petitioner is the father of Platt G. Raymond, late a private in Company E, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers. The report of the Adjutant-General states that the son was killed in the battle of Spottsylvania, May 12, 1864. The father applied for a pension March 13, 1884. The Commissioner of Pensions rejected the application on the ground that he was not dependent upon his son at the time he was killed. On this point, the only one raised, the evidence from the father is to this effect:

At the time of the son's enlistment he was a widower, and that the soldier was his only son; that he owned a farm, which he had worked with the help of his son; that in addition to the farm he had some personal property; that the enlistment of his son deprived him of his help, upon which he had hitherto depended; that by reason of infirmities and sickness which then came upon him he was obliged to part with the farm and buy a small house, which he owns at the present time, which is valued at $500, and is mortgaged for $140; that all but this has been absorbed in necessaries which he could not earn by his labor. At the time his son was killed he was taken ill, and he admits that his grief and desolate condition aggravated and prolonged his illnesss, and that at this time he was poor and old.

Seven of his neighbors corroborate the old man's statement, and the judge of probate who took their testimony declares that they are all well known to him and entitled to credit. They say that this father, besides sending his son, embarrassed himself by contributing a sum greater than the value of all his property, to the Union cause; that he became broken in health immediately after his son's enlistment; that he was always held in great respect, and was chosen to places of honor and trust.

The claimant explains his delay in applying for a pension: he dreaded to ask the Government for what he needed; he had some pride, and he was conscious that his motives would be questioned.

The only disputed point in this case is, was the father dependent upon his son at the time of his death? The enlistment, the service, and the death are not questioned. The Pension Office did not demand evidence in reference to other matters. The committee do not admit that the father was not dependent. The son had always aided him. He had property, but it would not have produced a living without the son's labor. When he was deprived of that the father's health broke down, and what he had was nearly all absorbed in his support. There was a dependence all through the previous years; in the war for the Union that dependence was sacrificed; and now, this old man, 76 years old, sick and impoverished, asks the small pittance that a dependent father may claim. The committee do not think it necessary to consider the very nice question of whether the dependence occurred a moment before or a moment after the son was killed. They are convinced that it occurred much too long before it had recognition, and they therefore report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY M'COY.

Mr. PINDAR. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 9863) granting a pension to Mary McCoy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary McCoy on the pension-roll, and to pay her a pension, from and after the passage of this act, at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. PINDAR) was read, as follows:

The claimant served as a nurse and laundress in Company F, Seventy-first New York Volunteers, from 1861 until January, 1863. She filed her declaration for pension April 7, 1886, alleging that while acting as nurse and laundress at Fairfax, Va., in 1862, she contracted rheumatic pains and affliction, occasioned by washing the soldiers' clothes and attending as nurse on the sick and wounded; that she was treated by Dr. MacGowan, previous to her release from the discharge of her duties, who was then the physician attending the regiment; that she was employed in the service in pursuance of an order by and under authority of Medical Purveyor Hand, who authorized Dr. Stocker to obtain services of claimant, and which was to be paid for at the rate of $12 per month during service; that prior to her service she was a woman of good, sound physical health; that she is now partially disabled from obtaining her subsistence by manual labor by reason of her injuries received in the service of the United States. In further support of her claim the petitioner files letter of Maj. Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, Capt. Walter A. Donaldson, and Col. H. L. Potter, and also letter of General John C. Black, Commissioner of Pensions. Said letters are hereto attached and make part of this report.

Your committee report the accompanying bill, and recommend that the same do pass.

23 FIFTH AVENUE, New York, April 2, 1886.

This is to certify that Mrs. Mary McCoy, wife of Sergeant McCoy, of Captain Donaldson's company, in the Second Excelsior (Sickle's) Brigade (Seventy-first New York Volunteers), served as nurse and laundress all through the campaigns of 1861, 1862, and 1863. She was a heroic woman—combining pluck and tenderness in a remarkable degree—devoted to the sick and wounded of her regiment, always marching with it, and serving the wounded under fire.

She should have a pension now in her old age, when she suffers from disabilities contracted by her exposure and hardships in service. Not a soldier in the Army better deserves a pension than Mrs. Sergeant McCoy. God bless her.

Mrs. McCoy had three brothers in the same regiment and her husband and her brother-in-law, and another brother on the U. S. S. Essex, who was wounded.

D. E. SICKLES,
Major-General, United States Army (retired).

[Camp near Falmouth, Va., Seventy-first Regiment New York State Volunteers.]

JANUARY 5, 1865.

This is to certify that the bearer, Mrs. McCoy, is a most praiseworthy person, honest, trustworthy, and industrious. Her husband was a sergeant in my company, and she passed through (with him) all our campaigns in Virginia up to date.

That she was under fire several times at Fair Oaks, assisting wounded men and helping to cook rations. She passed through all the hardships of the retreat from Fair Oaks to Harrison's Landing, and did good service at the hospital.

Her health has been greatly impaired from her exposure while connected with Company F, as laundress, complaining greatly of rheumatism and pains, after the Fair Oaks campaign, and was, therefore, compelled to return home, and it gives me great pleasure to indorse so remarkable a woman.

WALTER A. DONALSON,
Captain Company F, Seventy-first Regiment, Excelsior Brigade.

377 WEST STREET,
New York City, August 16, 1870.

This is to certify that Mrs. Mary McCoy, wife of Sergt. James McCoy, has been known to me since early part of 1861, and that she is a most praiseworthy, honest, and industrious person, entitled to great credit for her commendable and even heroic service with the Army in the field and in the hospital nursing and watching over our wounded and sick soldiers. She was a faithful attendant upon the wounded and dying soldiers of my regiment during several battles, being on some occasions under fire. The battle-fields of Fair Oaks, Peach Orchard, and Malvern Hill, and even all of the Seven Days' battles, saw her ministering to them with the heroism of the sterner sex. Any aid or assistance rendered to her or her husband, James McCoy, who was a sergeant in Company F, of my regiment, and who acquitted himself honorably, will be bestowed upon those who merit it and who did not hesitate to hazard their own lives for their country in its times of peril.

H. L. POTTER,
Late Colonel Seventy-first New York Volunteers.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 11, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit the papers in the pension claim of Mary McCoy, who served as nurse and laundress in Company F, Seventy-first New York Volunteers, from 1861 until January, 1863. She alleges that she contracted rheumatism in 1862, from exposure to inclement weather while attending the sick and wounded, washing soldiers' clothing, &c. Her allegations are corroborated by General Daniel E. Sickles, who at that time commanded the Excelsior Brigade, of which the Seventy-first New York Volunteers formed a part; Col. H. L. Potter, who commanded the regiment, and Capt. W. A. Donalson, who commanded Company F of the Seventy-first New York Volunteers.

This claim, although meritorious, can not be allowed under the provisions of the pension laws, because the claimant was not enlisted in the Army or Navy of the United States, and it is therefore presented to Congress under the joint resolution approved May 29, 1830.

Very respectfully,

JOHN C. BLACK,
Commissioner.

Hon. C. C. MATSON,
Chairman of Committee on Pensions, House of Representatives.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ELLEN M. STURTEVANT.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 10152) granting a pension to Ellen M. Sturtevant.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Ellen M. Sturtevant, of Keene, N. H., dependent sister of Edward E. Sturtevant, late major Fifth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

Ellen M. Sturtevant was the sister of Edward E. Sturtevant, late major of the Fifth New Hampshire Regiment, who was killed at the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862. Among the papers filed with this committee are the originals of several letters, covering dates from 1858 to 1861, written by Edward E. to his sister and parents. These disclose clearly that the family were largely dependent upon his contributions for support, and such contributions were made in considerable sums. The sister, from allusions made in these letters, appears to have been in feeble health at that time.

The statement of Dr. Twitchell (which, with her own statement, is appended to this report) shows that he has treated her for serious troubles since 1864, and that in all these years she has been incapable of self-support. She is at present an inmate of the Invalids' Home at Keene, N. H., and in most straitened circumstances. Major Sturtevant was never married. Had he lived there can be no doubt he would have continued the support of his unfortunate sister. He was killed in battle, and we think the Government may with great justice and propriety recognize the claim of the invalid sister thus left in a great measure dependent upon charity.

We recommend the passage of the bill.

Affidavit.

I, Ellen M. Sturtevant, of Keene, N. H., upon my oath depose and say as follows: My age is fifty-one years, and my post-office address as above. I am a sister of Edward E. Sturtevant, late major of the Fifth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers (who was killed in action December 13, 1862). Prior to and at the time of the enlistment of my said brother into said service, I was living with my father and mother in Keene aforesaid, in a house which my said brother built on Court street for us; at that time and ever since I was, for a large part of the time, sick and not able to take care of myself or earn anything. He gave us a home, and besides that he sent me money from time to time in amounts ranging from $5 upwards, so as to relieve my father as much as possible from the burden of my support (he, my father, being hardly able to get along and take care of himself and mother). My said father and mother died about ten years ago, and all the property I have in the world is one-fifth interest in the house aforesaid, with a right to one-half of the rent (which is in all $150) after the taxes, water bills, &c., are paid.

My said brother was never married, and it was a reason for his hesitating about enlisting, because he was afraid I could not get along without his being home to help support me. Since the death of my brother I have had to get along without many of the comforts of life and almost necessities of my condition, because I have had no means or resources to rely on. I have been at the Invalids' Home at said Keane for about two years past. This institution gives me one-half of my board, and for the past year I have been unable to pay my proportion of taxes upon the house before mentioned. I am able to wait upon myself only a part of the time, and when I am able to be around I can stand up but little, and can walk but a short distance at a time. I am able to do scarcely any sewing. I was dependent upon my said brother for support at the time of his death, and have been dependent upon others ever since.

ELLEN M. STURTEVANT.

I, George B. Twitchell, of Keene, county of Cheshire and State of New Hampshire, on oath depose and say in relation to the claim of Ellen M. Sturtevant, of said Keene, for a pension, as follows: That I have been for the last forty-three years and am now a practicing physician in said Keene, and as such have professionally attended the said Ellen M. Sturtevant; that in the spring of the year 1864 I was consulted by her. She was then suffering from uterine displacements and general ill-health, the result, as I understood, of a fall three years before, while I was in the Army. At that time she was much debilitated, and had severe pain in back whenever she attempted to labor; could only move from bed or lounge to chair, and was entirely dependent upon others. I have prescribed for her from time to time to the present time, though she has to my knowledge been at different times under the care of other physicians, and was at one time for many weeks at the Adams' Marine Asylum, in Jamaica Plain, Mass. During all of these years she has been an invalid and able to do but little for her support, and when she has labored it has been with suffering, for she has had much neuralgia. At the present time she is able to do but little, and is now (May 15, 1886) an inmate of the Invalids' Home.

I have no interest in the above claim for invalid pension.

GEO. B. TWITCHELL.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

LARKIN DELPH.

Mr. TAULBEE. I call up the bill (H. R. 7504) granting a pension to Larkin Delph.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Larkin Delph, late of Company E, Seventh Kentucky Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) was read, as follows:

Larkin Delph enlisted as a private, Company E, Seventh Kentucky Volunteers, August 19, 1861, and was discharged April 5, 1863, on surgeon's certificate of disability. He filed claim for pension June 19, 1869, alleging that he was accidentally wounded by a shot which entered below the heart and came out on the left side of the backbone; that it took place at Mount Vernon, Ky., in October, 1861.

His claim was rejected on the ground of no record as to origin of alleged gunshot wound and claimant's declared inability to furnish the testimony of an officer or comrades or other competent evidence showing incurrence in line of duty.

Col. T. T. Garrard, Seventh Kentucky Volunteers, testifies he has known claimant prior to and since the war; that while in hospital, Mount Vernon, Ky., claimant was shot; has seen the wounds, but does not know the circumstances of wounding; after his recovery, he returned to the regiment, and was discharged. Has heard him complain of it frequently since.

Capt. P. B. White, Company E, Seventh Kentucky Volunteers, Manchester, Clay County, Kentucky, testifies claimant was taken sick with the measles, and was sent to hospital at Mount Vernon, Ky.; when he returned to the company he was wounded just below the nipple by a gunshot; does not know how it happened; was not present at the time; that he was a sound man at enlistment.

Dempsey Wilder, corporal, Company E, Seventh Kentucky Volunteers, testifies, in 1861, at Camp Wildcat, Ky., soldier had measles and was sent to Mount Vernon, Ky., and was reported shot; saw him afterward and there was a bullet hole near pit of his stomach; don't know if he done any duty afterward. His discharge was reported granted on account of said wound. Has complained of wound hurting him since discharge.

James Hooker, private, Company E, Seventh Kentucky Volunteers, testifies that claimant and himself were sent to hospital at Mount Vernon, Ky., and were given the limits of the town by the surgeon for exercise; that claimant, in October or November, 1861, while walking across the street from the hospital, was shot; heard report of gun; went to him and saw he was wounded, and it was reported that Jacob R. Brown was the person who wounded him; that he did it by letting off his pistol by accident. That he was treated for wound there; that he still complains of said wound.

Jacob R. Brown, of London, Laurel County, Kentucky, testifies, over signature, that on or about the 19th of October, 1861, at Mount Vernon, Ky., he was in a house where several persons were assembled, among them the claimant, who was a private in Company E, Seventh Kentucky Volunteers; that he, Brown, had a pistol in his hand, and by some accidental means the pistol was fired and the ball entered the body of the claimant, passing through it near the heart; that claimant was carried to the court-house in Mount Vernon, and there remained for some time.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH MAYS.

On motion of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, the bill (S. 1654) granting a pension to Joseph Mays was taken up and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Mays, late of Company M, Ninth Regiment Kansas Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1654) granting a pension to Joseph Mays, having examined the case, adopt the annexed Senate report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

That the records in this case show that claimant enlisted July, 1, 1863, as a private in Company M, Ninth Kansas Cavalry, and was discharged July 17, 1865.

Declaration for pension filed June 22, 1880, alleging gunshot wound in left arm, shattering both bones.

Claim rejected April 23, 1885, on the ground that "records fail to show the circumstances under which alleged wound was received, and claimant has declared his inability to furnish satisfactory evidence showing its receipt while in line of duty." The committee is unable to determine why this pension was not granted through the Pension Office, or what that office considers "satisfactory evidence."

In this case there is,

(1) Claimant's statement, which is corroborated by the records sent to the Pension Office from the War Department, in which occurs this statement:

"Regimental hospital register shows Joseph Mays admitted July 26, 1861, with gun-shot wound, forearm."

(2) The affidavit of W. Wakefield, M. D., the regimental surgeon who dressed claimant's wound, and who describes minutely the circumstances attending it.

(3) The affidavit of Capt. John L. Price, Company M, Ninth Kansas Cavalry, that claimant was out on a foraging expedition, and was attacked by bushwhackers and wounded.

(4) The letter of John L. Price, late captain Ninth Kansas Cavalry, corroborating claimant's statement, and that wound was received in the line of duty.

(5) The affidavits of comrades James Lansing and George R. Bowser, who were with claimant and near him when he was shot in a skirmish with bushwhackers.

(6) A letter written to John H. Osborn, and signed O. P. G. Clarke, of the Pension Office, asking about the circumstances of the wounding, and on the back of that letter Mr. John H. Osborn states that he knew Joseph Mays, and knew he was wounded in the left arm, and thinks he was foraging at the time.

(7) Testimony of John H. Osborn, corroborating above.

In addition to the above there is the certificate of Examining Surgeon E. I. Prothrow, as to the wounds and the effect.

It would appear that the evidence is abundant as to when, where, and how the wound was received, and that its consequences still incapacitate the claimant from performing full manual labor. Taking into consideration all the evidence on file in this case, the committee believe it to be their duty to report in favor of this bill, and recommend its passage.

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SIDNEY DENTON.

On motion of Mr. GUENTHER, the bill (S. 2420) granting a pension to Sidney Denton was taken up and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sidney Denton, late a private in Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2420, report that they have examined the same, and adopt the Senate report, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 1205, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The claimant enlisted in Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, October 26, 1861, and was discharged July 29, 1865. He applied for a pension, stating in his declaration that at Huntsville, Ala., he was taken with chills and fever, and was sent to hospital; that a dangerous fever set in, followed by chills and dumb ague, caused, so far as he knows, by the malarial condition of the atmosphere and bad water. His application was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that he had no pensionable disability from "malarial poisoning;" that disease of the lungs was not accepted "as a result of malarial poisoning."

The evidence shows that he was sound when he went into the service; that he came out of it sick; that he has been sick ever since; that that is his condition now. The report of the Surgeon-General shows that he was admitted to hospital at Nashville October 18, 1864, with chronic diarrhea. Again he was sent to hospital with fever; and again, when diagnosis was not given; and again, with intermittent fever. But, as usual, the report admits the absence of important testimony in his subsequent stages of treatment.

The medical examination in 1882 says:

"The breathing in right lung is vesicular; in left lung bronchial; breathing capacity diminished; although nothing exists to indicate direct suffering from ague, his bronchial trouble would incapacitate him for manual labor."

A second examining board states the following result:

"Muscles soft and flabby; applicant has disease of lungs; no healthy vesicular murmur over any part of either lung; some parts there are asthmatic pipings; air vesicles are seemingly closed; says he had difficult breathing while in the Army, and it has been getting worse ever since; impossible to tell whether lung trouble depends remotely on malarial poisoning or not; he is very much emaciated, debilitated, and generally broken down; disability totally on disease of lungs and result."

It is possible that the disability is not the result of malarial poisoning. It may have been unfortunate that the claimant stated that, "so far as he knew, his sickness may have been caused by the malarial atmosphere and bad water." Malarial poison produces chills and fever and all the varieties of malignant fevers, and from these often proceed immediately and remotely affections of vital organs.

Concluding, as the committee must do, that the man was well when he entered the service; that he was sick when he was discharged; that he has had a progressive illness from that time to the present, the opinion is justified that whether his disability is or is not due to malarial poisoning, it is undoubtedly a result of his service as a soldier.

On account of his poverty the claimant is obliged to avail himself of the shelter of the Milwaukee Soldiers' Home; whereas with a small pension he could spend his few remaining years with his aged wife, and have such care and sympathy as his case requires.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I hope not, as I have a bill to call up.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 12.

So the committee refused to rise.

MRS. ANNA SCHIER.

On motion of Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL, the bill (H. R. 7983) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Schier was taken up and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anna Schier, widow of Nicholas Schier, formerly a member of Company C, One hundred and twelfth regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. PINDAR) was read, as follows:

Claimant is widow of Nicholas Schier, deceased, who was a private in Company C, Second Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, and was pensioned at $1 per month for rheumatism incurred in service in line of duty.

Soldier died February 1, 1881. His widow, the claimant, now asks for pension, and her claim for lung disease, &c., has been rejected by the Department upon the ground of inability to give necessary medical testimony to establish it.

The soldier, in his declaration filed, states that at Bunker Hill, March or April, 1862, he contracted fever, which resulted in rheumatism and disease of lungs. The soldier's certificate of disability for discharge states that he was disabled from performing the duties of a soldier because of chronic and inveterate rheumatism. It is shown by Joseph Stahl and James Gangham that soldier was sound prior to enlistment. Charles A. Dunklebury, late captain of company, testifies that soldier was sound at time of enlistment; that in December, 1861, he was taken sick with fever, and had rheumatism when company was in Washington.

Dr. C. A. Dusinberre testifies that he has known soldier for fifteen years, and during that time he was unable to perform any manual labor; has large anal fistula and disease of the lungs.

Joseph Stahl testifies in 1879 that he has known soldier ever since his return from the army, and knows that he suffered from rheumatism and lung disease ever since.

James Gangham corroborates Stahl.

The claimant alleges that the soldier died of chronic gouty rheumatism and chronic bronchitis; that he had no physician attending him through his last sickness, and has no record of the cause of death.

Dr. Dusinberre, on the 15th day of April, 1885, testified in his examination:

"That he had treated soldier before his death, but can give no dates; that his attention was called by his friends; that he called to see him once in a while, and made no charge or any record, because it was a case of charity, and never expected any pay; that soldier was suffering from gouty rheumatism and bronchitis when he first knew him, and that he continued to suffer from those diseases. He did not attend him at time of his death, but in his opinion he died from a complication of diseases; he was afflicted with fistula in ano, chronic bronchitis, and gouty rheumatism, and they must have all tended to the cause of his death."

There is also a great amount of testimony from neighbors, all proving that soldier had a bad cough, was crippled and lame, and was slowly declining and dying by inches.

The committee, after an examination of the evidence in this case, are of the opinion that soldier's death was caused by the disabilities and diseases above mentioned, which were incurred in service, and that his widow, this claimant, is entitled to the relief asked, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. WALLACE. In this report there is no date given of the death of this soldier, and I ask my friend to state the facts, so we may be able to trace when the soldier died and where, or whether he died at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. The fact that he was buried would seem to indicate he was dead. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. All I know about the matter is, that this old lady is in destitute circumstances, and deserves this pension. Her neighbors in the city I have the honor to represent in part unite in that testimony. I do not know the exact time her husband died. I know she is deserving and in destitute circumstances. I have a letter from her which shows the case is one of the most meritorious ever presented to the House.

I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MATSON. I move the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 16.

So the committee refused to rise.

GREEN FIELDS.

On motion of Mr. LYMAN, the committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9170) for the relief of Green Fields; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States, subject to the provisions, limitations, and restrictions of the pension laws, the name of Green Fields, of Sidney, county of Fremont, State of Iowa, late of Company F in the Fourth Indiana Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) was read, as follows:

This soldier enlisted August 11, 1862, in Company F, Fourth Indiana Cavalry, and was discharged June 29, 1865; filed application for pension October 13, 1873, alleging injury to left arm by the fall of his horse while on duty near Lebanon, Ky., in October, 1862, which had been troubling him more or less ever since; and in affidavit filed June 22, 1876, swears that he has had to have his arm amputated in consequence of said disability.

His claim was rejected on the ground "that disability was incurred since his discharge."

This conclusion seems to have been arrived at as the result of a special examination, in which several comrades testify that they do not remember any such accident, and two of them testify that claimant hurt his arm by lifting a heavy sack of corn several years after the war.

Dr. H. G. Jones testifies that he was his family physician, and knows that claimant was in sound bodily health and had no injury or disease of left arm whatever prior to enlistment. He further testifies that he treated him for a necrosed condition of the bones of his left arm from 1869 until February, 1876, when he assisted in the operation of amputation of said arm. In answer to a letter from the Pension Office, Dr. Jones says:

"He told me that he had had his arm hurt while in the service of the United States; that he had suffered more or less with it from that time up to the time he called on me, which I think was in 1869. From his statement and the history and character of the case I concluded he was correct. Upon examination of the bones after amputation, I was fully satisfied that he was correct, for the olecranial process of the ulna showed an old fracture, which I concluded was the cause of the diseased condition of the arm. I can not tell why he did not apply sooner. Green Fields is a very quiet, contented sort of a fellow, and would be likely to continue in service, making but little ado about his troubles. At that time the poor fellow owned a little farm. Since his discharge his inability to work has eaten up that farm and reduced him so his only support to-day is what he can make with one arm, and the little assistance his wife can render. He is not dissipated.

"I think his trouble resulted from an injury received while in the Army."

Jacob Euler and William L. Jans, comrades of claimant, testify that claimant at Lebanon, Ky., October, 1862, on detail to obtain teams to haul forage, was thrown from his horse, spraining and bruising his left arm, permanently rendering the arm useless. Pieces of bone came out occasionally.

Theodore W. Jerrold testifies to substantially the same facts.

M. Thompson and Emily Skelley, neighbors of claimant at Evansville, Ind., testify as follows:

"Affiants further declare that they have been well and intimately acquainted with said Fields for —— years last past and associated with him, and they well know that when he returned home from the Army, after his discharge in the summer of 1865, he was suffering from an injury to his left arm, which they were informed and verily believed was contracted in the service of the United States. They know that this disability continued on him, for he often spoke of the pain arising from it, and mentioned it very frequently. They also know that the disability was continuous from the time of his returning home from the Army until the present year (1876), when it became necessary to amputate the arm.

"They know these facts from personal observation, and they have no interest in any claim for pension by said Fields."

Dr. E. B. Thomas, assistant surgeon of claimant's regiment, testifies that he remembers treating said soldier while the regiment was stationed at Lebanon, Ky., which was in the fall of the year 1862, for an injury of the nature of a bruise to his left arm, caused by falling from a horse; has a distinct recollection of the treatment of said soldier for such an injury, but in the absence of any notes on the subject, and owing to the long lapse of time, can not remember the details.

H. M. Harvey, examining surgeon, gives as the result of a medical examination March 18, 1874:

"Injury to left forearm and elbow-joint by horse rolling upon it. Radius and probably ulna necrosed; bone coming out still; arm swelled, elbow-joint stiffened, inner side of arm inflamed and discharging unhealthy pus at several openings; arm painful."

Dr. M. J. Bray testifies:

"On the 25th day of February, 1876, I was called upon to amputate the left arm of said soldier, and the following is a diagnosis of the case: I examined the arm after amputation. The distal extremity of the humerus and other bones of the elbow were in a caries condition. The olecranial process of the ulna indicated an old fracture or an injury, which was the cause of the present disease. Probably the bones of the forearm were also in a necrose condition, extending down to the wrist-joint, and the integuments of forearm were in a state of chronic ulceration."

A critical examination of the testimony taken by the special examiner above mentioned does not, in the opinion of this committee, overbalance all this positive testimony.

Hon. JOSEPH LYMAN, a member of the House, certifies to the very high character of claimant, and says his statement in regard to his disability would be believed by all who know him.

In view of the doubt thrown upon the case by the conflicting testimony, your committee believe that soldier's three years' service and his present disability should entitle him to the benefit of the doubt, and merits the relief sought. Therefore the passage of the bill is recommended.

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. SOPHIA SPRAIN.

On motion of Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, the committee proceed to the consideration of a bill (H. R. 9025) for the relief of Mrs. Sophia Sprain, widow, and two minor children of Louis F. Spain; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Sophia Sprain, widow, and two minor children of Louis F. Sprain, late a private in Company D, Fourteenth Wisconsin Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. O'HARA) was read, as follows:

Claimant is the widow of Louis F. Sprain, late a private in Company D, Fourteenth Wisconsin Infantry, who enlisted October 19, 1861; discharged December 1, 1862, on account of gunshot wounds received at the battle of Corinth, Miss., and died January 18, 1881. Widow's claim for a pension rejected on the ground that "death resulted from disease of the stomach and bowels not shown to be due to the service nor to the wounds for which he was pensioned."

H. L. Coon, M. D., testifies that he knew the soldier personally for many years, and was soldier's family physician for many years; he often prescribed for the soldier for general debility and bilious disease caused by wounds. He was called to soldier September 17, 1880, and November 15, 1880, and found him suffering from disease of stomach and bowels. Soldier died January 18, 1881. There was no post mortem examination. In affiant's opinion the wounds in abdomen caused soldier's suffering and death.

Soldier's certificate of discharge states as follows:

"He was wounded at the battle of Corinth, Miss., October 3, 1862, the ball passing through the flexon tendon of the left wrist, injuring the radial nerve, producing partial paralysis of the fingers, and inability to flex the fingers; thence passing through the abdominal walls beneath the integuments, superficial and deep fascia, entering the right hand, fracturing the metacarpal bones which united at an obtuse angle, rendering the hand almost useless.

In view of the nature of the wounds received in action, and the opinion of the physician who attended soldier in his last illness and death, your committee are of the opinion that soldier's death may be easily traced to the injuries received while in battle. The widow is quite poor, has two minor children dependent upon her support, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. SUSAN E. BARRY.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9009) granting a pension to Susan E. Barry; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Susan E. Barry, late an army nurse, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

Mrs. Barry, formerly Miss Susan E. Hall, was constantly employed as a nurse from the summer of 1861 to May, 1865, in general and field hospitals at or near the front, the following being a detailed statement of her assignments and services:

After furnishing satisfactory evidence as to fitness, she was selected as a nurse on May 22, 1861, and after passing an examination as to physical health and soundness by the hospital board committee, entered Bellevue Hospital, New York, and remained there in the surgical and sick wards for two months, being thoroughly trained.

On July 22, 1861, she reported to Miss D. L. Dix, superintendent of nurses, at Washington, and was ordered to Alexandria, Va., and assigned to duty in the large hospital there filled with wounded. Here she remained eight months; then to Winchester for four months; then to Strasburg; then back to Winchester; then to Harper's Ferry, Annapolis, and back to Washington, to Georgetown Hospital. Next she went to Antietam, remaining there, caring for the wounded until late in the fall; thence back to Harper's Ferry, in general hospital. From there she went to Aquia Creek, with the wounded from the battle of Chancellorsville, then back to Washington; and next she was on the bloody field of Gettysburg, with the wounded for some months. In October, 1863, she was transferred to the western department, and was assigned to duty in general hospital at Nashville, Tenn., and from there she went to Murfreesborough, and lastly to Chattanooga, Tenn., where she remained with the wounded from all the engagements between Chattanooga and Atlanta for fourteen months.

The following certificates attest her long and valuable services:

OFFICE OF WOMEN NURSES,
Washington City, D. C., July 23, 1861.

Miss Susan E. Hall has been this day appointed nurse in the military hospitals of the eastern department.

D. L. DIX,
Department of Women Nurses for Military Hospitals in the United States.

Miss Susan E. Hall has been detailed to service in the field hospital of the Army of the Potomac.

N. B.—If the place of service is changed a new certificate will be issued.

D. L. DIX.

MAY 27, 1863.

SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington City, D. C., October 14, 1863.

You are ordered to proceed direct from the city of Washington to the city of Nashville, Tenn., there to report immediately to the medical director for assignment and service in any general hospital where your abilities and experience will be most available.

D. L. DIX,
Superintendent of Women Nurses.

Miss SUSAN E. HALL.

OFFICE UNITED STATES ARMY, GENERAL HOSPITAL, No. 1,
Chattanooga, Tenn., May 22, 1865.

Miss Susan E. Hall has been on duty as nurse at this hospital since June 12, 1864, and has discharged her duties in a most satisfactory manner. The war being over she is desirous to return to Washington, D. C., whence she came. She has therefore been relieved from duty, and I request in her behalf that quartermasters furnish the necessary transportation to the above-named place.

JOHN H. PHILLIPS,
Surgeon United States Volunteers,
In charge General Hospital No. —, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Dr. H. D. Emens, of Syracuse, N. Y., testifies June 22, 1886, that he has known Mrs. Barry for twenty-five years; that she was physically strong when she entered upon hospital work during the late war, and has suffered ever since from serious disabilities, being under a doctor's care a great part of the time since.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. NEECE moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report to the House sundry bills with various recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were severally considered and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 9862) granting a pension to Mary Jane Magoon;
A bill (H. R. 5629) granting a pension to Thomas G. Polley;
A bill (H. R. 8384) for the relief of Mahala Brown;
A bill (H. R. 9863) granting a pension to Mary McCoy;
A bill (H. R. 10152) granting a pension to Ellen M. Sturtevant;
A bill (H. R. 7504) granting a pension to Larkin Delph;
A bill (H. R. 7983) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Schier;
A bill (H. R. 9170) for the relief of Green Fields;
A bill (H. R. 9025) for the relief of Mrs. Sophia Sprain, widow, and two minor children of Louis F. Sprain;
A bill (H. R. 9009) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan E. Barry;
A bill (H. R. 9157) granting a pension to Grant E. Q. Lathermon; and
A bill (H. R. 8067) to pension Andrew J. Vanorder.

Bills of the Senate of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were severally considered, ordered to a third reading, and, being read the third time, were passed, namely:

A bill (S. 2478) granting a pension to John Wines;
A bill (S. 2459) granting a pension to Eliza Wilkins;
A bill (S. 2730) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth S. de Krafft;

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 15, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

CONTINGENT FUND OF NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement of expenditures of the contingent fund of that Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WEST, for one week, on account of very important business.

To Mr. BURLEIGH, for one week, on account of very important business.

To Mr. BUCHANAN, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. JAMES, for one week.

To Mr. MITCHELL, for two weeks, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BARRY, for the rest of the week, on account of sickness.

To Mr. O'HARA, for ten days, from and after Saturday the 15th instant, on account of important business.

To Mr. HALE, for this day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. PERRY, for one day, on account of important business.

POLYGAMY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 10) with an amendment of the House disagreed to by the Senate, and directed the reading of the message from the Senate, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 13, 1887.

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate No. 10, to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. PUGH be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. OATES. This, I believe, is the anti-polygamy bill?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. OATES. I do not see in the House the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, who has had charge of this measure. I ask that the House concur in the request of the Senate for a conference.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request of the Senate for a conference will be concurred in.

There was no objection.

Some time subsequently,

The SPEAKER announced as the conferees on the part of the House, Mr. TUCKER, Mr. COLLINS, and Mr. E. B. TAYLOR.

COURTS IN MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1458) with amendments by the House disagreed to by the Senate, and directed the reading of the message from the Senate, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 14, 1887.

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1458) to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan at Bay City, in said district, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. GEORGE be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House will agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the managers of the conference on the part of the House some time during the day.

Mr. HATCH. Let us now have the regular order.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to present, not for the purpose of calling up at this time, but to ask to have it printed in the RECORD, the conference report on what is commonly known as the interstate-commerce bill. I will not ask for the present consideration of the report, there being some gentlemen absent who do not wish it considered to-day. But I will ask that the report, with the explanation of the conferees, be printed in the RECORD. Although the report has been printed, I am told the print is entirely exhausted. A number of members have asked me for copies and I have been unable to furnish them. And I give notice that on an early day I will ask the House to consider the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia presents the report of the committee of conference, as he has a right to do, and he requests that the report of the conference committee and the statement of the House conferees be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. I ask also that the bill, as reported by the conference committee, be printed in bill form.

Mr. DUNHAM. In addition to its going into the RECORD.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Would it not be well to have the statement explaining the provisions of the bill printed in the form of a document as well as to have the bill printed in bill form?

Mr. CRISP. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would it not be well also to print the Senate bill, for which we have a substitute, and then the bill of the committee of conference, so that we can have the whole three of them together?

Mr. CRISP. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The House amendment is an amendment to the Senate bill, and the order to print will include the original bill and the amendment to it. The report of the conference committee is an amendment to the Senate bill.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] asks unanimous consent to have the report of the conference committee, with the accompanying statement made by the managers on the part of the House, printed in the RECORD. This will include the bill. He also asks that the bill be printed in bill form, and that the report of the conference committee be printed in the form of a document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The report of the conference committee is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment and agree to the bill of the Senate, with the following amendment thereto, in the nature of a substitute, and that the Senate agree to the same:

AMENDMENT.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used, under a common control, management, or arrangement, for a continuous carriage or shipment, from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, and also to the transportation in like manner of property shipped from any place in the United States to a foreign country and carried from such place to a port of trans-shipment, or shipped from a foreign country to any place in the United States and carried to such place from a port of entry either in the United States or an adjacent foreign country: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the transportation of passengers or property, or to the receiving, delivering, storage, or handling of property, wholly within one State, and not shipped to or from a foreign country from or to any State or Territory as aforesaid.

The term "railroad" as used in this act shall include all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the roads in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease; and the term "transportation" shall include all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage.

All charges made for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property as aforesaid, or in connection therewith, or for the receiving, delivery, storage, or handling of such property, shall be reasonable and just, and every unjust, unreasonable charge for such service is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 2. That if any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever.

Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers and property to and from their several lines and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates and charges between such connecting lines; but this shall not be construed as requiring any such common carrier to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof; and in any case of an agreement for the pooling of freights as aforesaid, each day of its continuance shall be deemed a separate offense.

SEC. 6. That every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall print and keep for public inspection schedules showing the rates and fares and charges for the transportation of passengers and property which any such common carrier has established and which are in force at the time upon its railroad, as defined by the first section of this act. The schedules printed as aforesaid by any such common carrier shall plainly state the places upon its railroad between which property and passengers will be carried, and shall contain the classification of freight in force upon such railroad, and shall also state separately the terminal charges and any rules or regulations which in any wise change, affect, or determine any part of the aggregate of such aforesaid rates and fares and charges. Such schedules shall be plainly printed in large type, of at least the size of ordinary pica, and copies for the use of the public shall be kept in every depot or station upon any such railroad, in such places and in such form that they can be conveniently inspected.

Any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act receiving freight in the United States to be carried through a foreign country to any place in the United States shall also in like manner print and keep for public inspection, at every depot where such freight is received for shipment, schedules showing the through rates established and charged by such common carrier to all points in the United States beyond the foreign country to which it accepts freight for shipment; and any freight shipped from the United States through a foreign country into the United States, the through rate on which shall not have been made public as required by this act, shall, before it is admitted into the United States from said foreign country, be subject to customs duties as if said freight were of foreign production; and any law in conflict with this section is hereby repealed.

No advance shall be made in the rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published as aforesaid by any common carrier in compliance with the requirements of this section, except after ten days' public notice, which shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the schedule then in force, and the time when the increased rates, fares, or charges will go into effect; and the proposed changes shall be shown by printing new schedules, or shall be plainly indicated upon the schedules in force at the time and kept for public inspection. Reductions in such published rates, fares, or charges may be made without previous public notice; but whenever any such reduction is made, notice of the same shall immediately be publicly posted and the changes made shall immediately be made public by printing new schedules, or shall immediately be plainly indicated upon the schedules at the time in force and kept for public inspection.

And when any such common carrier shall have established and published its rates, fares, and charges, in compliance with the provisions of this section, it shall be unlawful for such common carrier to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of passengers or property, or for any services in connection therewith, than is specified in such published schedule of rates, fares, and charges as may at the time be in force.

Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall file with the commission hereinafter provided for copies of its schedules of rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published in compliance with the requirements of this section, and shall promptly notify said commission of all changes made in the same. Every such common carrier shall also file with said commission copies of all contracts, agreements, or arrangements with other common carriers in relation to any traffic affected by the provisions of this act to which it may be a party. And in cases where passengers and freight pass over continuous lines or routes operated by more than one common carrier, and the several common carriers operating such lines or routes establish joint tariffs of rates or fares or charges for such continuous lines or routes, copies of such joint tariffs shall also, in like manner, be filed with said commission. Such joint rates, fares, and charges on such continuous lines so filed as aforesaid shall be made public by such common carriers when directed by said commission, in so far as may, in the judgment of the commission, be deemed practicable; and said commission shall from time to time prescribe the measure of publicity which shall be given to such rates, fares, and charges, or to such part of them as it may deem it practicable for such common carriers to publish, and the places in which they shall be published; but no common carrier party to any such oint tariff shall be liable for the failure of any other common carrier party thereto to observe and adhere to the rates, fares, or charges thus made and published.

If any such common carrier shall neglect or refuse to file or publish its schedules or tariffs of rates, fares, and charges as provided in this section, or any part of the same, such common carrier shall, in addition to other penalties herein prescribed, be subject to a writ of mandamus, to be issued by any circuit court of the United States in the judicial district wherein the principal office of said common carrier is situated or wherein such offense may be committed, and if such common carrier be a foreign corporation, in the judicial circuit wherein such common carrier accepts traffic and has an agent to perform such service, to compel compliance with the aforesaid provisions of this section; and such writ shall issue in the name of the people of the United States, at the relation of the commissioners appointed under the provisions of this act; and failure to comply with its requirements shall be punishable as and for a contempt; and the said commissioners, as complainants, may also apply, in any such circuit court of the United States, for a writ of injunction against such common carrier, to restrain such common carrier from receiving or transporting property among the several States and Territories of the United States, or between the United States and adjacent foreign countries, or between ports of trans-shipment and of entry and the several States and Territories of the United States, as mentioned in the first section of this act, until such common carrier shall have complied with the aforesaid provisions of this section of this act.

SEC. 7. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any combination, contract, or agreement, expressed or implied, to prevent, by change of time schedule, carriage in different cars, or by other means or devices, the carriage of freights from being continuous from the place of shipment to the place of destination; and no break of bulk, stoppage, or interruption made by such common carrier shall prevent the carriage of freights from being and being treated as one continuous carriage from the place of shipment to the place of destination, unless such break, stoppage, or interruption was made in good faith for some necessary purpose, and without any intent to avoid or unnecessarily interrupt such continuous carriage or to evade any of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That in case any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall do, cause to be done, or permit to be done any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or shall omit to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, such common carrier shall be liable to the person or persons injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation of the provisions of this act, together with a reasonable counsel or attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court in every case of recovery, which attorney's fee shall be taxed and collected as part of the costs in the case.

SEC. 9. That any person or persons claiming to be damaged by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act may either make complaint to the commission as hereinafter provided for, or may bring suit in his or their own behalf for the recovery of the damages for which such common carrier may be liable under the provisions of this act, in any district or circuit court of the United States of competent jurisdiction; but such person or persons shall not have the right to pursue both of said remedies, and must, in each case, elect which one of the two methods of procedure herein provided for he or they will adopt. In any such action brought for the recovery of damages the court before which the same shall be pending may compel any director, officer, receiver, trustee, or agent of the corporation or company defendant in such suit to attend, appear, and testify in such case, and may compel the production of the books and papers of such corporation or company party to any such suit; the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

SEC. 10. That any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by such corporation, who, alone or with any other corporation, company, person, or party, shall willfully do or cause to be done, or shall willingly suffer or permit to be done, any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who shall aid or abet therein, or shall willfully omit or fail to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or shall cause or willingly suffer or permit any act, matter, or thing so directed or required by this act to be done not to be so done, or shall aid or abet any such omission or failure, or shall be guilty of any infraction of this act, or shall aid or abet therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 for each offense.

SEC. 11. That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the interstate-commerce commission, which shall be composed of five commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The commissioners first appointed under this act shall continue in office for the term of two, three, four, five, and six years, respectively, from the 1st day of January, A. D. 1887, the term of each to be designated by the President; but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Not more than three of the commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party. No person in the employ of, or holding any official relation to, any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or owning stock or bonds thereof, or who is in any way pecuniarily interested therein, shall enter upon the duties of or hold such office. Said commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. No vacancy in the commission shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission.

SEC. 12. That the commission hereby created shall have authority to inquire into the management of the business of all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act, and shall keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the same is conducted, and shall have the right to obtain from such common carriers full and complete information necessary to enable the commission to perform the duties and carry out the objects for which it was created; and for the purposes of this act the commission shall have power to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation, and to that end may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section.

And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or other person, issue an order, requiring such common carrier or other person to appear before said commission (and produce books and papers if so ordered) and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying; but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

SEC. 13. That any person, firm, corporation, or association, or any mercantile, agricultural, or manufacturing society, or any body politic or municipal organization, complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, in contravention of the provisions thereof, may apply to said commission by petition, which shall briefly state the facts; whereupon a statement of the charges thus made shall be forwarded by the commission to such common carrier, who shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable time, to be specified by the commission. If such common carrier, within the time specified, shall make reparation for the injury alleged to have been done, said carrier shall be relieved of liability to the complainant only for the particular violation of law thus complained of. If such carrier shall not satisfy the complaint within the time specified, or there shall appear to be any reasonable ground for investigating said complaint, it shall be the duty of the commission to investigate the matters complained of in such manner and by such means as it shall deem proper.

Said commission shall in like manner investigate any complaint forwarded by the railroad commissioner or railroad commission of any State or Territory, at the request of such commissioner or commission, and may institute any inquiry on its own motion in the same manner and to the same effect as though complaint had been made.

No complaint shall at any time be dismissed because of the absence of direct damage to the complainant.

SEC. 14. That whenever an investigation shall be made by said commission, it shall be its duty to make a report in writing in respect thereto, which shall include the findings of fact upon which the conclusions of the commission are based, together with its recommendation as to what reparation, if any, should be made by the common carrier to any party or parties who may be found to have been injured; and such findings so made shall thereafter, in all judicial proceedings, be deemed prima facie evidence as to each and every fact found.

All reports of investigations made by the commission shall be entered of record, and a copy thereof shall be furnished to the party who may have complained, and to any common carrier that may have been complained of.

SEC. 15. That if, in any case in which an investigation shall be made by said commission, it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the commission, either by the testimony of witnesses or other evidence, that anything has been done or omitted to be done in violation of the provisions of this act, or of any law cognizable by said commission, by any common carrier, or that any injury or damage has been sustained by the party or parties complaining, or by other parties aggrieved in consequence of any such violation, it shall be the duty of the commission to forthwith cause a copy of its report in respect thereto to be delivered to such common carrier, together with a notice to said common carrier to cease and desist from such violation, or to make reparation for the injury so found to have been done, or both, within a reasonable time, to be specified by the commission; and if, within the time specified, it shall be made to appear to the commission that such common carrier has ceased from such violation of law, and has made reparation for the injury found to have been done, in compliance with the report and notice of the commission, or to the satisfaction of the party complaining, a statement to that effect shall be entered of record by the commission, and the said common carrier shall thereupon be relieved from further liability or penalty for such particular violation of law.

SEC. 16. That whenever any common carrier, as defined in and subject to the provisions of this act, shall violate or refuse or neglect to obey any lawful order or requirement of the commission in this act named, it shall be the duty of the commission, and lawful for any company or person interested in such order or requirement, to apply, in a summary way, by petition, to the circuit court of the United States sitting in equity in the judicial district in which the common carrier complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience, as the case may be; and the said court shall have power to hear and determine the matter, on such short notice to the common carrier complained of as the court shall deem reasonable; and such notice may be served on such common carrier, his or its officers, agents, or servants, in such manner as the court shall direct; and said court shall proceed to hear and determine the matter speedily as a court of equity and without the formal pleadings and proceeding applicable to ordinary suits in equity, but in such a manner as to do justice in the premises; and to this end such court shall have power, if it think fit, to direct and prosecute, in such mode and by such persons as it may appoint, all such inquiries as the court may think needful to enable it to form a just judgment in the matter of such petition; and on such hearing the report of said commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated; and if it be made to appear to such court, on such hearing or on report of any such person or persons, that the lawful order or requirement of said commission drawn in question has been violated or disobeyed, it shall be lawful for such court to issue a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such common carrier from further continuing such violation or disobedience of such order or requirement of said commission, and enjoining obedience to the same; and in case of any disobedience of any such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, it shall be lawful for such court to issue writs of attachment, or any other process of said court incident or applicable to writs of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, against such common carrier, and if a corporation, against one or more of the directors, officers, or agents of the same, or against any owner, lessee, trustee, receiver, or other person failing to obey such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and said court may, if it shall think fit, make an order directing such common carrier or other person so disobeying such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to pay such sum of money not exceeding for each carrier or person in default the sum of $500 for every day after a day to be named in the order that such carrier or other person shall fail to obey such injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and such moneys shall be payable as the court shall direct, either to the party complaining, or into court to abide the ultimate decision of the court, or into the Treasury; and payment thereof may, without prejudice to any other mode of recovering the same, be enforced by attachment or order in the nature of a writ of execution, in like manner as if the same had been recovered by a final decree in personam in such court. When the subject in dispute shall be of the value of $2,000 or more, either party to such proceeding before said court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the same regulations now provided by law in respect of security for such appeal; but such appeal shall not operate to stay or supersede the order of the court or the execution of any writ or process thereon; and such court may, in every such matter, order the payment of such costs and counsel fees as shall be deemed reasonable. Whenever any such petition shall be filed or presented by the commission it shall be the duty of the district attorney, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, to prosecute the same; and the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States. For the purposes of this act, excepting its penal provisions, the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed to be always in session.

SEC. 17. That the commission may conduct its proceedings in such manner as will best conduce to the proper dispatch of business and to the ends of justice. A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but no commissioner shall participate in any hearing or proceeding in which he has any pecuniary interest. Said commission may, from time to time, make or amend such general rules or orders as may be requisite for the order and regulation of proceedings before it, including forms of notices and the service thereof, which shall conform, as nearly as may be, to those in use in the courts of the United States. Any party may appear before said commission and be heard, in person or by attorney. Every vote and official act of the commission shall be entered of record, and its proceedings shall be public upon the request of either party interested. Said commission shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed. Either of the members of the commission may administer oaths and affirmations.

SEC. 18. That each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $7,500, payable in the same manner as the salaries of judges of the courts of the United States. The commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $3,500, payable in like manner. The commission shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of such other employés as it may find necessary to the proper performance of its duties, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The commission shall be furnished by the Secretary of the Interior with suitable offices and all necessary office supplies. Witnesses summoned before the commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States. All of the expenses of the commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the commissioners, or by their employés under their orders, in making any investigation in any other places than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid, on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission and the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 19. That the principal office of the commission shall be in the city of Washington, where its general sessions shall be held; but whenever the convenience of the public or of the parties may be promoted or delay or expense prevented thereby, the commission may hold special sessions in any part of the United States. It may, by one or more of the commissioners, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties, in any part of the United States, into any matter or question of fact pertaining to the business of any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 20. That the commission is hereby authorized to require annual reports from all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act, to fix the time and prescribe the manner in which such reports shall be made, and to require from such carriers specific answers to all questions upon which the commission may need information. Such annual reports shall show in detail the amount of capital stock issued, the amounts paid therefor, and the manner of payment for the same; the dividends paid, the surplus fund, if any, and the number of stockholders; the funded and floating debts, and the interest paid thereon; the cost and value of the carrier's property, franchises, and equipment; the number of employés, and the salary paid each class; the amounts expended for improvements each year, how expended, and the character of such improvements; the earnings and receipts from each branch of business and from all sources; the operating and other expenses; the balances of profit and loss; and a complete exhibit of the financial operations of the carrier each year, including an annual balance-sheet. Such reports shall also contain such information in relation to rates or regulations, concerning fares or freights, or agreements, arrangements, or contracts with other common carriers, as the commission may require; and the said commission may, within its discretion, for the purpose of enabling it the better to carry out the purposes of this act, prescribe (if in the opinion of the commission it is practicable to prescribe such uniformity and methods of keeping accounts) a period of time within which all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act shall have, as near as may be, a uniform system of accounts, and the manner in which such accounts shall be kept.

SEC. 21. That the commission shall, on or before the 1st day of December in each year, make a report to the Secretary of the Interior, which shall be by him transmitted to Congress, and copies of which shall be distributed as are the other reports issued from the Interior Department. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce, together with such recommendations as to additional legislation relating thereto as the commission may deem necessary.

SEC. 22. That nothing in this act shall apply to the carriage, storage, or handling of property free or at reduced rates for the United States, State, or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes, or to or from fairs and expositions for exhibition thereat, or the issuance of mileage, excursion, or commutation passenger tickets; nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates to ministers of religion; nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent railroads from giving free carriage to their own officers and employés, or to prevent the principal officers of any railroad company or companies from exchanging passes or tickets with other railroad companies for their officers and employés; and nothing in this act contained shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, but the provisions of this act are in addition to such remedies: Provided, That no pending litigation shall in any way be affected by this act.

SEC. 23. That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for the use and purposes of this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, A. D. 1888, and the intervening time anterior thereto.

SEC. 24. That the provisions of sections 11 and 18 of this act, relating to the appointment and organization of the commission herein provided for, shall take effect immediately, and the remaining provisions of this act shall take effect sixty days after its passage.

JOHN H. REAGAN,
CHARLES F. CRISP,
A. J. WEAVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

S. M. CULLOM,
ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

Statement of conferees on the part of the House.

[Required by Rule XXIX.]

The House conferees on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses on the bill of the Senate "to regulate commerce," and the bill of the House "to regulate commerce among the States, and prevent unjust discrimination by common carriers," make the following detailed statement of the changes between the House bill and the substitute herewith appended:

The action of the House being to adopt a single amendment, your committee, without attempting to call attention to the precise changes made in each section of the bill, report to the House the substance and effect of the changes made, as follows:

The bill of the House applied only to the transportation of freight, and the bill as adopted embraces the transportation of passengers as well as freight.

The bill of the House was limited to the regulation of such transportation on railroads. The bill as reported provides for the regulation of the transportation of property partly by railroad and partly by water, when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement, for a continuous carriage or shipment from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia.

The bill which we report defines the term "railroad," as used in it, to include all bridges, ferries used or operated with any railroad, which is in addition to the provisions of the House bill.

The second section of the substitute bill adopts substantially the provisions of the House bill against discrimination by special rates, rebates, drawbacks, and other devices, and declares that any one making such discrimination shall be guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared unlawful.

The third section of the substitute embraces substantially the provisions of the bill of the House, in requiring equal facilities and advantages for all shippers, without exception, and has a provision requiring equal facilities for the interchange of traffic with all other railroads for the carriage of property and passengers, and forbids any discrimination by one railroad in the facilities furnished against any other railroad. It contains a clause declaring that this act shall not be construed as requiring such common carrier to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to any common carrier engaged in like business.

The fourth section adopts substantially the provisions of the House bill on the long and short haul, with the following proviso: That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for a longer than for a shorter distance for the transportation of passengers and property, and that the commission may, from time to time, prescribe the extent to which such common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section.

The fifth section of the substitute bill is a copy of the clause in the House bill prohibiting pooling, with an amendment striking out the words of the House bill "by dividing," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "or to divide," and with the addition of the words in line 3, after the word "combination," "with any other common carrier or carriers."

The sixth section is a substitute for the provisions of the House and Senate bills in relation to the publication of schedules showing the rates, fares, and charges for the transportation of passengers and property. Instead of requiring the rates to be posted up, as was provided in the House bill, it requires that, after ninety days from the passage of the act, every common carrier subject to its provisions shall have printed and keep for public inspection schedules, showing such rates, fares, and charges, and, in addition to requiring the railroads to give publicity at all of the depots on their several lines, it gives authority to the commission, where it is proper and necessary, to require them to give publicity to their rates to other places beyond the lines of their several railroads.

It also provides that the rates, fares, and charges shall not be raised except after ten days of public notice, but that they may be reduced without previous public notice; the notice, however, shall be simultaneous with the reduction itself, and it requires that all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act shall file with the commission provided for in the bill copies of the schedules which have been established, and shall promptly notify said commission of all changes made in the same; and that they shall file with the commission copies of all contracts, arrangements, or agreements with other common carriers in relation to traffic affected by the provisions of this bill; and in cases where passengers and freights pass over continuous lines or routes operated by more than one common carrier, and the several common carriers operating such lines or routes establish joint tariffs of rates or fares or charges for such continuous lines or routes, copies of such joint tariffs shall also be filed with the commission, and made public, if so directed by the commission.

The section also provides that where a common carrier subject to its provisions shall neglect or refuse to file or publish its schedules of tariff or rates and fares, or any part of the same, such common carrier shall, in addition to the penalties herein prescribed, be subject to a writ of mandamus, to be issued by any circuit court of the United States, in any judicial district wherein the principal office of the common carrier is situated, or wherein such offense may be committed, requiring a compliance with the provisions of the act.

The seventh section of the substitute bill contains substantially the provisions of the first part of the second section of the House bill, in relation to the continuous carriage of property and persons from the place of shipment to the place of destination.

The eighth section of the substitute bill contains the substance of the seventh section of the House bill, in regard to damages and counsel's fees, but expressed in somewhat different language.

The ninth section of the substitute bill is a new section, which provides that persons claiming to have been damaged by the action of common carriers may proceed for recovery of their damages either in the courts of the United States or before the commission herein provided for, as they may elect, but not before both tribunals. This section, which gives jurisdiction to courts of the United States, does not give jurisdiction in civil suits to the State courts, as was provided for in the House bill.

This section of the substitute bill also provides that the courts shall have power to compel any director, officer, receiver, trustee, or agent of the corporation or company defendant in such suit to attend, appear, and testify in such case, and may compel the production of the books and papers of such corporation or company party to any such suit; and it provides further that the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying; but that such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

The tenth section of the substitute bill makes it a penal offense to violate any of the provisions of this act, and is substantially the eighth section of the House bill, except that it puts the maximum of the fine which may be imposed at the sum of $5,000 instead of $2,000, as was provided for by the House bill.

The eleventh and subsequent sections to the twenty-first, inclusive of the substitute bill, contain the substance of the Senate's bill providing for a commission, except as modified by the provisions of the substitute bill herein recited.

It provides for a commission to consist of five persons whose term of office shall be for six years, except for the first appointments, which are to be for two, three, four, five, and six years. The members of this commission are to be appointed by the President by and with the advice of the Senate. Their principal office shall be in Washington, but they may hold sessions at other places than Washington, and a single member of the commission may take testimony anywhere, as may be directed by the commission.

These commissioners have salaries of $7,500 each. The commission has the power to appoint a secretary, with an annual salary of $3,500, and has authority to employ and fix the compensation of such other employés as it may find necessary to the proper performance of its duties, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The nineteenth section of the Senate's bill, providing for a reference of the question of pooling to the commission, is not embraced in this substitute.

Section 22 of the substitute bill, among other things, provides that nothing in this act contained shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, but that the provisions of this act are in addition to such remedies, with a proviso that no pending litigation shall in any way be affected by this act.

Section 24 of the substitute bill provides that the act shall go into effect sixty days after its passage, as in the opinion of your committee it was deemed best to give the railroads sufficient time to prepare their schedules and to modify their mangement in accordance with the provisions of this bill. The appointment of the commission, however, is to be made at once, as it has to be organized, and as said schedules of rates and charges have to be filed with said commission.

J. H. REAGAN,
CHARLES F. CRISP,
A. J. WEAVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] demands the regular order. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

CONSOLIDATION OF CUSTOMS DISTRICTS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 8980) a bill (H. R. 10670) for the consolidation of customs districts, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 8980) was laid on the table.

STATISTICS OF EXPORTS, IMMIGRATION, AND EMIGRATION.

Mr. HUDD, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 8650) for the collection of more accurate statistics of exports, immigration, and emigration; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSES IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. MORROW, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 10079) to extend the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board to the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, California; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. HATCH, the Committee on Agriculture was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 225) to provide for printing the fourth annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the year 1887, and it was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. 246) to provide for the erection of a public building at Charlotte, N. C.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN A. FAGG.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 6188) for the relief of John A. Fagg; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY E. MARTIN.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 9843) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Martin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SEMON BACHE & CO.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2871) for the relief of Semon Bache & Co.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HUGH FOSTER.

Mr. CROXTON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1664) to confirm the homestead entry of Hugh Foster; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

VENTILATION AND ACOUSTICS.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics be authorized to appoint a subcommittee, not to exceed five in number, whose duty it shall be to proceed to the cities of New York, Albany, Chicago, and Springfield, Ill., for the purpose of examining systems of heating and ventilation of public buildings in those cities, and to employ a Government expert to accompany it; the expenses, not to exceed $800, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the subcommittee.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 6114) to require the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad Company to construct and maintain a suitable draw in said company's bridge across the West Pascagoula River in the State of Mississippi; which was laid on the table, and the acompanying report ordered to be printed.

SECTION 4567 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 10440) to amend section 4567 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RETIREMENT AND RECOINAGE OF THE TRADE-DOLLAR.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. 199) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to present at some future time the views of the minority on that bill.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman will have that privilege.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, that is a bill which, under the rules of the House, should go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics to ask unanimous consent to fix a day for the consideration of the resolution reported by me from that committee this morning.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman suggest a day?

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. Next Wednesday.

Mr. CLARDY. I object.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. I ask that it be taken up now.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I object.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills begins at sixteen minutes before 1 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Mines and Mining; and the pending question is upon a resolution called up by that committee on Tuesday last setting apart a day for the consideration of bills reported from the committee.

Mr. HAMMOND rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to make some observations (not to exceed five or ten minutes) on the pending proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] to the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to consume any further time on this matter than is necessary to put the House in possession of the real situation.

The Committee on Mines and Mining asked the adoption of a resolution that, after the morning hour for the call of committees for reports, the whole of Wednesday, the 19th instant, be set apart for the consideration of bills coming from that committee. When asked what bills they had, they responded that they had two which they desired considered—one to organize a board of mining, &c., and the other a bill designed to get the McGarrahan claim before the Court of Claims. That their real preference was for the McGarrahan claim was shown by the fact that when the committee was called it undertook to bring that bill up as the measure which the committee desired to consider, but it was ruled out of order because it was a private claim.

At this late stage of the session we are asked to set apart a day, really for the consideration of this private claim, to the exclusion of revenue bills, appropriation bills, and all the prior orders which the House has seen proper heretofore to make. Hence the gentleman from Arkansas has offered an amendment providing that this resolution shall not exclude those prior orders and land-grant bills, appropriation bills, and revenue bills. To that amendment I proposed the further amendment that on the day named no private claim should be taken up. In using those general words, I had, of course, no other purpose than to exclude the McGarrahan claim; and if the Chair please I will modify my amendment so as to read: "Provided, That on that day the McGarrahan claim shall not be considered."

Mr. HILL. That is the only private bill we have.

Mr. HAMMOND. I put my proposition in that shape because, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HILL] states, that is the only private bill the committee has, and therefore the House when it comes to vote ought to vote upon the amendment thus modified.

Now, this McGarrahan claim was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1865 to be absolutely worthless. The decision will be found in 3 Wallace—the Gomez case. That tribunal has said that this claimant has had his day in court, and that the claim is of no account. We are now asked, twenty-one years after that decision, to grant by statute a new trial. The Judiciary Committee thought it would be a very bad precedent to set aside by a statute of the United States a solemn judgment upon the validity of a claim twenty-one years after that judgment was made. Now, unless we intend to set it aside, unless there is some reason given so forcible that a majority of the House think that it ought to be set aside, then it is folly to waste a day in arguing the matter here when we are pressed with so many other measures of larger importance; and it would be worse folly to impose upon the Court of Claims the duty of investigating it, unless a future Congress is expected to appropriate money to pay this claim if it shall be ascertained that anything is due to the claimant.

The Republic is interested in having an end of this strife. Certainly men thought that it was ended in 1865, when the decision I have cited was pronounced. I think this House should end it to-day by voting in favor of my amendment, providing that on the day named the McGarrahan claim shall not be considered. I think, in point of fact, the House should vote down this whole proposition to give the committee a day, because they have declared here that they want the day for the consideration, mainly, of that claim. They have not indicated that the other bill—the only other bill that they have—is of sufficient importance to justify the House in dedicating a day to its consideration.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, the proposition embodied in the resolution is, as stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], to set apart a day, or rather the fraction of a day, for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining, among which is the bill to which he refers, in relation to the claim of McGarrahan against the United States, the proposition being to send that claim where all claims involving a charge against the Government and requiring judicial investigation ought to go—to the courts of the country.

The gentleman from Georgia says the Supreme Court of the United States has passed upon this question, has fully adjudicated it in 1865. In reply to the gentleman, I say what I said the other day, that the full merits of this claim, in my opinion, have never been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States; and I say further that since that determination of this case in 1865 half-a-dozen committees of this House and the Senate have reported, not in favor of sending this matter to the Court of Claims, but in favor of establishing the title of McGarrahan to the undisposed property mentioned in the bill which we propose to consider if we can get a day fixed.

Mr. Speaker, if a solemn treaty between the United States and Mexico has been violated to the injury of one of our own citizens, the courts of the country ought to be open for redress. If he has no claim, then the courts of the United States will not be expected to decide against the United States.

I may be permitted to say that since the decision on this case in 1865 a patent has been found in the Land Office, mutilated, it is true; but there is evidence of the most conclusive character that its issuance was authorized by Abraham Lincoln, and that in the Land Office this patent was withheld for a time and subsequently mutilated in the interest of the New Idria Mining Company, which has been carrying on this contest against McGarrahan for the last thirty years.

I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY], has said nearly everything I desired to say in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND]. I wish simply to add that the decision of the Supreme Court to which the gentleman from Georgia has referred was made upon a bogus appeal never perfected; and at the time it was made there was, as my colleague has said, a patent in existence the issuance of which had been ordered by Abraham Lincoln after the most thorough and patient examination of this claim. These important facts were never before the Supreme Court.

Besides that, at the time this decision was rendered, Mr. McGarrahan, who was nearly 3,000 miles away from here, relying on his attorney to represent his case in that court, found afterward his attorney was not present in person to look after it, so the whole trial and hearing before the Supreme Court of the United States went by default.

Now, sir, this bill does not propose to establish a title in the claim of McGarrahan. It does not propose to give him one solitary cent. It does propose, however, to give him the right to go before the court again and present his case anew. I suppose, if the Supreme Court, after fully hearing this case on the merits, have decided against it, they will be the proper judges, when the time comes and the case shall be reached again, to say whether that decision should be reversed or not. And I think the record of that court is such that this Congress can afford to trust them in a matter of that character.

I will yield now for ten minutes to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman allow me for a moment?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. If there were such facts discovered as ought to have set that decree aside, could they not have been brought before the court by a bill of review?

Mr. HILL. I suppose if the facts had been discovered in time it could have been done.

Mr. HAMMOND. Was it not always in time when they were first discovered?

Mr. HILL. I do not know about that, because I am not familiar enough with the case.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am speaking on general principles. If any judgment is rendered by fraud or ignorance of facts can not a bill of review be filedas soon as the fraud or ignorance has been discovered, in order to set that wrongful judgment aside? Yes, at any time within two years of the discovery; that is long enough to file a bill in equity.

Mr. HILL. I do not assent to the proposition where a judgment has been rendered for want of the facts a man could file a bill of review and set it aside. Where it has been rendered by fraud that is another thing, but there is no fraud charged in this case and none intimated against the Supreme Court.

I yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak in defense of the Committee on Mines and Mining, for that committee has shown it is abundantly able to take care of itself. But I am informed they have not had a day in the first or at the present session of this Congress, and if they are to be given a hearing for one day or more it seems they should not be restricted as to what matters they should take up.

It seems, whatever else may be true of the McGarrahan claim, that an able and intelligent committee, after having examined it, have come to the conclusion the Supreme Court has not settled the merits of the case. Certainly the question remains in doubt, at least. If, as my friend from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] assumes, the case has been settled, I do not think it would take the Court of Claims long to find it out.

So long as a citizen of the United States presents a claim to the Government, which an intelligent committee of this House believes to be a good one, it seems to me he should not be denied an opportunity of setting his case before one of the courts of the country. That is the smallest thing which should be denied to a citizen.

I do not know why this great Government, which is able to pay all of its honest claims to its citizens, should not deal as fairly, as liberally, and as honorably with them as one citizen deals with another. I do not believe there is a Member of the House, if a claim existed against him personally, in the same condition this McGarrahan claim is, would for a moment say his opponent in the matter should not go into the courts and have fair opportunity to settle the question whether he has a just claim or not.

That is the main point in this matter. All Mr. McGarrahan asks is that he may have a fair opportunity to show he has a good claim. Shall that be denied him? I do not believe it should be.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Has not this claim been decided?

Mr. MILLIKEN. It has been in court, but I understand at the time it was before the court there was a patent signed by Abraham Lincoln, with the seal of the Land Office on it, which was not presented to the court. I understand, further, this committee, after examining the case thoroughly, believes McGarrahan has a good case, and being in that condition, I believe the best thing which can be done, and the fairest, is to let it go to the Court of Claims, so that we shall not hear anything more of it at this session of Congress.

Mr. BURROWS. This is to have the Court of Claims review the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not so understand it. Gentlemen say McGarrahan has been here twenty-one years. Do gentlemen want him to be here twenty-one years more? Let us send him to the Court of Claims and have the matter settled and have no more of it in Congress.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move to lay this whole matter on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves to lay the resolution and pending amendments on the table.

Mr. HILL. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio had the floor, but the Chair understood he yielded it.

Mr. HILL. I yielded to the gentleman from Maine a few minutes, but I did not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. I think the House is well advised as to what is implied by this resolution and the amendments, and in order to get rid of it and let other business go on which gentlemen claim is of more importance, I ask for the previous question on the resolution and pending amendments.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move to lay the resolution and pending amendments on the table; and upon that I call for the yeas and nays. [After a pause.] In order not to consume time unnecessarily I will not ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to lay the resolution and pending amendments on the table.

The question being taken, the SPEAKER stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HILL. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 87, noes 54.

Mr. HILL. I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. A quorum has not voted, and the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. HILL, and the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HAMMOND.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 69.

Mr. HILL. I do not call for further count. But I am requested by the friends of the bill to ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 24 members voting therefor—not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the resolution and amendments were laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The Committee on Pacific Railroads was called.

Mr. THROCKMORTON was recognized and yielded to Mr. RICHARDSON.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am directed by the Committee on Pacific Railroads to call up for consideration House joint resolution 170. It is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and that it be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will state the gentleman's request.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States.

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of three competent persons, said compensation not to exceed the rate of $3,000 per annum to each, and the necessary traveling expenses and board bills, for which proper vouchers shall be returned, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and also to appoint a stenographer, if necessary, and fix his compensation, whose duty it shall be to examine into the working and financial management of the Pacific railroads (or such thereof as he may deem expedient) that have received aid from the Government in bonds or land; to ascertain whether they have observed all the obligations imposed upon them by the laws under which they received such aid, or since passed in reference thereto; and whether their books and accounts are so kept as to show the net earnings of the aided roads not reduced by constructive mileage on branch roads, or average mileage between aided and non-aided roads or parts of roads, or whether there is a division of earnings of aided roads to less productive branches, or any other wrongful or improper purpose, and, if so, how much; and whether there is discrimination of rates in favor of unaided against aided roads; and whether any, and if so, how much, money is due and owing to the United States on account of mistaken or erroneous accounts, reports, or settlements made by said roads; or whether the proceeds of any trust funds or lands loaned, advanced, or granted have been diverted from their lawful use. The persons appointed to have power to examine all books, papers, and methods of said companies, employ experts if necessary, summon and compel attendance of witnesses, and to administer oaths. They shall at all times be under the immediate direction and control of the Secretary of the Interior, and may at any time be removed by him in his discretion.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of this investigation.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to offer an amendment, which I think the gentleman from Tennessee will accept.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not yet stated the request of the gentleman from Tennessee. He asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of this resolution and consider the same in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNHAM. I think the resolution had better go into committee.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of theUnion for the purpose of considering the joint resolution which has been read.

The motion was agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the joint resolution the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to have the report read. It is not very long and it expresses the facts very fully.

Mr. DUNHAM. I make the point of order that the joint resolution has not been read.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been read.

Mr. DUNHAM. The title has been read. The joint resolution was read in the House, but has not been read in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDSON) was read, as follows:

The committee are of opinion that an examination should be made into the workings and financial management of the Pacific railroads that have received aid from the Government in bonds or lands, to ascertain whether they have observed all the obligations imposed upon them by the laws under which they received such aid, or which have been since passed in reference thereto.

In view of the vast interest the Government has in these railroads, and its liability for them, it is of the utmost importance that Congress shall know whether or not said obligations have been and are being disregarded by said companies. It is, by the committee, deemed important that the system of keeping the books and accounts of the roads be also investigated. The committee have reasons to believe that their books are not so kept as to show properly their net earnings. It is important to ascertain if there have been diversions of the earnings of said aided roads to less productive unaided branches, or any other wrongful or improper purpose, and if so, to what extent; and also whether or not there have been discriminations in rates in favor of unaided as against aided roads.

Your committee are of opinion that considerable money is due to the United States from said railroads on account of mistaken or erroneous reports, settlements, or accounts made and rendered by them. Further, it is believed that proceeds of the trust funds or lands loaned or granted them have been diverted from their lawful use.

To the end that an investigation may be had covering these alleged evils and irregularities, your committee are of opinion that the Secretary of the Interior should be clothed with power and have the necessary funds provided him with which to make such examination. They are of the opinion that such an investigation can be more satisfactorily made by experts and competent persons selected by that official, to whom they will report, and under whose direction they will proceed and operate, than by any other mode. They do not hesitate to say they believe that this method of making such examination is preferable to an investigation by a committee composed of the members of Congress. They think the compensation to be allowed the persons thus employed should be at the rate of $3,000 per annum, and that in addition thereto their board and traveling expenses should be allowed. Your committee can not state accurately the time necessary for this investigation; but it will probably cover six or eight months. They consider it wise to leave it in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior as to when their services shall be dispensed with.

In this connection the committee beg leave to refer to the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, dated January 23, 1886, addressed to the President of the Senate, being Executive Document No. 39. From that letter it will be seen the Department can not, with its present force, make the contemplated investigation by reason of the pressure already upon its employés. Its clerical force is not now sufficient, and the Secretary asks for an increase therein, that thereby "the financial interests of the Government may be subserved, and a better understanding arrived at between bonded and land-grant railroads, and their relations and responsibility to the Government." That letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 23, 1886.

SIR: Under the requirements of the law creating the office of Commissioner of Railroads, and the duties devolved upon that office and the Secretary of the Interior, I beg leave to represent that, in order to a proper compliance therewith, an increase of the force in that office is absolutely necessary, and that with an adequate force the financial interests of the Government would be subserved and a better understanding arrived at between bonded and land-grant railroads and their relations and responsibility to the Government.

It has been found impracticable with the present force to secure the information necessary to such relation and understanding, and to procure and prepare concise and specific reports, the present force being barely sufficient for the current business of the office.

It is not deemed advisable that specific grades and salaries should be appropriated for, as in the case of the permanent force of most offices of the Government, but that a bulk appropriation should be made of from $15,000 to $20,000, for the employment of appropriate force in various and specific lines of investigation, at such times and at such rates as might be deemed best.

If such an appropriation be made, it should be made available as soon as practicable, to the end that the service desired may be utilized during the current year's business.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE PRO TEMPORE.

The committee do not believe that the sum mentioned and asked for by the Secretary of the Interior will be sufficient, or it may not be, for the purpose indicated by him and the objects set forth herein. They therefore recommend that the sum of $30,000 be appropriated or set apart for the purposes contemplated.

Your committee recommend the adoption of the joint resolution herewith reported, being H. Res. 170, introduced by Mr. RICHARDSON and referred to this committee by the House on the 10th instant.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish only to occupy a few moments in presenting the question to the committee. The report which has just been read explains fully the object and purpose of this joint resolution. It is briefly to provide for the appointment by the Secretary of the Interior of a commission of experts charged with the duty of investigating the books and system of book-keeping of the Pacific railroads which have received aid from the Government. The committee have reason to believe that these books have not been so kept as to show in every instance the net earnings of the Pacific railroads, which is necessary to the end that the Government may receive its just proportion of receipts.

Under the Thurman act it is well known that the Government was entitled to receive 25 per cent. of those earnings. Now, by the system of book-keeping which the roads have adopted, it appears to the committee that the earnings of these roads are credited in many instances to the unaided portion of the system and not to the aided portion, which in fact earned the money, and in this way, as you can very well see, the Government is annually deprived of its proper per cent. of the earnings of the system or of so much of the roads as have been aided.

I desire to have read a letter which was furnished me by the Department of the Interior last spring, and which bears directly upon this point. My object in having it read is to show that these roads, by their system of book-keeping, credit the net earnings to the unaided rather than to the aided portions of the road.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF RAILROADS,
Washington, D. C., April 12, 1886.

SIR: In answer to your inquiry, I have the honor to state that I made a special examination during July and August, last summer, of the accounts of the Kansan Division, Union Pacific Railway Company (formerly the Kansas Pacific Railway Company), in order to determine whether the aided road had been receiving its fair proportion of the earnings of the line from Kansas City to Denver, such earnings having been heretofore apportioned to the aided and unaided parts respectively, upon a mileage basis. Owing to the great amount of labor involved, I could examine the accounts for but six months, from January 1 to June 30, 1885, with the following result:

By charging each portion of road with the earnings from business confined exclusively to it, and crediting it with such part of the expenses as could be definitely located thereon, then apportioning the remaining earnings and expenses to each part on well-established bases of railroad accounting, I found the net earnings of the aided road increased 57.44 per cent., or $272,731.19; making an increased payment to the Government, at 5 per cent. of net earnings, of $13,636.55, or an estimated increase for the year of $38,663.46.

THOS. J. WALKER, Clerk.

Hon. G. A. JENKS,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. RICHARDSON. When this subject was up during the first session of this Congress I had this same letter read as as portion of the remarks which I then had the honor to submit, and some time later I received a letter from Mr. Charles Francis Adams in which he stated that this letter which has just been read here did not do the entire system justice; in other words, that the facts shown to exist in this instance did not exist in connection with all of the twenty-nine unaided branch roads. I simply mention this in justice to Mr. Adams. I do not myself know how the facts are, but it is shown by this letter that in this particular case the Government is annually robbed by their system of book-keeping of about $38,000 on this one road. The committee are of the opinion, and justly so we think, that if this commission of experts is appointed the entire system of book-keeping will be overhauled, not only by expert book-keepers, but by experts in railroading, and that in that way the Government will be put in a position to get what is justly its due.

I yield now to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. I merely desire to occupy a minute, in order to have read an amendment which I shall offer at the proper time.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend in line 28, after the word "use," by inserting "and also to inquire and report as to the kind, character, and amount of the assets of such of said companies as received aid from the Government in bonds; and what assets of each company are now subject to the lien of the Government, and the value thereof."

Mr. CRISP. I now yield the time back to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will look at the gentleman's amendment, and in the mean time I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, it would hardly seem necessary to say anything in favor of this resolution, but there are some features of it upon which it may be proper to make some remarks, considering the fact that there is now pending in this House legislation looking to the securing of the payment of the debts due to the Government from these corporations, and in view of the further fact that when that measure was being considered in this House there were striking differences of opinion as to the effect of parts of the report of the Commissioner of Railways, and strikingly divergent statements made concerning important matters, which it is necessary for this House to consider in determining what shall be done with regard to these debts. No statement is here in an official form. No statement has ever been rendered to Congress in an official form from which accurate information could be obtained as to the value of the security which the Government has for the payment of its loans to these railroads. In the discussion of this question on a former occasion the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], arguing that it was just as well to postpone any action looking to securing the payment of these debts until they should become due, made this statement with regard to the value of the assets standing as security for the Government lien:

Yes, sir; $144,462,766 of surplus wealth to meet your great claim when it becomes due ten or eleven years hence. Assets, $429,696,731; liabilities, $285,233,965.

I wish to call the attention of the House to what these assets appear by the report of the Commissioner of Railways to consist of. First, as to the cost of road fixtures and equipments: These assets of one of these roads is set forth as one hundred and sixty millions, and in the statement of the assets of the other those items are put at about one hundred and fifty-one millions; the two together amount to three hundred and eleven millions. I make the assertion here, and any business man familiar with the facts will bear me out in it, that, although the roads may have cost these enormous sums, although these figures may represent what was put into them, either correctly or incorrectly, yet today they could be built for one-third of the amount. One hundred millions of dollars would better represent the value of those assets.

Let us consider further some of the assets which are supposed to be in the hands of the Government, and to remain there during the ten or eleven years yet to elapse before these debts are due. One item of those assets is $43,000,000 invested in the stock and bonds of branch lines, some twenty in number. Gentlemen upon one side of this question say: "These are of no value; these are worthless; these do not add to the security of the Government." Gentlemen on the other side say: "Here are assets which will remain on hand to secure your debt." Now, sir, we want to know, and this resolution is designed to enable us to know, by the work of experts well qualified to examine into the question and report upon it—we want to ascertain what the true values of these roads are, the true value of the road-bed, of the fixtures, of the real estate, of the company's earnings, of these bonds and stocks of the branch lines; in short, the real facts in relation to the kind, character, and value of their assets and everything connected with the working and financial management of these roads. Among the items which make up this "surplus wealth" of over $144,000,000 we find: Repaid the United States $21,604,141.89, and United States transportation and sinking-fund accounts $9,992,941.35. Over $32,000,000 in these two large sums, the first of which should in no wise be regarded as security for the balance of the debt remaining unpaid, because it has already been applied as a credit. Yes, about $22,000,000 should be deducted from this surplus wealth security for the debts when they become due ten or eleven years hence; for the simple reason that that sum has been deducted from the debt heretofore, still leaving a debt at this time of $109,000,000.

Again, as another part of these assets, there are over five and a half millions in accounts receivable and bills receivable; there are over $2,000,000 in fuel material and stores on hand; there are nearly $2,000,000 in the stocks and bonds of the roads themselves. What a permanent security these things afford!

When you come carefully to consider these assets you will find that instead of there being a surplus of $144,000,000 to secure the payment of the debt due to the Government ten or eleven years hence, there is not a dollar. Upon the same occasion to which I have already referred the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], alluding to these same bonds and their value, made a statement with regard to two of the other mortgages upon these roads, one of which amounts to something over $14,000,000, and the other to about the same sum; and, if I understood his remarks aright, he gave the House the impression that both those incumbrances were junior to the lien of the Government. He said, "it is so stated."

Now, the information which the committee had, and which they derived from the published report of the railway companies themselves, was that neither of those mortgages was junior to that of the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, how could they be otherwise than junior to the Government mortgages?

These corporations were authorized by act of Congress, in the first instance, only to make two mortgages, one to secure the bonds issued by themselves, the other the lien created on behalf of the Government. Those two mortgages of necessity had priority over the others and therefore the other incumbrances must come after those two.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It happens in just this way: Those incumbrances were put upon the property which was not mortgaged to the Government. One of them was put upon the land grant, and it has been paid off to within less than $3,000,000; and in the trust fund of that land grant is held nearly $14,000,000, which is subject to the other mortgage.

Now I will read from the report of the company as to whether these are subsidiary to the lien of the Government:

UNION PACIFIC LAND-GRANT MORTGAGE.

This is a first mortgage on the lands granted to the Union Pacific Railroad Company along the line of the road extending from Omaha to Ogden, to which the lien of the Government does not attach.

UNION PACIFIC SINKING-FUND MORTGAGE.

Second mortgage on the lands above referred to granted to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and a third mortgage on the line of road extending from Omaha to Ogden (subordinate to the Union Pacific first-mortgage bonds), $27,229,000——

Mr. HOLMAN. That is clear.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have not finished my statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will allow me to say I can see that the land mortgages were entirely independent of the mortgage to the Government or the mortgage to secure the first bonds.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then that disposes of one of those to which you alluded as showing the value of the surplus of these railroads.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it only excepts the land mortgages; all the other mortgages are subordinate to the two prior mortgages.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But I want to show that the second mortgage to which the gentleman alluded, and which he spoke of as selling on the market at 114, embraces a lien upon the lands granted to some of these companies, and it is not simply on the aided lines, but other lines which are not aided—a first mortgage upon some, a second mortgage upon others, a third mortgage upon others.

KANSAS PACIFIC CONSOLIDATED MORTGAGE.

This is a third mortgage on 394 miles of road in Kansas extending westwardly from Kansas City; it is a second mortgage on the remaining 245 miles of that line, running thence westerly into Denver; it is virtually a first mortgage on the Leavenworth branch, extending from Leavenworth to Lawrence; it is a first mortgage on the lands granted to the Kansas Pacific Company, east of the 380th mile-post; it is a second mortgage on the lands granted to the Kansas Pacific Company, west of the 380th mile-post; it is virtually a first mortgage on the road of the Denver Pacific branch, extending from Denver to Cheyenne, and it is also virtually a first mortgage on the lands granted to aid in the construction of this branch.

That mortgage, an 8 per cent. mortgage, is selling on the markets at 114 and 116, showing how the capitalists of this country value that security. If that mortgage, producing 8 per cent., payable semi-annually, were regarded as resting upon a sound basis, the capitalists of this country would be willing to run it up nearer to 214 than 114. There are stocks in this country yielding simply 8 per cent. dividends for which 200 is readily realized.

Mr. SPRINGER. But not bonds.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Stocks are generally considered of less value in the market than bonds.

Mr. SPRINGER. I never heard of a case where a bond sold for so much premium as that, because a bond has a limited time to run, while stocks, if good, continue to pay their dividends indefinitely.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does the gentleman know of any 8 per cent. bond now upon the market—a bond well secured by first mortgage—that does not sell for at least 200? If he does he will please state the case.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no such bond.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No; there is no well-secured mortgage-bond bearing that rate of interest.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is another matter which, by this resolution, we wish to examine.

Mr. HENLEY. What has this to do with the resolution?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. All these matters are, by the amendment of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Georgia, proposed to be investigated and reported upon to this House.

Mr. HENLEY. You are discussing the extension funding bill, not the resolution.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am discussing some things which it does not suit the gentleman to have discussed because they refute the statements made by him in his discussion of the funding bill.

Mr. HENLEY. We will see about that in due course of time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Well, publish your speech long afterward, so that I may not have the opportunity to reply to it, as you did before.

Mr. HENLEY. I beg pardon. I did not allude to the gentleman from Ohio in the speech which I published, and it is not my custom to do anything of that kind. The gentleman is judging me by somebody else's standard evidently.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman interrupted me——

Mr. HENLEY. I know it, and I had the right to do so.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is asserted that these corporations have charged the Government excessively for services rendered—their rates for such services have been extortionate. The proposed investigation will show what truth there is in these accusations, and develop whether such amounts were charged in violation of the law as it now is, which permits the companies to take from the Government "fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the lowest paid by any private party for the same kind of service." Evidence may be thus obtained that the law should be amended, as is proposed in the bill alluded to, so as to compel them to fix their rates "subject to and bound by the provisions of any act of Congress, and the authority exercised thereunder relating to postal, military, or any other Government transportation, applicable alike to other railway or railroad companies."

Let us also be advised fully, if possible, why the net earnings of the aided lines of these roads have diminished during recent years, while the earnings of their branch lines have continued as good, in many cases, or grown better. Their payments to the Government—based as they are on percentages of net earnings—have strikingly decreased, as shown by a table on the thirty-fifth page of the Commissioner of Railroad's Report for 1886:

Year ending December 31, 1885.....	214,648 13	171,470 70	386,118 83
Total	2,620,401 07	2,949,883 87	5,570,284 94

This table shows that the annual payment of the Union Pacific (including the Kansas Pacific) has decreased from $1,762,991.59, in 1880, to $1,253,987.47, in 1885, or nearly one third, while the Central Pacific (including the Western Pacific) has decreased from $984,921.11, in 1880, to $386,118.83, in 1885, or nearly two-thirds.

Why is this? What is the remedy? Would not the requirement of fixed annual payments, which would pay the ruling rate of interest on the present value of the debt and obliterate the principal thereof be a better plan? In this connection I wish to call the attention of the House to charges that have been made against some of these companies—that they have diverted traffic which should naturally have moved over their lines—to the lines of other companies, in which their magnates were pecuniarily interested, thus reducing their payments, which should be made to the Government by cutting down the net earnings out of which they were to come; that the companies have kept constructive mileage accounts in such a manner as to favor their unaided lines as against their aided lines and still further reducing the amounts which should have been subject to the Government's percentage, and that they have paid exorbitant rental for leased lines with the same result. I do not assume that any of these charges are well founded; but they should be examined into.

But a few days ago, in the press, one of these companies was accused of refusing freight which would have brought in between $200,000 and $300,000 recompense, one-half of which would have been clear profit and subject to the percentage of the Government, and refusing it for no good reason. Do such abuses as this exist? Is there no way to prevent them, if legislation which would render them of no importance to the Treasury of the people should fail?

Again, one of these companies has leased its lines for a term of ninety-nine years to another company, virtually its rival and competitor. Without any doubt this has resulted in evil to the interests of the Government. When that rival, possibly under the same management, shall have completed its lines from the Pacific to the Mississippi, as it soon will have done, of what value will the Government's security in the Central Pacific be?

One other charge deserves attention. Have not some of the companies declared and paid large dividends to their stockholders in violation of law? If they have, has not this been hurtful to the Government?

The question is asked, Why propose to investigate and report hereafter on these matters, if a measure to provide a sure and safe payment of the debts of the companies to the United States is to be passed during this Congress? The committee in their report say that they "are of opinion that considerable money is due to the United States from said railroads on account of mistaken or erroneous reports, settlements, or accounts made and rendered by them."

Suppose this proves true. Tedious and protracted litigation may be expected before such money is recovered. And no one well informed on the subject anticipates thus realizing more than a few millions of dollars to be applied on the arrears. The great mass of the debt must still be collected—$109,000,000—it grows larger by a million and a half each year. A pressing necessity exists for prompt action to save this. A New York paper that has been fighting against action in this direction incautiously publishes this statement in a recent number:

> There can be no question that the Central Pacific conspirators have deliberately worked during the last ten years with no other purpose than the abandonment of the subsidized railroads to the Government or the first-mortgage bondholders.

Suppose these conspirators should happen to be largely the first-mortgage bondholders—what would be the result then? In another issue it said the Government could better afford to lose all its debt than that these great villains should go unpunished. What if its course and the course of those who follow in its train should be such as not only to prevent them from being brought to justice, but also to help them to rob the people of their remaining interest in those roads? At no time have two of these corporations—the lesser ones—appeared before our committee to show that they cared what became of the legislation to compel them to make larger payments on their debts than they have been making. They have shown utter indifference to the result. In fact, they seem not to care what attempt Congress may make to constrain them to the payment of their debts. Of the two greater corporations involved, one, the Central Pacific, by its attorneys, heard publicly before the committee, insisted that it could not pay the Government, unless it were given one hundred years in which to do so. Its representatives urged propositions which were inconsistent with the measure proposed. They used all their arguments to pursuade the committee not to report favorably such requirements as are embraced in this bill.

The president and the attorneys of the other, the Union Pacific, presented in the same way a strong array of facts and figures to show that their company would be overburdened if it were exacted of it that their debt should be paid in fixed annual payments within less than eighty years. Evidently the former of these large companies wants no legislation on the subject. The latter does seem willing to undertake to comply with any just and reasonable law that may be enacted. It will result—if this resolution be passed, and the bill also—that the company which of recent years has most nearly complied with its legal obligations, will most cheerfully accept the result; while the other roads will be inclined to reject the plan of fixed payments running through a period of years—and thus become subject to that feature of the bill which provides that hereafter they shall pay 50 per cent. of their net earnings.

Is it not, then, of the greatest importance that all the sums which should be counted in their net earnings should be properly accounted for? The facts which may be collected by this commission will be invaluable, looking to future legislation. Let us pass the resolution now, and let us discuss the bill upon its merits at an early day hereafter. Both are intended to secure the rights of the people and protect them; and both should receive the approval of this House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an amendment which I propose to offer to the bill when it comes up. The gentleman from Georgia consents to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to printing the amendment in the RECORD? The Chair hears none.

The amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, is as follows:

Insert after line 28:

"And also whether any dividends have been unlawfully paid on the capital stock of any of said companies; whether any new stock has been issued or any guarantees or pledges made without authority of law, and to investigate and report all the facts relating to a pretended consolidation of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, and Denver Pacific Railway Company into an alleged corporation known as the Union Pacific Railway Company."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I wish it understood that I retain the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour for the consideration of bills reported from committees has expired.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7208), which is known as "the pleuro-pneumonia bill."

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to raise the question of consideration upon that bill; and I will say to the House that if the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] be voted down, I shall move to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. If this motion of the gentleman from Missouri be adopted, we can dispose of this bill very soon and have it out of the way.

The SPEAKER. Technically, the question of consideration can not be raised against the motion of the gentleman from Missouri. The only mode of accomplishing the purpose indicated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] is to reject the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WILLIS. I repeat then, that if the gentleman's motion be voted down, I will make the motion I have indicated.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 46, noes 95.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DUNN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: if the motion of the gentleman from Missouri be voted down, will the question then recur on the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky to consider the river and harbor bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has now before the House no motion, but has announced that if this motion be not agreed to, he will then move to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the river and harbor bill. The question is now upon agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7208) known as "the pleuro-pneumonia bill."

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 104, nays 130, not voting 85; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. MORGAN with Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR.

Mr. KING with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. GILFILLAN.

Mr. REAGAN with Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. WEST.

Mr. DANIEL with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. WILSON with Mr. MCCOMAS.

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. PAYSON.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. BURLEIGH.

Mr. BARBOUR with Mr. ROCKWELL, until Monday, January 17.

Mr. VIELE with Mr. HIESTAND, until Monday, January 17.

Mr. REESE with Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska.

For this day:

Mr. PERRY with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. JAMES.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. HALE with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, on taking up the river and harbor bill. If present Mr. RANDALL would vote against it and Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, for it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. NEECE with Mr. BRUMM, on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HATCH. I simply desire to give notice to the House that on Tuesday next I will make another effort to bring up this bill.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House for a few minutes to make a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORWOOD. An article appears in the New York World of to-day in which my name is used in connection with the accounts of the Central Pacific Railroad, and I desire to submit a few remarks on the connection of that name with those accounts. I do so principally for this reason: Last evening Mr. Durham, who represents the New York World, called upon me and asked if I had ever represented a claim against the Central Pacific Railroad or Union Pacific Railroad. I told him I never had. He said in the accounts in the Treasury Department certain items which had been claimed by one T. M. Norwood had been rejected by the Government in its accounts with the Central or Union Pacific Railroad, he was not certain which. I told him that if any claims had ever been presented against either one of these companies by one T. M. Norwood I was not the person, and in consequence of that interview this paragraph appears in the World:

> Congressman T. M. NORWOOD, of Georgia, said this evening that the T. M. Norwood mentioned in the list of rejected accounts must be that of some other Norwood. He said he never had any connection, in any way, with the Central Pacific Railroad, and never received any fee from that company of any kind. He says that there are many Norwoods in the West, and that an examination will show that it must be some of the Western Norwoods.

That statement was made in consequence of his asking me if I ever had any claim against the Central Pacific or the Union Pacific. Nothing was said by him in reference to the Southern Pacific Railroad.

And now I come to the explanation of the account as it appears in the World in connection with my name. I presume I am the Norwood mentioned in this account. In 1878, something over a year after my term expired in the Senate, I was engaged by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as counsel in the contest that was then going on between that company and the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, represented by Tom Scott. The contest was as to a certain line of road. Mr. Scott was asking from Congress a large subsidy.

The Southern Pacific Railroad proposed to build a southern line without subsidy, and I, opposing subsidies in the main, and believing the Southern Pacific Railroad Company intended to build a line which would be a true southern line, engaged on that side of the issue. I engaged upon a regular salary of $10,000 a year and all traveling expenses to be paid. That contest went on for some two years, when finally Mr. Scott abandoned the field and the Southern Pacific built its road. My services were rendered publicly. I engaged in public discussion many times when I was so employed. I had a discussion with ex-Governor Watts, of Alabama, before the Legislature of that State.

I had another discussion with ex-Governor John C. Brown, of Tennessee, at Charleston, S. C., before the chamber of commerce. The items entered here I presume to be for fees that were paid to me from time to time by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company on account of my regular salary.

This is my connection with the case. That is all I ever received from them, and that was received as my salary as counsel in that contest. How these items got into the account of the Central Pacific Railroad Company with the United States I do not know, but my agreement was with the Southern Pacific Railroad corporation and in writing, for a specified sum, and my expenses paid. This is all the connection that I ever have had with any of those railroads, and the only amount that I ever have received. And I reiterate that I never had, in any shape, any connection whatever with the Central Pacific Railroad Company or the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

I thank the House for its indulgence.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, stating that my intention is to take up the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. If I may be allowed a word, I desire to say the discussion of that bill in my judgment ought not to occur now, from the fact that the report of the Chief of Engineers is not yet in print. It is not accessible to members and we can go into the discussion of the bill, therefore, imperfectly informed with regard to the necessity of these appropriations. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] will not press the motion now, but will postpone it until we can get the report of the Engineers.

Mr. WILLIS. I will state to the gentleman from Iowa that the reports of the Chief of Engineers are before the committee and accessible to the gentleman at any time. I know of no reason why there should be any delay; it is very necessary, as we all know, that this bill should go to the Senate at once if it is to be passed.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman from Kentucky is certainly mistaken in his statement that those reports are accessible. I have sent for them several times and have been unable to obtain them.

Mr. WILLIS. I will undertake to place one in the hands of my friend from Iowa in thirty minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman was kind enough to say that to me a week ago, but he overlooked it in the hurry of business.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman is mistaken. He asked me as to the report of the Mississippi River Commission. I told him they had done no work, and that the report consisted of only a few lines, which I would send to him. As to the report of the Chief of Engineers I undertake to have it in the gentleman's hands in less than thirty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 19.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 148, noes 17.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that the first and formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to inquire if there is not a report accompanying the bill, and if so whether this is not the proper time to have it read.

Mr. WILLIS. There is a very brief report. I have no objection to its being read. It consists only of eight or ten lines.

Mr. ANDERSON. If it is simply a formal report of a few lines I do not call for the reading of it.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no intention as far as I am informed on the part of any member of the committee to occupy the time of the House in general debate. The bill which has just been presented to the House carries an appropriation of between seven and eight million dollars—$7,430,000 I believe is the amount. The estimates of the Chief of Engineers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, are in round numbers $30,000,000. This bill is therefore about 25 per cent. of the estimates as furnished by the Chief of Engineers.

As the Committee of the Whole is aware, in the last three or four or five years Congress has passed over one year in appropriations of this kind, and appropriations have been made at the expiration of two years in bulk. It is the testimony of the War Department and of the Engineering Department that hundreds of thousands of dollars are lost to the public by this system. It is unbusiness-like. Great public works are left to go to decay. The plant used by the Government in the construction of these works is scattered. Great loss is thus inflicted upon the tax-payers of the country; and in order to avoid that the committee has in this Congress presented this moderate bill. It is considered ample by them for the coming year.

With this brief explanation, Mr. Chairman, unless general debate is asked for, I will call for the reading of the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I understand that there are some gentlemen on this side of the House who desire to be heard.

Mr. WILLIS. If any gentleman will indicate his desire in the matter I will endeavor to satisfy him as to time. If not, I will ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to be heard.

Mr. WILLIS. How much time do you want?

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like an hour.

Mr. WILLIS. What is the least time you will be satisfied with?

Mr. HEPBURN. I want an hour. There are several gentlemen on this side who wish to be heard.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to be heard.

Mr. WILLIS. How much time do you want?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. An hour.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think about three hours would be sufficient on this side.

Mr. WILLIS. Make it two hours.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. This is a very important bill, one of the most important measures before the House.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, acting on the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours, to be equally divided between the friends and the opponents of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to interpose an objection to that. Let us go on with the debate, and it may be that we shall not want even an hour.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope my friend will accept the suggestion I have made. In addition to his share of the time I will take part of the time of the other side and yield a quarter of an hour of it to him.

Mr. HEPBURN. It does not seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is any remarkable grace in the suggestion of the gentleman that we may have an hour for discussion in opposition to a bill carrying seven and a half million dollars, a measure so objectionable as this is.

Mr. REED. And carrying the Mississippi River scheme, too.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise. I make that motion, intending, when we get into the House, to move that all general debate on this bill be limited to two hours.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. WILLIS, that the committee rise, and the chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 19.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill known as the river and harbor bill; and pending that motion, I move that all general debate upon the bill be limited to two hours.

Mr. DUNHAM. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that this bill would move along faster by his yielding a little to those who are known to be opposed to it. The opponents of the bill have asked for only three hours' debate, and it seems to me that it would be better to grant that.

Mr. WILLIS. I am willing to accept that suggestion if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it necessary to limit the debate at this time?

Mr. DUNHAM. I understood that the gentlemen opposed to this bill were asking only three hours.

Mr. WILLIS. I thought so, too. I think two hours would be ample, but, as a matter of accommodation, I am willing that the time shall be three hours, to be divided equally between the friends and opponents of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well.

Mr. WILLIS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that when the House again go into Committee of the Whole on the river and harbor bill, general debate upon the bill be limited to three hours.

The motion was agreed to.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. WILLIS, that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and Mr. MCMILLIN resumed the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill known as the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HEPBURN withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has six minutes remaining.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I will occupy a portion of the time allotted to the advocates of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. All right.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, those of us who have served for some few years in this House are not surprised at the speech just delivered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. We all know that his attacks upon the river and harbor bill are as certain to come as that this House is called upon to consider a river and harbor bill. That he has a right to make these attacks no one questions. But, sir, when that gentleman, in the course of his remarks, sees fit to charge upon those of us who are interested in the appropriation for the Lower Mississippi that we are seeking to do here, indirectly and under false pretenses, what we would not attempt to do, or can not do directly and openly, I question the good faith and temper of the gentleman. Such an insinuation is unworthy of this House; it is unworthy of that amity and good feeling which should exist among members of the House; and it is unworthy of the gentleman himself. I claim, sir, that in advocating an appropriation for the Lower Mississippi I am actuated by as much fairness and as much honesty of purpose as ever actuated the gentleman from Iowa in anything that he has ever in his life attempted. I repudiate and repel, therefore, his insinuation, which is unfair and as false as false can be.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of those on this floor interested in the appropriation for the Lower Mississippi River. I say this, notwithstanding the fact that the district which I have the honor to represent does not touch the Mississippi River by more than 100 miles. In forming an opinion upon the merits of that project I believe I can be as fair and as honest as the gentleman from Iowa or any one else on this floor. I invite the attention of the House to the Lower Mississippi River improvement as I shall present it in the brief time accorded me.

Sir, from the time when this Government of ours acquired the lower portion of the Mississippi down to the present time efforts have been made by the Government to acquire a knowledge of the phenomena of the river; and this has been done by means of engineer officers of the Army appointed to study the river, its laws, its forces, its currents, and other peculiarities. The first report on the river that was made was by a French officer named Bernard, holding a commission in our Army. As early as a few years after the acquisition of the Territory of Louisiana he announced the doctrine that if the channel be contracted the velocity of the current would be increased and the channel deepened. This was the contraction theory. After his time came General Barnard, a distinguished officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army of the United States, who devoted years of his life to a study of the river, with the view of determining how it could be improved and its forces utilized. He, too, favored the contraction theory. Then came Humphreys and Abbott, who, during a period of more than ten years' service on the river, collected much data relating to the river and the proper mode of its treatment. These they embodied in a very elaborate report, which may be found by those who desire it in the Library of Congress. These officers explicitly condemned and rejected the outlet theory, and advised that the only way to improve the river was by the establishment and maintenance of a system of levees. Levees are high-water limits or banks of the river, and serve to conserve and make useful the forces of the river in scouring and deepening the channel.

Various other investigations of the river were made and like reports submitted, until about the year 1875, when Eads applied the jetty system to the mouth of the river with such success that where there had been 8 or 10 feet depth there is to-day 28 and 30 feet, and through the jetties the largest ocean vessels enter the port of New Orleans. The success of the jetties stands a monument to the wisdom of Congress in voting large appropriations for the river. In 1876 the present distinguished senior Senator of the State of Louisiana, having then but recently traveled in Europe, where he had ascertained that the Rhine and other great rivers of Europe were improved under a commission charged with their improvement, introduced in the lower House of Congress, of which he was then a member, a bill providing for the creation of a Mississippi River Commission, and which directed that the formulation of a plan for this great river should be entrusted to the commission, whose duty it should be to study the phenomena of the river, and evolve a proper method for its treatment, in order that its navigation might be rendered easy and that it might not be a terror to those who lived upon its lower banks. That Senator, while traveling in Europe, discovered that a number of the principal rivers there had been improved upon exactly the same system which has been adopted thus far successfully by the Mississippi River Commission. In a speech delivered last session in the Senate that Senator said:

All the important rivers of Europe have been treated on the plan adopted by the Mississippi River Commission for the treatment of the Mississippi River. I was traveling on the Rhine some years ago and saw the effects of this plan of contraction, which was adopted in the last century, and I borrowed the idea of a river commission from a commission which was charged with the improvement of the Rhine, and I have been gratified to observe that the plans are about the same, or at all events founded on the same principles.

By shortening and contracting the channel of the Rhine, the Rhine commission have not only improved its navigation and secured deep water where the river was shallow before this process was applied, but they have recovered vast tracts of country that before were given over to the inundations of the river. They have made Cologne——

To this statement I ask the attention of the gentleman from Iowa, who derided the idea that the little town of Hickman, in Kentucky, should be called a harbor or be classed as anything beyond an inland town. I tell him that by a persistent, continuous, and intelligent treatment of the Mississippi River the time will come when Cairo, and even Saint Louis, will be harbors where ocean steamships will moor. In proof of this I read Senator GIBSON'S statement of what has been accomplished in this particular on the Rhine.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I did not interrupt the gentleman, and I hope will not interrupt me.

Mr. HEPBURN. You asked me a question.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I did not ask the gentleman a question; I called his attention to this statement:

They have made Cologne almost a seaport, just as Cairo and Saint Louis will be made seaports in the course of time. The French Government has expended upon the river Rhone, between Lyons and Marseilles, a distance of not more than 150 miles, three times as much as we have voted for the improvement of the Father of Waters, and the plan adopted by the French engineers for the improvement of the Rhone is the plan of contraction.

He goes on to state, from his observations in Europe, that the mouth of the Danube, another of its great rivers, has been successfully treated on the plan of the contraction of its waters. Also the Clyde, a river in Britain, has been converted into a noble river, the seat of the best ship-yards of the world. And the Victorian embankments on the Thames have produced the best results. The plan or system proposed by the Mississippi River Commission is therefore not a new plan.

We not only find that commissions have been appointed to improve the great rivers of Europe, but we also find, by examination of the systems of improvement adopted for those rivers, that the cardinal principles upon which they are improved are the same as those adopted by the Mississippi River Commission for the improvement of the great Father of Waters.

When Congress enacted the law creating the Mississippi River Commission what was the condition of the Mississippi River? Gentlemen from a distance, who live in States remote from the Mississippi, might be inclined to doubt that the great Mississippi, at any stage of water, needed actual improvement in order to better its navigable condition. If any gentleman entertains an idea of that kind he is greatly in error, for in 1879, when this law was enacted, there was on the upper Mississippi, above Cairo, sand-bars having a least depth in seasons of low water of 3½ or 4½ feet.

And right here let me say that many of the steamboats and barges—great barge lines constantly navigating the Mississippi River—that many of the steamboats and barges engaged in commerce between Cincinnati, Saint Louis, Louisville, Cairo, and other cities and New Orleans, when loaded draw from 10 to 12 feet, and some of the larger steamboats on the Lower Mississippi River draw when unloaded as much as 6 and 7 feet.

When this Mississippi River Commission was constituted there were above the city of Cairo the following bars having a least depth every year of from 3½ to 4½ feet—actually preventing the navigation of the river, as I can show by citation from reports, destroying the navigation of the river on an average of nearly three months every year, to wit: Alton, Arsenal Island, Horse-tail, Twin Hollows, Pulltight, Chesley Island, Jim Smith, and the bar at Cairo. These bars, under the commission's treatment of the river—those which have been so far treated—have yielded to that treatment, and there are on those bars thus treated by the commission a least depth at low water of 8 to 10½ feet.

Now, Mr. Chairman, below Cairo, what was the situation when the river commission was appointed? Let me say here that the length of the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf is 1,170 miles—600 by direct line and 1,170 miles by the meanderings of the river. There were in the lower river from Cairo to the Gulf great reaches of the river, as they are called, where the least depth at every period of low water was from 4½ to 5½ feet. Such of those reaches as have been treated by the river commission have likewise yielded to the treatment and to-day, even last summer, and indeed for the last three years, there is and has been a least depth of from 12 to 15 feet. But while these results have been achieved at those reaches improved, the other reaches of the river where the river commission have not had a chance to apply their treatment the same depth of 5 and 6 feet of water exists at the low-water season.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. How were the bars above Cairo treated? By what system? By dredging, or the system of contraction?

Mr. BLANCHARD. In the main, by the same system of contraction work.

Now, which are those reaches in the lower river which needed this treatment? Below Cairo there are sand-bars which stretch out some of them 40 miles long, sand-bars in the great Father of Waters 40 miles long with a least depth of 5½ feet at the low-water season. The commission speak of six of those reaches.

They are called, respectively, the New Madrid reach, 40 miles long; the Plum Point reach, 38 miles long; the Bently reach, the Helena reach, the Choctaw reach, and the Lake Providence reach, the last named being 35 miles long. And then at the mouth of the Red River there exists another great problem which the river commission is called upon to handle—the maintenance of navigable connection between the Red River system of water-ways and the Mississippi River, and preventing the latter river from seeking a new route to the sea through the Atchafalaya River.

The first appropriation made under the law creating the Mississippi River Commission was in 1881, when a million of dollars was appropriated. Embarking, as the commission were about to do, upon a great system of improvement, it was necessary that they should have a vast and costly plant. Accordingly they went ahead and invested this million of dollars, or a large portion of it, in plant and in preparation for the great work which Congress had committed to them.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] sneers at the idea that the Mississippi River Commission had or have need of as many as nine hundred boats, barges, skiffs, all told, and he challenged contradiction of the statement that not 10 per cent. of the money which had been appropriated by Congress to the improvement of the Mississippi River had gone actually into the improvement of the channel of the river. I accept that challenge.

Of the $8,000,000 which have been appropriated, all told, up to the beginning of this Congress for this great work, the Mississippi River Commission in their last report show that more than a million of it is invested in the plant which is actually necessary to prosecute the work. That, then, accounts for one million of the eight. And it is true, sir, as I will presently show that every dollar of these appropriations have been spent in actually improving the river, except that which is invested in the plant. I call the gentleman's attention, and the attention of the House, to the statement which I am about to read. The gentleman, I presume, does not think that the salaries and wages paid to the employés and laborers in the work of improvement should be imputed to channel improvement. Such a position is absurd. It is one of the legitimate expenses of this improvement that the salaries and wages of those who are engaged in the work should be paid. Now here is the statement:

There was appropriated for the Mississippi River by the act of March 3, 1881, $1,000,000; by the act of August 2, 1882, $4,123,000; by the act of January 19, 1884, $1,000,000; by the act of July 5, 1884, $2,065,000, making a total of $8,188,000. To which is to be added the appropriations of $2,000,000 in the river and harbor bill of the last session.

The expenditure of this money up to June 30, 1885, is as follows:

Des Moines Rapids to Illinois River	$120,949 22
Illinois River to Ohio River	389,339 56
Protection to easterly bank of Mississippi River near Cairo	27,839 99
New Madrid reach	210,364 74
Plum Point reach	2,379,019 12
Memphis reach	477,073 04
Memphis Harbor	198,580 97
Lake Providence reach	2,240,285 73
Vicksburg Harbor, dredging	61,812 12
Vicksburg Harbor, Delta Point	115,573 71
Survey of Helena reach	8,000 00
Survey of Saint Francis front, first district	4,873 11
Survey of Saint Francis front, second district	4,000 00
Survey of unleveed fronts, third district	1,000 00
Survey of unleveed fronts, fourth district	1,000 00
Survey of Cubitt's gap	137 14
Survey of Choctaw bend	2,679 86
Observations at Carrollton	3,000 00
Closing Bonnet Carré crevasse	15,000 00
Levees.
Second district:
Yazoo front	80,950 00
Long Lake	15,000 00
Third district:
Opossum Fork	25,000 00
Yazoo front	364,875 45
Tensas front	411,107 74
Fourth district:
Atchafalaya front	133,503 93
Tensas front	548,258 24

Natchez and Vidalia Harbors	6,626 09
New Orleans Harbor	149,334 43
Total	8,093,570 51

There had been expended then to July 1, 1885, over $8,000,000; leaving on hand a balance at that time of $389,000.

It will be thus seen that the commission give each point, each locality of the river where this money was expended—expended, directly and indirectly, in the channel improvement of the river.

What have been the results of that expenditure? I tell this House, and I tell it upon the faith of the reports made by this Mississippi River Commission, it has had the result of achieving the removal of the bars wherever the river commission has had a chance to apply its system of improvement.

In further reference to the charge of the gentleman from Iowa that those of us from the lower river come here under false pretenses, and that our real object is to obtain appropriations for levee building, and that with the view of protecting the country from overflow, I will state to this House it would be impossible for us, even supposing that was our intention, to accomplish this, without a conspiracy or at least a connivance on our part and on the part of the members of the Mississippi River Commission to that end. In other words, the Mississippi River Commission would have to enter into the scheme before we could carry it out.

Now, who are the members of this Mississippi River Commission? Let us see if they are not gentlemen well known for their high character and probity as well as for their scientific attainments. Three of them are officers in the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, one in the service of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the other three civilians. The president of the Mississippi River Commission, who is he? Let us see if he is a gentleman who would enter into this scheme which looms up before the eyes of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. The president of that commission is General Quincy A. Gilmore, colonel of engineers and brevet major-general of the United States Army, a Northern gentleman, who lives, I believe, in the city of New York, and who has no interest whatever in the valley of the Mississippi. Is it reasonable to believe that he would be a party to this scheme, this false pretense, this fraud, which the gentleman from Iowa has the temerity to charge?

Another member of the commission is Lieut. Col. C. B. Comstock. Will anybody charge him with being a party to this alleged conspiracy. Another member is Maj. Charles R. Suter, major of engineers in the United States Army, a gentleman well known to many members on this floor, as not only a distinguished engineer but a gentleman of the highest character. Another member is Professor Henry Mitchell, of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, whose home I believe is in New England, a gentleman who has no interest whatever in the valley of the Mississippi, and who occupies a high and permanent position in the service of his country. Is he a man who would enter into this unholy scheme of which the gentleman from Iowa speaks? Shame upon that gentleman for insinuating such a charge! Another member of the commission is Maj. B. M. Harrod, a civil engineer who lives in the city of New Orleans, a gentleman personally known to me to be above reproach. Another member, whose appointment was made in compliance with the provision of the law creating the Mississippi River Commission that one member of the body should be a civilian, not an engineer, is Col. Robert S. Taylor, of the State of Indiana, a gentleman well-known to members on this side and on the other side of the House to be not only a lawyer of great ability and distinction in his State, but a gentleman who stands so high in the estimation of those who know him that it is absurd for the gentleman from Iowa to include him in this alleged scheme.

And who is the other member of that commission? Major W. S. Ferguson, of the State of Mississippi, a gentleman well known for his attainments in civil-engineering as well as for his high personal character and standing. So it appears that of the members of that commission only two live in the valley of the Mississippi, three are distinguished officers in the Engineer Corps of the Army of the United States, another is in another branch of the Government service, and the other three are civilians, residents of different States, one of them a State remote from the Mississippi River.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is upon the report of a commission so composed that the Congress of the United States has been making these appropriations for the improvement of the Lower Mississippi. The appropriations have been made to carry out the plans adopted by that commission for the improvement of the river as a whole. That plan, Representatives, was not hastily formed. It was matured after careful and elaborate study of the river. It consisted in what is called the contraction system, united with the plan of revetment of the banks, so as to hold them and thus to perserve the results achieved by the contraction of the channel in the wide places, and, as incidental and a necessary adjunct to the channel improvement of the river, the construction of levees upon the banks in order to conserve the forces of the river at its flood stages.

This system of improving the river is based upon the three great forces constantly operating upon the Mississippi River.

Those forces are, first, the force of gravity—the fall of the water from the higher to the lower level. That constitutes velocity. Second, the force that checks the current of the water; that is friction. It diminishes velocity. Third, the relation that exists between the velocity of the current and its capacity for transporting the sediment in the river and the amount actually carried along. It is by acquiring a knowledge of these three great forces and applying that knowledge practically that this system of river improvement has been evolved.

I have in my hand Senate Miscellaneous Document 126, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, being a letter upon this system of treating the river, written by the president of the Mississippi River Commission to the senior Senator from Louisiana, in which is embodied a lucid explanation somewhat in detail of this system of improvement, and of the results which have been achieved by it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to what is being done on the river as respects levee construction. I want to say right here that there is not a dollar expended on that river in the way of levee building that is not asked for by the Mississippi River Commission as part of their plan for the improvement of the river as a whole. It is not expended, as has been asserted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], to protect the country from overflow. That is not the object of the expenditure. Its object is to conserve and utilize the great forces of the river, which are greatest at flood seasons; to define the high-water limits of the river; to confine the river at flood seasons within artificial banks, so that its forces may be harnessed and made instruments for scouring and deepening the channel, and thus to enable the river the better to perform its God-given duty of discharging into the Gulf of Mexico the great mass of water and sand and détritus which constitutes the wash and waste of almost half an entire continent.

You must remember that the Mississippi River is not merely a river of water; it is a river of sand as well. Here is the great sewer of the North American portion of the American continent, which receives into its channel not only all the waters which fall between the summit of the Alleghanies on the one hand and the summit of the Rocky Mountains on the other, but receives likewise all the great mass of waste in the way of sediment, in the way of sand, in the way of débris, which is washed down into this great central artery by the 16,000 miles of navigable water-ways and the other 16,000 miles of unnavigable water ways that are tributary to it. It is a fact that forty-three navigable streams flow into the parent channel of the Mississippi River, and they bring down with them from the cultivated lands of the East and of the West this sediment and sand and détritus, and it all finds its way, along with the water, into the channel of the Mississippi River, and it blocks up that channel, and hence the great bars, 40 miles long, between Saint Louis and the mouth of the river.

It is the function of the river not only to afford a safe passage for the water of this vast watershed to the Gulf, but also to carry along with it this immense waste of the northern part of the American continent. If you do not aid the river to carry this sand to the sea it will be deposited in the bed of the river, forming these great sand-bars impeding navigation, which, in turn, cause the great overflows which annually destroy millions upon millions of dollars of the aggregate wealth of our country.

If you build levees in order to restrain the river within high-water limits you conserve and utilize the forces of the river; you increase the velocity of its current, and thereby the river is enabled not only to carry out to the sea safely and expeditiously its floods of water and waste, of sand and sediment, but to scour out and deepen the shallow places which grew up in the river at a time when it was not under the control of man.

This is why the Mississippi River Commission recommends the construction of levees. And does any gentleman on this floor object to the construction of levees simply because there results, as an incident to their construction, protection from overflow to the riparian owners upon the banks? Certainly there is not here a gentleman so ungenerous and illiberal as to object to the levees because the planters and farmers behind them find protection from the ravages of the river. I say it is an argument in favor of the levees that they afford this incidental protection, besides being a part of the means for the channel improvement of the great river itself.

The gentleman from Iowa has stated that no man can tell how much it is proposed to expend in the way of levee construction. Let me say right here that what the Federal Government expends or proposes to expend or has expended in the way of levee construction is a mere bagatelle compared to what is expended, has been expended, and is being constantly expended by the States, and by the owners of lands in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi. The Mississippi River Commission have confined themselves principally to breaks in the levees, and raising the levees where they were not high enough. The great work of levee construction has been done by the States and by the people living along the banks of the Mississippi River. From the mouth of the Red River to the Gulf, a distance of over 300 miles, there have been from the time when that region of country came to be first settled, embankments thrown up on both sides of the Mississippi; so that there has been on that portion of the river for years a great system of levees, the result of which is that the Mississippi from the Red River to the Gulf is an ideal river.

It is not there that this money is being expended by the Mississippi River Commission. It is true they have expended a small sum there to assist in closing one or two crevasses; but that is not where the great levee building is being done with the money appropriated by Congress. It is above that. But the success of the levees, in keeping the river within its bounds, in causing it to scour and deepen, has been such that from the mouth of the Red River to the head of the jetties, a distance of more than 300 miles, there is, even at low water, a depth of from 50 to more that 100 feet.

This demonstrates what the river will do when it is confined within its channels, at high water, by means of artificial embankments. It will scour and deepen. And in those portions of the river there is a safe discharge, not only of the flood waters, but of the vast wastage, the sediment and sand coming down from nearly one-half of the American continent, and finding its way through this channel into the Gulf of Mexico.

Now, let us see what has been done and is proposed to be done by the Mississippi River Commission in the way of the construction of levees.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has now occupied forty-five minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman desire further time?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would like about fifteen minutes more to finish this branch of my remarks.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield the gentleman fifteen minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Of this entire $8,000,000, and more, which had been appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River up to the beginning of the present Congress, there has been expended for levee construction $1,600,000. I have here a table showing the localities where this construction has been made. It is as follows:

Amount expended for levee construction from March 3, 1881, to June 30, 1886.

Tensas front	$962,996 28
Atchafalaya front	136,288 65
Bonnet Carré crevasse	15,000 00
Opossum Fork levee	25,000 00
Long Lake levee	15,000 00
Yazoo front	445,828 95
Total	1,600,113 88

From data which I have gathered from the reports of the Mississippi River Commission, I am enabled to say to the House that the entire expenditure in the way of levee construction, which it is proposed by the Mississippi River Commission to make, aggregates, including what has already been expended, only $5,840,000. The statement which I will publish with my remarks shows the localities where this construction is proposed, with the number of cubic yards which, according to the estimate of the commission, will be required to complete this levee system.

ESTIMATES FOR LEVEES.

From Cairo to foot of Island No. 40—220 miles—estimate for complete line, 8,910,000 cubic yards at cost of $2,300,000.

From Island No. 40 to Saint Francis River—78 miles—one-third of this only unleveed; it is estimated that to complete the line and raise all levees to 1½ feet above high water will require 1,634,000 cubic yards at cost of $430,000.

White River front, from Saint Francis River to White River, 95 miles. Less than 20 miles of this front is unleeved, but much of the leveeing along that line is of too low grade. Estimate for leveeing entire front to 2 feet above high water line is $150,000.

From Amos Ridge to Arkansas City, for new levees, closing breaks and raising grade to 1 foot above high water line, there are required 133,000 cubic yards, cost of which will be less than $30,000.

From Arkansas City to Louisiana State line there is required for enlargement of existing levees 526,000 cubic yards, and for new levees 976,000 cubic yards—in all, 1,502,000 cubic yards, which will cost about $375,000.

From Louisiana State line to Warrenton, levees are in fair condition; but caving banks at certain points will necessitate ultimately new levees, for which the estimate is 1,027,000 cubic yards, which will cost about $260,000.

From Warrenton to Red River the levees are above high-water line, except at one or two points. Estimated that 500,000 cubic yards will place whole line above high-water line; this will cost about $125,000.

The Kempe levee may have to be reconstructed. Not estimated for. It is situated on a caving bank.

Some work will have to be done on the Lake Concordia levee, which is of too low grade. No estimate.

Yazoo front—levees in fair condition, but some work yet to be done. No estimate.

Atchafalaya front—Morganza Crevasse is only point needing attention. It requires 270,000 cubic yards to close the break which is now being done. Will cost about $70,000.

Total estimates of commission for levees yet to be constructed.

Cairo to Island No. 40, 220 miles	$2,300,000
Island No. 40 to Saint Francis River, 78 miles	430,000
Saint Francis River to White River, 95 miles	150,000
Amos Ridge to Arsansas City	30,000
Arkankas City to Louisiana State line	375,000
Louisiana State line to Warrenton	260,000
Warrenton to Red River	$125,000
Morganza Crevasse (now being closed)	70,000
Total	3,740,000
Add for reconstruction of Kempe levee, for work on Lake Concordia levee, and for additional work on levees on Yazoo front (not estimated for by commission), say	500,000
	4,240,000

This sum of $4,240,000 embraces, it will be seen, $2,300,000 which the commission propose to expend in rebuilding the levees which were washed away during the war from Cairo to the foot of Island No. 40, a distance of 220 miles. That is away up in the northern part of the lower stretch of the river, remote from the limits of the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Arkansas, the States to which the gentleman from Iowa always refers when he charges members on this floor with coming here under false pretenses.

This is part of a system of improvement for a great river which is the parent channel of a system of water-ways embracing more than 16,000 miles of navigable streams and more than 32,000 miles of drainage. For this branch of the system of improvement adopted by the commission there is to be expended, all told, less than $6,000,000.

The other part of the system adopted is the contraction of the wide places and the revetment of the banks. This is the more costly part of the system. The gentleman from Iowa has stated, and stated recklessly (which was the character of many of his statements), that it is impossible to tell what this revetment of the banks is going to cost; and the gentleman even had the temerity to venture an opinion on this floor, as I understood him, that the cost will reach $75,000,000. In refutation of that statement I need only refer members to what has been done at two of the great reaches of the river. What has it cost to revet the banks and to contract the river at Plum Point reach, and at Lake Providence reach, where this improvement has been going on? It is true that these reaches are not yet completed, but they are nearly so. They are sufficiently completed to have gained a depth at each of them of from 5 feet at low water to 12 and 15 feet at high water. What has it cost to contract those reaches of the river and to revet their banks? There has been expended at Plum Point reach a little more than $2,300,000, and at Lake Providence reach about $2,250,000. Say that it will take three-quarters of a million more at each to finish the work (which I think would be an outside figure), then we would have two reaches of the river each about 40 miles long, upon each of which we will have spent $3,000,000 in the work of contracting the 10,000 feet (which is the width of the river there, or nearly so) to the requisite width of 3,500 feet, and also reveting the banks.

Now, there are but six of those reaches, and if they are all to cost as much as $3,000,000 each that will aggregate only $18,000,000, not only for revetment but for contraction works. It was never proposed, as the gentleman from Iowa seems to think, that this river should be reveted from Cairo to its mouth. The river needs improvement only at specific localities along it, mainly at these six reaches I have referred to. And even if it cost double the $18,000,000, what is that when we come to consider the great importance of deepening and improving a great parent water-way like the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf with the possibility and even probability of great ocean steamships penetrating to the great cities on its banks in the far interior?

I say, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the reports of the Mississippi River Commission, if carefully and impartially studied, as they seem not to have been done by the gentleman from Iowa, will be found to contain an abundance of material going to show that the great bugaboo which he conjures up does not exist; that it will not take $75,000,000, it will not take $50,000,000, it will not take $30,000,000 to improve the river, and that his assertion to the contrary is merely an assertion.

It does not appear, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman has studied these reports with a view of reaching a fair conclusion from them. That may seem a rough statement to make, but I submit it is as respectful for me to say that as it is for him to charge gentlemen on this floor with coming here under false pretenses. The gentleman from Iowa could not be convinced "even if one rose from the dead" and declared this system of improving the river to be a proper one.

Mr. Chairman, there is much more on this question I desired to say, but I will not take up any more of the limited time allowed for general debate. Thanking the House for its attention, I resign the floor.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to be recognized for thirty minutes in opposition to the bill in addition to the time given to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. WILLIS. Understanding it is the wish of the gentleman to continue his remarks at some future occasion, I will move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. RICHARDSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RHODE ISLAND CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—PAGE AGAINST PIRCE.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privilege report.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move the House do now adjourn.

The House refused to adjourn.

Mr. TURNER. I am directed by the Committee on Elections to submit a report in the contested-election case from the second district of Rhode Island, of Page vs. Pirce; which I move be printed and laid over for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to make the parliamentary inquiry whether the minority of the Committee on Elections will have an opportunity to present their views, if they desire to do so, in this contested-election case?

The SPEAKER. No such request was made.

Mr. TURNER. I called the attention of gentlemen of the other side to the fact that this would be presented, and indeed to the report itself, but in order that there may be no difficulty on that point, I am willing opportunity should be given to the minority to present their views, but not to delay action.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the minority of the committee will have leave to present their views.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined, and found truly enrolled, a bill (H. R. 4688) granting a pension to Josephine Da Costa Thomas; when the Speaker signed the same.

And then, on motion of Mr. WILLIS (at 4 o'clock and 39 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Petition of C. J. Hood & Co., of Lowell, Mass., for repeal of internal taxes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of J. D. Quindell and others, for an appropriation to remove the bar at the mouth of Kendrick's Creek, North Carolina—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. STRAIT: Petition of A. Post and 10 others, citizens of Faribault, Rice County, Minnesota, praying for the passage of the Hatch experimental-station bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SWOPE: Memorial of Western Pennsylvania Agricultural Association, praying for the passage of the Miller bill—to the same committee.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: Petition of citizens of Franklin County, Illinois, urging the passage of a bill granting a pension to A. J. Robinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WISE: Petition of citizens of Richmond, Va., against Federal control of the subject of pilotage—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

Also, petition of citizens of Richmond, Va., for the repeal of internal-revenue taxation—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The following petitions, praying for the enactment of a bill providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy, were severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Of 38 citizens of the eighth district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. BACON: Of 106 citizens of the fifteenth district of New York.

By Mr. BOUTELLE: Petition of citizens of Maine for enactment of a bill providing for temporary aid for common schools.

By Mr. BURROWS: Of 533 citizens of the fourth district of Michigan.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: Of 92 citizens of the seventh district of Georgia.

By Mr. CONGER: Of 116 citizens of the seventh district of Iowa.

By Mr. CULBERSON: Of 73 citizens of the fourth district of Texas.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: Of 433 citizens of the twenty-ninth district of New York.

By Mr. EVANS: Of 274 citizens of Bucks County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. FARQUHAR: Resolution of Maiden City Lodge, No. 63, Loyal Orange Institution of the United States, of Yonkers, N. Y., in favor of the bill (S. 194).

By Mr. W. J. GREEN: Of 34 citizens of Pikeville, N. C.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: Paper from the Women's Christian Temperance Union, of Waverly, Iowa, urging the passage of the Blair bill.

By Mr. HITT: Of 123 citizens of the Sixth district of Illinois.

By Mr. LORE: Petition of E. H. Hynson and 24 others, citizens of Cowder, Kent County, Delaware, for the passage of the Blair educational bill.

By Mr. NEAL: Of 80 citizens of the third district of Tennessee.

By Mr. REED: Of 377 citizens of the first district of Maine.

By Mr. SAWYER: Of 80 citizens of the thirty-first district of New York.

By Mr. SKINNER: Of 240 citizens of the first district of North Carolina.

By Mr. STRAIT: Of 325 citizens of the fifth district of Minnesota.

By Mr. J. T. WHITE: Of 239 citizens of the third district of Connecticut.

By Mr. MILO WHITE: Petition of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, of Caledonia and of Eyota, Minn., favoring the educational bill.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 17, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting an estimate of an appropriation of $1,000 to pay Shirley C. Ward, special counsel of the mission Indians in California; which, with the accompanying papers, was, on motion of Mr. DAWES, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of January 11, 1887, estimates of chiefs of bureaus of that Department for the contingent expenses of the bureaus for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, which, with the accompanying papers, was, on motion of Mr. MORGAN, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of January 11, 1887, estimates for the contingent fund of each bureau in that Department; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received on Friday last from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of "An act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875; and

A bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States.

CONSULAR REPORTS ON TRADE GUILDS OF EUROPE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed, with pamphlet covers, 7,000 copies of the volumes of reports from the consuls of the United States on the trade guilds of Europe and the laws and regulations by which they are governed, published by the Department of State in the year 1885; 5,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of Arizona Territory praying for an increase of clerical force for the Assembly; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented the petition of Kauffman, Lattimer & Co., of Columbus, Ohio, praying for the repeal of internal-revenue taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by the Sangamon County Fine Stock Breeders' Association, at Springfield, Ill., urging the necessity of legislation for the suppression of contagious diseases among cattle; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of William F. Parker and 219 other citizens of Streator, Ill., praying for a change in the present system of collecting the revenues of the Government by means of import duties and the internal revenue system, and that the burden of taxation be placed upon property; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Chamberlin, Johnson & Co. and 12 other firms, importers at Atlanta, Ga.; the petition of the Shepard & Morse Lumber Company and 9 other firms, importers at Burlington, Vt.; the petition of A. C. Hutchinson, general manager of the Southern Pacific Company, and 8 other firms, importers at New Orleans, La.; the petition of T. A. Chapman & Co. and 15 other firms, importers at Milwaukee, Wis.; the petition of R. Ballerstein & Co. and 26 other firms, importers at Hartford, Conn.; the petition of Louis Cohen & Co. and 3 other firms, importers at Charleston, S. C.; the petition of Hodges Brothers and 42 other firms, importers at Baltimore, Md.; and the petition of Sibley, Lindsay & Carr and 28 other firms, importers at Rochester, N. Y., praying for the passage of the bill to amend the immediate-transportation act; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TELLER presented the petition of Mrs. Anne Lucas, praying to be reimbursed for a draft payable to her improperly paid by the Treasury to another person; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Wollf & Brown, praying payment for horses pressed into the service of the United States by Col. Thomas Moonlight in 1885 at Denver, Colo.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. M. A. Kretchmar, praying compensation for board furnished to certain Cherokee Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indians Affairs.

He also presented the petition of John B. Wolff, attorney for the heirs of Capt. A. W. Hicks, praying that allowance be made to Captain Hicks as messenger to the Military Committee of the House of Representatives, Forty-fifth Congress, extra session; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of John B. Wolff, praying that a pension be granted to the heirs of Capt A. W. Hicks; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of James Cavanagh, late of Company B, First Regiment of Vermont Cavalry, praying to be granted arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of W. M. Holton and 37 other residents of Dearborn, Mich., praying for legislation at the present session of Congress to increase the rate of pension of those who have lost both arms in the military or naval service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of the Michigan Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, remonstrating against needless Sunday work in Government service and the running of railroad trains on the Sabbath; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Michigan Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, praying for the enactment of a law for the protection of the Chinese and for the passage of the Chinese indemnity bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FRYE. I present resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Maine. I ask that they be read and then referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

[State of Maine. Resolves in opposition to the Dunn free-ship bill.]

Whereas the bill now pending before Congress providing for the admission of foreign-built ships to an American register is inimical to one of the leading industries of our State, and threatens to destroy a constant and lucrative source of employment for our labor: Therefore,

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Maine in Legislature assembled, That the enactment of the Dunn free-ship bill, so-called, would be a cruel and fatal blow to the prosperity of our American merchant marine.

Resolved, That as ship-building is a national interest, affecting the material prosperity of our whole country, as we have the capital, materials, brains, and skill to build our own vessels, that is a suicidal policy that would now drive skilled labor into other and untried avenues of employment, discouraging the investment of American capital in American enterprises, and make this great nation a weak dependant upon foreign labor and capital, liable at any moment to assume a hostile attitude.

Resolved, That this effort to legislate a great American interest out of existence, this abandonment of the wise policy of our fathers, is as unpatriotic as it is unnecessary.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, directed to forward an authenticated copy of the foregoing resolutions to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives in Congress assembled, with a request that the same be laid before their respective bodies.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 13, 1887.

Read and passed finally.

C. B. LITTLEFIELD, Speaker.

IN SENATE, January 14, 1887.

Read and passed finally.

SEBASTIAN S. MARBLE, President.

JANUARY 15, 1887.

Approved.

JOSEPH R. BODWELL, Governor.

A true copy. Attest:

ORAMANDAL SMITH,
Secretary of State.

Mr. COKE. I present a petition signed by many citizens, merchants, and importers of the city of Galveston, stating that from the mouth of the Mississippi on the east to the mouth of the Rio Grande on the west, including the coast line of Texas and Louisiana, within which is comprised nearly 20 per cent. of the whole coast of the United States, there is not a single ship, vessel, or cutter in commission or flying the flag of the United States; that the revenue-cutter McLane, which has hitherto been in service in those waters, was in August last inspected and condemned as unseaworthy, and has been taken North to be sold; and that the steamer Dix, now lying at New Orleans, was ordered to be repaired and take the place of the McLane, but now, after inspection, it transpires that she is not worth repairing.

In view of the contiguity to Mexico and the necessity for the suppression of smuggling and for the control of these waters, and in order to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases, the petitioners ask an appropriation for the purpose of constructing a steamer for the revenue department properly adapted in size, strength, and draught to thoroughly patrol the Gulf and its bays and estuaries.

I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented the petition of Noyes Brothers & Cutter, wholesale merchants of Saint Paul, Minn., praying that internal taxes may be reduced as rapidly as the state of the Treasury will permit; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of the Saint Louis (Mo.) Lead and Oil Company, praying for a repeal of all legislation creating internal-revenue taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Mary A. Baker, of Sivan, Mo., praying for a pension, she being the widow of a deceased soldier; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PAYNE presented the memorial of J. C. Lockwood and other citizens of Milan, Ohio, remonstrating against the erection of a second bridge over the Sainte Marie River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GIBSON. I present the petition of Finlay & Brunswig, wholesale druggists, signed by G. R. Finlay, who is a member of the National Wholesale Druggists' Association, praying for a reduction of internal taxes. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition for the repeal of the internal-revenue taxes, signed by F. M. Sterrett, secretary of the Dr. Harter Medical College, of Saint Louis, Mo.; also, a petition of citizens of Wayne County, Missouri, praying for the reduction of internal-revenue taxes. They seem to be printed petitions and in stereotyped form the same. I move their reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of Capt. Tim Meaher, of Mobile, Ala., praying permission of Congress to build a coal and iron wharf near Mobile, Ala., on the Alabama River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of cattle growers and dealers of Doniphan County, Kansas, and a petition of the Short-Horn Breeders' Association of Johnson County, Kansas, praying for the passage of what is known as the Miller bill for the suppression of pleuro-pneumonia; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. VANCE presented the petition of James Taylor, of North Carolina, praying to be permitted to pay for and receive title to certain public lands in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SPOONER presented a petition of the executive committee of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars, State of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 1579) granting to the people of the District of Columbia the right to determine by ballot whether intoxicating liquors may hereafter be legally manufactured and sold therein; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Messrs. McPike & Fox, wholesale druggists at Atchison, Kans, praying for a repeal of excise taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DOLPH. I present the memorial of the Tacoma Chamber of Commerce, Washington Territory, urging the speedy passage of the bill (S. 2169) providing for the payment of Indian depredation claims.

It will be remembered that that bill was introduced by myself and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I have not heard from that committee in relation to it. It is an important question relating to the payment of claims for Indian depredations accumulating from year to year, and I hope the committee will find it convenient to examine and report upon the bill speedily.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of W. H. Schiefflin & Co. and others, of the city of New York, praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of C. J. Hood & Co., of Lowell, Mass., praying for the repeal of internal-revenue taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAIR. I present the petition of the students' conference of Fisk University, Roger Williams University, and Central Tennessee College, three colored institutions of Nashville, praying for the passage of the Blair bill to aid public schools. In this petition these students set forth that they have held a conference of the colored youth attending school at these institutions at the present time, and they respectfully represent "that we believe that the passage of the Blair bill to aid public schools would be of greatest good to our race, and consequently to the whole body of our citizens; and we therefore respectfully and earnestly pray and petition Congress to pass said bill at the earliest possible date.

"In thus representing and petitioning we attempt to speak for the great mass of our race who are not alive to their interests in this matter, and who, moreover, in many places are unable to formulate their wishes.

"We beg leave to submit briefly the following as a few reasons for our thus petitioning:

"The comparative moral and intellectual backwardness of our race is, from well known causes, so great that the ordinary process of development would be too slow in preparing it for responsible citizenship. Extraordinary steps, therefore, are necessary for, at least, a few years in order to place us in a condition to stand alone.

"These facts have been long recognized by a large class of patriotic and philanthropic citizens who have in a private way aided us by the establishment of schools, churches, and colleges. But these efforts, while a great blessing as far as they go, are inadequate to the need; and, at the present rate, it will be many years before fairly informed educators can be prepared for every community.

"Even were there no such special emergency as we represent, under our existing school systems, funds are inadequate to provide schoolhouses, furniture, and teachers' salaries. This fact, coupled with our more than ordinary need, renders the demand for some special aid the more imperative.

"We believe the general dissemination of intelligence among the mass of our white fellow citizens (as designed in the Blair bill) would greatly better our treatment at their hands, go far towards solving the existing race problem, and in other ways indirectly be of benefit to us."

The petition is respectfully submitted by "The Students' Conference," composed of the students of Fisk University, Roger Williams University, and Central Tennessee College. J. B. Batte, president of the conference; R. C. Edmondson, secretary of the same.

I have set this matter forth in the language of the petitioners, and at a little further length than is usual, because these students represent those of the colored race who are now receiving the benefits of higher education; they are the leaders of the coming generation of the colored people; they come from all parts of the country, and especially from all parts of the South; and the reasons which they thus set forth, it seems to me, are entitled to consideration.

Although the bill has passed the Senate, I thus draw public attention to the matter, in the hope that, through the RECORD, it may reach a body somewhere else. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SABIN presented resolutions adopted by the chamber of commerce of Saint Paul, Minn., favoring the passage of a national bankrupt law and an amendment of the customs laws; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BUTLER presented a petition of citizens of South Carolina, praying that an appropriation be made for the deepening of Winyale Bay bar; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for a system of filtration of the water supply of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5326) for the relief of E. B. Dawson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred an amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. HOAR to the post-office appropriation bill, submitted a report thereon, and moved its reference, with the amendment, to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. While my friend from Wisconsin, acting for the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, is making his reports, I wish to call his attention and that of the committee to a bill which I had the honor to introduce at a very early day in this Congress, providing for a Government postal telegraph, and to beg that that committee will report it either favorably or unfavorably, so that I may try, if I can, to get the judgment of the Senate upon it.

Mr. SAWYER. The committee have partially considered the bill referred to by the Senator from Vermont, and it is in the hands of a subcommittee composed of the chairman [Mr. CONGER], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY].

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3020) providing for the resurvey of certain public lands in the State of Oregon, reported it with amendments.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3097) for the relief of Saint Dominic's church, in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4806) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at the foot of Pennsylvania avenue east, reported it without amendment.

CENTENNIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CELEBRATION.

Mr. HOAR. I report from the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America, a resolution for which I ask present consideration, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts, from the select committee referred to by him, submits a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That it is expedient that the centennial anniversary of the inauguration of the Constitution be celebrated in April, 1889, by an address to be delivered before the President of the United States and the two Houses of Congress by the Chief Justice of the United States, to which the representatives of foreign governments shall be invited, and that the occasion be further celebrated by suitable civic or military observances, the detail of which shall be settled hereafter.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 3143) granting a pension to Mary A. Baker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (S. 3144) for the relief of James Taylor; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MCMILLAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3145) for the relief of Anna W. Osborne; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 3146) granting a pension to John W. Reynolds; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAIR introduced a bill (S. 3147) to establish range-lights on or near the north training wall, Oakland Harbor, California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 3148) granting a pension to George W. Strattan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 3149) to construct a road to the Poplar Grove National Cemetery, near Petersburg, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3150) granting right of way and other privileges to the Hampton and Old Point Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 3151) for the relief of Levander Jenkins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 3152) to provide for opening the shoals and rapids in the Coosa River, so as to form a continuous channel for steam navigation from Wetumpka, Ala., to Rome, Ga.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, before the bill is referred I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Commerce to it for a moment.

They will find in the reports of the engineers a very full and accurate estimate of the work that is necessary to be done to accomplish the purpose that the bill is designed to accomplish. Those estimates run up to a sum between $1,500,000 and $1,700,000. The precise figures I am not prepared to state at this moment. The work is of great importance as I esteem it, both national and State, and I shall be very glad if the committee will take it into consideration.

It is somewhat a departure from the ordinary procedure in Congress, I grant; but my object is that the Government, having ascertained what is a proper sum for the entire work, should make an appropriation of that sum of money, to be drawn out of the Treasury upon the warrant of the Secretary of War in annual installments of such amounts as may be needed for the continual progress of the work. My purpose is to try to avoid in this necessary expenditure, which I think the Senate and the Congress will not refuse to make, that wasteful extravagance which has resulted from making such works to depend annually upon the fluctuating ideas of Congress as to how much money shall be appropriated in a particular year.

The history of appropriations for public works has been one of great extravagance because of the fact that different Congresses have differed in their opinions as to the necessity of pushing the work continuously. In this way there has been a great waste of material as well as of time and money.

I desire by this bill to try to obviate this trouble in regard to this very important improvement. I can not entertain a doubt that the Congress of the United States will open communication between the navigable waters of the Upper Coosa River and those of the Alabama River, which is formed by the junction of the Coosa and the Tallapoosa Rivers just below Wetumpka, and thereby bring into commerce the vast resources of that country in iron and coal.

This water-way leads right almost by the mouth of the mines, and on the bank of the Coosa River above Gadsden there are very large deposits of rich hematite iron, which can be brought to the seaboard and carried into domestic and foreign commerce over this water-course at a cheaper rate, perhaps, than by any other line of transportation which can be suggested anywhere in the United States.

Therefore, believing that this work will be done, knowing that it has been detained merely to await the completion of the Muscle Shoals Canal, in which Alabama has an interest, but not a very large interest—believing that Congress will now proceed to commence this work, I very much desire that it shall be so continued as that wasteful extravagance shall not attend the completion of this very important public improvement.

I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 3153) to amend section 4414 of the Revised Statutes providing a salary for inspectors of hulls and boilers in the district of Apalachicola, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL. In pursuance of the request of constitutents, a number of whom are interested in the matter, I introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 3154) authorizing the construction of a high-level bridge over the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, Mo., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3155) for the relief of I. W. Ambler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3156) for the relief of I. W. Ambler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALTHALL introduced a bill (S. 3157) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WALTHALL. I ask that the bill, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Commerce. These papers are a memorial from the board of supervisors of Harrison County, Mississippi, praying for the removal of this quarantine station, and a special report on the subject from the Surgeon-General dated the 8th instant. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Surgeon-General has repeatedly reported that the quarantine station is too near the shore and dangerous to the people on the mainland.

Mr. HARRIS. I am inclined to think that the bill ought to go to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, which has had control heretofore of all quarantine matters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. HARRIS. However, if the Senator from Mississippi desires to have it referred to the Committee on Commerce, I shall not test the sense of the Senate on the question.

Mr. WALTHALL. I am entirely willing to have it go to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, but I thought the other was the appropriate committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3158) to provide for the holding of the district court of the United States at Salina, Kans.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3159) to grant to the Chicago, Fort Scott, and Texas Railroad Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 3160) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge by the Chicago, Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railway Company across the Missouri River at Sioux City, Iowa, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. GIBSON submitted two amendments to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 2167) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Dunlap;

A bill (S. 2388) granting a pension to Alonzo Raymond;

A bill (S. 2420) granting a pension to Sidney Denton;

A bill (S. 2459) granting a pension to Eliza Wilkins;

A bill (S. 2478) granting a pension to John Wines; and

A bill (S. 2730) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth S. de Krafft;

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 10) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TUCKER, Mr. COLLINS, and Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR managers at the conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4688) granting a pension to Josephine Da Costa Thomas.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 542) for the relief of William Ervin; and

A bill (S. 2699) granting a pension to Sarah E. Norton.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the petition of I. W. Ambler and the accompanying papers be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Mrs. Mary A. Foster be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the following be a standing rule of the Senate:

RULE —.

When a report of a committee of conference agreeing with the House conferees shall have been made and be under consideration, the first question thereon shall be, Will the Senate agree to the same? If such report shall not be agreed to, or if a disagreement be reported, the matter shall stand in the same way as if no conference had been had thereon, and be proceeded with accordingly. If a conference shall be asked or agreed to by the Senate, it shall be in order to instruct the Senate conferees as it shall to the Senate seem meet.

FOX AND WISCONSIN RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. SAWYER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General is hereby instructed to investigate the judgments and awards against the United States arising under an act of Congress entitled "An act to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers in the State of Wisconsin," approved March 3, 1875, and to report to the Senate whether the liability of the United States therefor is established, and what amount is due thereon, for which appropriation has not already been made.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to send to the Senate the detailed items on which he based his estimates for the contingent expenses of the Interior Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and that he state the items of such estimates that are required for each bureau in said Department.

DISTRICT LIQUOR LICENSES.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in answering the resolution of the Senate of January 14, 1887, be directed to furnish information as to the number of places where liquors are sold without license, and to give the reasons why such places are not suppressed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions the morning business is closed, and the Calendar is in order.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me, I desire to make a conference report. I suppose it will be in order to make it after the Senator's motion shall be agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER. Then why not let my motion be put?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts submits a conference report which is in the nature of a privileged question. In the mean time the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin is pending.

PENSION BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 5629) granting a pension to Thomas G. Polley;

A bill (H. R. 7504) granting a pension to Larkin Delph;

A bill (H. R. 7983) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Schier;

A bill (H. R. 8384) for the relief of Mahala Brown;

A bill (H. R. 8067) to pension Andrew J. Vanorder;

A bill (H. R. 9009) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan E. Barry;

A bill (H. R. 9025) for the relief of Mrs. Sophia Sprain, widow, and two minor children of Louis F. Sprain;

A bill (H. R. 9157) granting a pension to Grant E. Q. Lathermon;

A bill (H. R. 9170) for the relief of Green Fields;

A bill (H. R. 9862) granting a pension to Mary Jane Magoon;

A bill (H. R. 9863) granting a pension to Mary McCoy; and

A bill (H. R. 10152) granting a pension to Ellen M Sturtevant.

The above twelve pension bills received from the House of Representatives this day were severally read by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate agree to the amendments of the House numbered 1 and 2.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House numbered 3, with an amendment, to wit: On page 3, line 30, insert in the sentence proposed by the House to be inserted in the bill, after the word "been," and before the word "certified," the word "lawfully;" and that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House numbered 4, with an amendment, to wit: In lieu of the words stricken out by the House insert the following: "but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified;" and that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House numbered 5, with an amendment, to wit: In lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out and to be inserted, insert as follows: "the two Houses shall concurrently decide were cast by lawful electors appointed in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State. But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted;" and that the House agree to the same.

GEO. F. HOAR,
GEO F. EDMUNDS,
JAMES L. PUGH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ANDREW J. CALDWELL,
JOHN R. EDEN,
W. C. COOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if this bill has been printed as it will stand if the report be agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. The conference report is printed in the House proceedings. I am not aware that the bill was printed in that way by order of the other House.

Mr. CONGER. Does it appear in yesterday's RECORD in the House proceedings of Saturday?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. It will not take much time to have it printed in bill form as it will stand when the conference report is agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I will let it go over until to-morrow if the Senate prefers.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to see it printed as proposed to be changed.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest, then, that this matter go over until to-morrow, and that, in the mean time, the bill be printed, under the direction of the Secretary, as it will read if the conference report be adopted, showing the differences made by the House amendments and by the conference report if adopted.

Mr. CONGER. That will be satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the report of the conference committee as it stands, showing the changes, will be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the bill be printed as bills reported from committees; that is, showing what the Senate bill was, what was stricken out by the House, and what is inserted by the conference?

Mr. HOAR That is my suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands—in the same manner that the interstate-commerce bill was recently printed as proposed to be changed by the conference.

Mr. HARRIS. That is what I desired to propose.

FORT BERTHOLD RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the 11th instant from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, with accompanying papers, a copy of an agreement duly made under the provisions of the act of May 15, 1886 (24 Statutes, p. 44), with the Indians residing upon the Fort Berthold reservation in Dakota, for the cession of a portion of their reservation in said Territory, and for other purposes.

The agreement, together with the recommendations of the Department, is presented for the action of Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 17, 1887.

PRIVATE PENSION BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar in their order.

Mr. SAWYER. Private pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar in their order, under the eighth rule.

Mr. HARRIS. As a motion, certainly that would be out of order. It will have to be done by unanimous consent if it applies to all the pension bills. A motion would be in order in respect to any one of them.

I rose, however, to suggest whether it would not be better policy to take up the Calendar under the eighth rule and run on through it as rapidly as we may, devoting to it this short time that is allowed, which amounts to about an hour of the morning. If we devote it to the consideration of the cases on the Calendar under the eighth rule we can very soon get through the whole Calendar. I shall not interpose an objection if unanimous consent is asked to take up this class of cases, but I give notice that I will object hereafter to taking out bills upon the Calendar until we have gone through the Calendar and given every one an opportunity to have his bill considered.

Mr. SAWYER. There are not a great many private pension bills, and they will only take a short time. When we strike into the Calendar we do not progress. There are only a few of these bills and I desire that we go on with them.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not interpose an objection.

Mr. GEORGE. When does the unfinished business come up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At 2 o'clock.

The Senator from Wisconsin asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar in their order, under the eighth rule. The Chair hears no objection.

ABEL J. LEWIS.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask in the first place that Order of Business 908, being the bill (H. R. 6381) granting a pension to Abel J. Lewis, be indefinitely postponed. The pension has been granted at the Pension Office.

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

JOSHUA L. MORRIS.

The bill (H. R. 5599) granting a pension to Joshua L. Morris was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Joshua L. Morris, late of Company H, Third Missouri State Militia Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES CARLIN.

The bill (H. R. 6314) to increase the pension of James Carlin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of James Carlin, late a private in Company I, Third Regiment Vermont Volunteers, and now on the pension-roll, to $40 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES M'GLEN.

The bill (H. R. 8474) granting a pension to James McGlen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James McGlen, late a private in Company I, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CYRA L. WESTON.

The bill (H. R. 8310) granting a pension to Cyra L. Weston was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Cyra L. Weston, dependent father of William L. Weston, late a private in Company B, Twenty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JESSE CAMPBELL.

The bill (H. R. 8150) granting a pension to Jesse Campbell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jesse Campbell, late of Company C, Eighteenth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AARON GARIS.

The bill (H. R. 8830) granting a pension to Aaron Garis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Aaron Garis, late of Company C, Twentieth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR July 27, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8830) granting a pension to Aaron Garis, have examined the same, and report:

The facts in this case are sufficiently detailed in the accompanying report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions (House Report No. 2589), which we adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill:

The soldier, late a private of Company C, Twentieth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry, alleges he contracted rheumatism from exposures at Cumberland, Md., on or about May 8, 1864.

The Pension Office rejected the claim on the ground that there is no record of rheumatism, and declared inability of claimant to furnish testimony of an officer or surgeon to existence of same in service.

The records show that the claimant was admitted to division hospital, Sandy Hook, Md., April 29, 1864, and returned to duty May 22, 1864. No records of this regiment on file between April 16 and November, 1864. Claimant was transferred to Company E, First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was with that company and regiment at time of contracting disability.

Jacob F. Myers and Isaac L. Sutton, members of Company E, First Pennsylvania Cavalry, testify that claimant contracted rheumatism from exposures at Cumberland, Md., in May, 1864. Sutton says that he tented with claimant, helped to carry him from tent to an ambulance to take him to a hospital. John M. S. Bishop, another comrade, also testifies that claimant contracted rheumatism in the arms and legs in May, 1864, at Cumberland, Md., and was lame and sick and sent to hospital.

Dr. J. S. Johnson testifies that he treated claimant for rheumatism in 1866; said disease disabled him one-half for manual labor; and also that he was a sound man at enlistment, as is also testified to by several neighbors.

Dr. S. M. Osmun testifies that he treated claimant in 1869 for rheumatism, also in 1882 and 1883, when claimant was badly disabled from rheumatism, it being of a chronic nature.

Several persons testify that claimant has been fully disabled one-half since his return from the service and is a constant sufferer from rheumatism, affecting him in left arm and hip and in his limbs at times; sometimes so badly that he is unable to do any work at all, and oftentimes so that he is unable to perform any continuous labor.

Dr. James Ramsey testifies:

"I being Mr. Garis's attending physician, have attended him for the last two years. The applicant has had frequent attacks of inflammatory rheumatism; duration of disease from one month to three; the winter of 1885 an attack of three months. My deceased uncle, Dr. S. M. Osmun, was his attendant for seventeen years previous to my attending him. I see by his books that he had the same ailment during his attendance."

The board of surgeons at Easton, Pa., examined the claimant May 14, 1884, and rated his disability one-half.

This claim is possessed of great merit, and your committee recommend the passage of the bill, amending the title, and in line 6 striking out one of the letters "r" in the word "Garris," so that the same shall read "Aaron Garis."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES R. BAYLOR.

The bill (H. R. 6825) granting a pension to James R. Baylor, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James R. Baylor, late a private in Company F, Fiftieth Regiment New York Engineers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM LYNCH.

The bill (H. R. 6132) granting a pension to William Lynch, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William Lynch, late a private in Company E, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER FALCONER.

The bill (H. R. 6443) granting a pension to Alexander Falconer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Alexander Falconer, late a sergeant of Company E, First United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN MILLER.

The bill (H. R. 8836) granting a pension to John Miller was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John Miller, late of Company A, Thirty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY M'ELHINNY.

The bill (H. R. 429) granting a pension to Harry McElhinny was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Harry McElhinny, late of Company C, One hundred and second Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES LONG.

The bill (H. R. 7796) granting a pension to James Long was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James Long, late of Compoany D, Ninety-third Regiment of Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HANNAH C. DE WITT.

The bill (S. 2293) granting a pension to Hannah C. De Witt was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Hannah C. De Witt, mother of George E. De Witt, late a private in the Seventh Battery Maine Artillery, who died in said service November 9, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY H. CASLER.

The bill (S. 2532) for the relief of Mrs. M. R. Casler was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, in line 6, before the name "Casler," to strike out "Mrs. M. R." and insert "Mary H.;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary H. Casler, widow of M. R. Casler, late captain of the One hundred and twenty-first Regiment New York Volunteers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Mary H. Casler."

ROBERT K. BENNETT.

The bill (H. R. 7698) granting a pension to Robert K. Bennett was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Robert K. Bennett, late of Company H, One hundred and fifty-sixth New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM CONNER.

The bill (H. R. 6819) granting a pension to William Conner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William Conner, late a private in Company F, Seventy-second Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN PATTON.

The bill (H. R. 8280) granting a pension to John Patton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John Patton, late of Company C, Tenth Regiment of New York Heavy Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB CASE.

The bill (H. R. 8835) granting a pension to Jacob Case, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jacob Case, late of Company D, Thirtieth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN SPRUCE.

The bill (S. 2486) granting a pension to John Spruce, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John Spruce, late of Company H, Thirty-eighth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA ETHERIDGE HOOKS.

The bill (S. 2884) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Etheridge Hooks was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Anna Etheridge Hooks, a volunteer nurse in the late war, at the rate of $25 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM B. BARNES.

The bill (S. 2687) granting a pension to William B. Barnes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William B. Barnes, father of Louis W. Barnes, late of Company I, Sixteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN BUCHANAN.

The bill (H. R. 8827) granting a pension to John Buchanan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John Buchanan, late of Company D, Thirty-first Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS BROWN.

The bill (H. R. 6817) granting a pension to Thomas Brown was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Brown, late a private in Company D, Thirty-first Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SEWELL July 31, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6817) granting a pension to Thomas Brown, have examined the same, and report as follows:

From an examination of the papers the committee find that claimant was a member of Company D, Thirty-first Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, and was in the service as a teamster. He claims pension through injuries to his left foot and ankle by being thrown from a wagon while in the line of duty, in driving from Capitol Hill to Camp Warren, District of Columbia.

The claim was rejected on the ground that there is no evidence on record showing disabilities from varicose veins in the service.

The committee find the testimony largely in favor of claimant, as the following extracts from the report in this case, made by the House Committee on Invalid Pensions, will show:

"William Parker and Thomas Hoppock, two comrades, testify that the soldier was injured in his left foot by a wagon at or near Camp Warren, District of Columbia, and was laid up for some time.

"Lewis L. Ramsey, Joseph Milburn, and John O'Shay, all comrades, testify that the soldier was injured, as alleged, in his left foot and ankle, and that the wheels of the wagon from which he was thrown passed over his left foot and ankle; that he was badly hurt and laid up for six weeks in camp.

"William Brown, a comrade, testifies that he is not related to the soldier; that soldier fell from his wagon and the wheels passed over his left leg; it was badly injured and he was laid up from said injury six weeks.

"Affiant states he was present at the time and was detailed to drive in soldier's place.

"Dr. A. P. Hunt testifies that the veins of the soldier's left leg and foot are badly varicosed, so much so that it must be painful for him to do labor requiring either walking or standing for any length of time.

"Dr. B. B. Matthews testifies that the soldier suffers from varicose veins of one of his legs, with weakness of same ankle-joint. Many neighbors and employers of the soldier since discharge testify to the existence of varicose veins of left leg and weakness of the same ankle-joint, and that he is and has been a constant sufferer by reason of the same and largely incapacitated for the performance of manual labor. The examining surgeons who examined soldier report that he has large varicose veins of left leg, which caused pain and stiffness in walking.

"The soldier's family physician testifies that he was a sound man and was never affected with any disease or disability prior to and at the time of his enlistment into service."

It is evident to the committee that the rejection of this claim on the grounds stated was based upon the fact that none of the company or regimental books are on file in the office of either the Adjutant-General or Surgeon-General, for which the committee do not think the soldier should suffer any disadvantage to his claim, which they deem meritorious, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABRAHAM P. GRIGGS.

The bill (H. R. 8834) granting a pension to Abraham P. Griggs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Abraham P. Griggs, late of Company B, First Regiment New Jersey Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE SATTLER.

The bill (H. R. 6832) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Sattler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Catharine Sattler, surviving widow of Julius Sattler, late a private soldier in Company A, Seventh Regiment of New York State Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REBECCA WISWELL.

The bill (H. R. 9129) granting a pension to Rebecca Wiswell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Rebecca Wiswell, an Army nurse, on the pension-roll at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES HAHNEMAN.

The bill (H. R. 8180) to increase the pension of Charles Hahneman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Charles Hahneman, late a private in Company C, Forty-first New York Volunteers, to $24 per month, in lieu of the pension now paid to him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. ROBAUGH.

The bill (H. R. 7696) for the relief of George W. Robaugh was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of George W. Robaugh, late of Company C, Twenty-third Regiment Kansas Militia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN A. DUNCAN.

The bill (S. 2252) granting a pension to Susan A. Duncan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Susan A. Duncan, widow of Capt. Leroy C. Duncan, late of Company D, Twenty-seventh Regiment Missouri Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case. I introduced the bill, but I should like to hear the report.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER January 11, 1887:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2252) granting a pension to Susan A. Duncan, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant, Susan A. Duncan, is the widow of Leroy C. Duncan, captain of Company M, Fortieth Enrolled Missouri Militia, who died at Warrensburg, Mo., May 18, 1865, of wounds received on the 7th of the same month, at Kingsville, Johnson County, Missouri, while in an engagement with "bushwhackers." The claim was rejected by the Pension Office, as stated by the Commissioner in his letter to the Senate Committee on Pensions, on the ground that "it was not prosecuted to a successful issue prior to July 4, 1874."

It appears by the report of the Adjutant-General that the soldier was mustered into service as captain of Company D, Johnson County, Missouri, Horse Guards, Twenty-seventh Regiment Mounted Troops, to date from July 4, 1861; mustered out January 27, 1862; that he was commissioned captain Fortieth Enrolled Militia October 30, 1862; was detached for active service as captain Company B, Fifth Provisional Enrolled Militia, May 23, 1863. It was while connected with this organization that he received his death wound, according to the testimony of his comrade Henry C. Ross, who was wounded at the same time. It is shown by the report of the Third Auditor that the regiments to which he belonged were "employed in the military service of the United States, and the State paid for the above service, and has been reimbursed by the United States." In another report from the Third Auditor it is stated that the widow filed a claim for his pay, which was paid.

From the proof contained in the papers accompanying this case, it is apparent that the husband was in the service of the United States and that he died from wounds received in action. The bill is reported favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH RICE.

The bill (S. 2216) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Rice was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Elizabeth Rice, of Canandaigua, Mich.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. M. E. WOODS.

The bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. M. E. Woods, of Fairfield, Iowa, who served as a hospital nurse and sanitary agent from 1862 to the close of the war of the rebellion, at the rate of $25 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

G. W. FRALEY.

The bill (H. R. 929) granting a pension to G. W. Fraley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of G. W. Fraley, late a private in Company C, Fortieth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. S. CLAY.

The bill (H. R. 4103) granting a pension to M. S. Clay was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of M. S. Clay, of Bates County, Missouri, late a member of Company A, Twenty-second Illinois Infantry, and also a member of Company E of the Fourth Wisconsin Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH F. KIRKHART.

The bill (H. R. 9167) granting a pension to Joseph F. Kirkhart was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Joseph F. Kirkhart, late a private in Company E, One hundred and seventeenth Ohio Volunteers, second lieutenant of Company D, Fourth Independent Battalion Ohio Volunteers, and first lieutenant of Company A, Thirteenth Ohio Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUCINDA BARRETT.

The bill (H. R. 356) granting a pension to Lucinda Barrett was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lucinda Barrett, widow of Thomas S. Barrett, deceased, late a private in Company M of the Sixth Regiment Illinois Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANKLIN SWEET.

The bill (H. R. 7540) to increase the pension of Franklin Sweet was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Franklin Sweet, late captain of Company E, Sixty-second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, to the rate to which he would have been entitled had his muster as a captain been made prior to the date of the incurring of the disability for which he was pensioned.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUDBERT STONE.

The bill (H. R. 927) granting a pension to Cudbert Stone was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Cudbert Stone, late a private in Company H, Fourteenth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. REBECCA A. CRAW.

Mr. SAWYER. The next pension bill on the Calendar, the bill (S. 2161) to increase the pension of Mrs. Rebecca A. Craw, was reported adversely.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not have it indefinitely postponed?

Mr. SAWYER. I was going to move that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that it be indefinitely postponed, and I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. SAWYER. I intended to have that bill postponed indefinitely when I reported it, but I forgot to make the motion at that time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read to show the grounds of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read, though this, being adversely reported, is not, within the rule, under consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER, January 11, 1887:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2161) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca A. Craw, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner is the widow of Lafayette Craw, private, Company G, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers. She was pensioned March 4, 1867, at the rate of $8 per month, and is now receiving $12 per month. She now asks increase to $30 per month by special enactment, on account of the death of her son, who was a member of the same regiment in which his father served, and who died not long after his father was killed, of disease alleged to have been contracted in the service. There is no law under which two pensions can be granted to a dependent relative, nor is the committee aware of any precedent for this by the passage of a special bill.

The widow bases her claim upon her necessities, and petitions for $30 per month. The committee have no reason to doubt the accuracy of her statements, but the wisdom of increasing pensions by special law, except in very extraordinary cases, is very greatly mistrusted. In the present instance there is no apparent justification for the increase demanded.

Your committee therefore report the bill with a recommendation that it do not pass, and request to be discharged from its further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be postponed indefinitely. The Chair hears no objection.

EQUALIZATIONS OF PENSIONS.

The bill (S. 2174) to equalize the pensions paid to soldiers and sailors who become totally disabled was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This not being a private bill, it does not come under the order for to-day, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. COCKRELL. Go to the next.

MRS. HENRIETTA M. DRUM HUNT.

The bill (H. R. 8869) granting a pension to Mrs. Henrietta M. Drum Hunt was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAIR. Let that be passed over without prejudice. The Senator in charge of it is out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

FREDERICK ROBERTSON.

The bill (H. R. 1860) granting a pension to Frederick Robertson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Frederick Robertson, late an assistant surgeon in the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. HEDRICK.

The bill (H. R. 8623) granting a pension to Mary E. Hedrick was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary E. Hedrick, widow of Thomas H. Hedrick, late captain of Company K, Fifteenth Iowa Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSIAH MAHONEY.

The bill (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to Josiah Mahoney was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Josiah Mahoney, late second lieutenant of Company D, Eighth Tennessee Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of the Senate has been executed, and now the Calendar is in order.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10397, being the pension appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to: and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10397) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30. 1888, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment, in line 40, after the word "Treasury," to insert the words "where practicable;" so as to make the clause read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury, where practicable, shall cause suitable rooms to be set apart in the public buildings under his control in cities where pension agencies are located, which shall be acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior, for the use and occupancy of the said agencies respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if there is any change made in regard to the fees of examining surgeons or is the law of last session repealed?

Mr. ALLISON. This is the same as the law of the last session except that the amount of appropriation "for fees and expenses of examining surgeons" is increased from $821,000 to $1,000,000, and the words "for services rendered within the fiscal year 1888" are inserted; those words have not been in the bills heretofore, the object being to keep each fiscal year by itself. It has got to be a habit of the Department to allow these expenditures to lap over from one year to another.

Mr. President, I move, in line 39, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

For rents, $20,0000.

The House of Representatives undoubtedly had in view the substitution of Government buildings for buildings now rented by pension agents. The Committee on Appropriations have carefully examined that question and find, on a report made by the Secretary of the Treasury, that it is not practicable to put pension agents in any public building now completed. There is a pension agency at Concord, N. H., another at Augusta, Me., and another at Columbus, Ohio, and it is probable that the pension agents can be provided for when the public buildings now under construction are completed, but none of these buildings are completed, and it is not probable that they will be within the fiscal year.

Mr. COCKRELL. How is it at Topeka, Kans.?

Mr. ALLISON. My impression is that that building is not completed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think so, too, and that is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. ALLISON. So that for the next fiscal year, at least, the committee are of opinion that it will not be practicable to reduce the amount paid for rents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10242), being the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10242) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be considered as the regular reading progresses, and the committee amendments first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that suggestion.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment was in the appropriations "for pay of the general staff," in line 34, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all $65,500;" so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 78, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all, $535,500;" so as to make the clause read:

Medical Department: For the pay of the officers in the Medical Department, as now authorized and provided by law, $426,700; for additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $108,800; in all, $535,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 85, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all, $164,250;" so as to make the clause read:

Pay Department: For the pay of the officers in the Pay Department, as now authorized and provided by law, $126,500; for additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $37,750; in all, $164,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 92, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all, $34,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Judge-Advocate-General's Department: For the pay of the officers in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, as now authorized and provided by law, $27,000; for additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $7,000; in all, $34,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 101, after the word "cents," to insert "in all, $1,190,313.75;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of officers on the retired-list, and for officers who may be placed thereon during the current year, $918,544.65; for additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $271,769.10; in all, $1,190,313.75.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "miscellaneous," in line 109, before the word "contract surgeons," to insert "not exceeding sixty-five;" in line 110, before the word "hospital matrons," to insert "not exceeding one hundred and sixty;" and in line 111, before the words "veterinary surgeons," to insert "not exceeding fourteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of not exceeding sixty-five contract surgeons, not exceeding one hundred and sixty hospital matrons, and not exceeding fourteen veterinary surgeons; in all, $102,875.94.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 114, before the words "paymasters' clerks," to insert "forty-six;" in line 115, before the words "paymasters' messengers," to insert "thirty;" and in line 117, after the word "all," to strike out "eighty-eight" and insert "eighty-three;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of forty-six paymasters' clerks, at $1,400 each; thirty paymasters' messengers, and traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks; in all, $83,800: Provided, That the maximum sum to be allowed paymasters' clerks when traveling on duty shall be 4 cents per mile, and, in addition thereto, when transportation can not be furnished by the Quartermaster's Department, the cost of same actually paid by them, exclusive of sleeping or parlor car-fare and transfers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 126, to insert:

For pay of one clerk for the General of the Army on the retired-list, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 128, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 141, before the word "traveling," to strike out "when;" and after the word "duty," at the end of the same line, to insert "without troops, when authorized by law;" so as to read:

For mileage to officers traveling on duty without troops, when authorized by law, not to exceed $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 158, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for the pay of the Army from $12,666,918.69 to $12,664,518.69.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "subsistence of the Army," in line 199, before the word "from" to insert "and;" after the word "from" to strike out "and at;" and, in line 203, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten," so as to read:

For the payment of the regulation allowances for commutation in lieu of rations to enlisted men on furlough, to ordnance-sergeants on duty at ungarrisoned posts, to enlisted men stationed at places where rations in kind can not be economically issued, to enlisted men traveling on detached duty when it is impracticable to carry rations of any kind, to enlisted men selected to contest for places or prizes in the department, division, and Army rifle competitions, while traveling to and from places of contest, in all $1,745,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; and not more than $110,000 thereof shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés of the Subsistence Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for Army transportation, in line 313, after the word "supply" to strike out "up to," and insert "to not exceeding," so as to read:

That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in the purchase for the Army of draught animals until the number on hand shall be reduced to five thousand, and thereafter shall only be expended for the purchase of a number sufficient to keep the supply to not exceeding five thousand.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the same clause, to strike out the following proviso from line 314 to line 328:

And provided further, That no expenditure authorized by this act from the appropriations made herein for the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, including the transportation of troops and their supplies, and the expenses incident thereto, shall be made except by the Quartermaster-General, under the direction of the Secretary of War, unless an emergency exists that demands immediate action; and in such case the expenditure necessary to meet the emergency may be made upon the order in writing of the General commanding the Army, or upon the order in writing of a division or department commander in whose jurisdiction the emergency arises; but every such order from a division or department commander shall certify that an emergency exists requiring immediate expenditure, stating the emergency necessary to be met.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "barracks and quarters," in line 383, after the word "same," to strike out "$12,500," and insert "$10,000;" so as to read:

For construction and repair of quarters for hospital-stewards, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the "Ordnance Department," in line 450, after the word "arms," to insert "ordnance, and ordnance supplies, including payment for mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance;" so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance service: For current expenses of the ordnance service required to defray the current expenses at the arsenals; of receiving stores and issuing arms and other ordnance supplies; of police and office duties; of rents, tools, fuel and lights; of stationery and office furniture; of tools and instruments for use; incidental expenses of the ordnance service, and those attending practical trials and tests of small-arms, ordnance, and ordnance supplies, including payment for mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

For manufacture of arms at national armories, $400,000: Provided, That not more than $60,000 of the money appropriated for the Ordnance Department in all its branches shall be applied to the payment of civilian clerks in said Department.

The amendment was agreed to

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment-stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to yield, that we may finish the army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside in order that the Senate may continue the consideration of the appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the reading of the army appropriation bill will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk resumed, and concluded the reading of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave to send to the Reporter a statement of the changes in the bill from that passed last year, and I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to be printed.

ELON A. MARSH AND MINARD LAFEVER.

Mr. PLATT. With the consent of the Senator in charge of the unfinished business, and with the understanding that it shall not interfere with it, I ask that a House bill which was read twice and ordered to lie on the table may be taken up. It is the bill (H. R. 5894). I wish to ask the Senate to concur in the passage of the bill, as a similar bill has been reported by a committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside for the purpose suggested by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5894) for the relief of Elon A. Marsh and Minard Lafever.

The preamble reads, that on the 28th of December, 1880, in due form of procedure and in all legal respects, letters patent numbered 236052 were duly granted and issued to Elon A. Marsh and his assignee, Minard Lafever, of Battle Creek, Mich., for a new and useful improvement in steam-engine valve-gear, save that the letters patent were not, by accident or mistake, at the time of issuing them, as by law required, signed by the Secretary of the Interior; and that they were afterward, on the 24th of February, 1882, but not before, duly signed by the then Acting Secretary of the Interior. The bill, therefore, makes legal and valid the letters patent named in the preamble from December 28, 1880, to the same extent and for the same term that they would have been legal, valid, complete, and operative if the signature of the Secretary of the Interior had, at the time of the supposed issue of the letters patent, been placed thereon, and the omission of the signature had not occurred. These provisions are not to be held or construed to apply to or affect any suits now pending, nor any cause of action heretofore arising.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is this a Senate bill or a House bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A House bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear an explanation or have the report read.

Mr. PLATT. This is a case where a patent was issued in due form except that by accident the Secretary of the Interior omitted his signature. Having all the issues for a fortnight before him and signing them all, he omitted to affix his signature to this patent. Afterwards the Acting Secretary of the Interior signed it; about a year afterward. Then the matter went into court, and it was held that that did not make it a valid patent. This bill is to validate that patent. It is a House bill, and the House bill provides that no right of action and no pending litigation shall be affected by it. There can be no objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I now move that the Senate bill on the same subject, being the bill (S. 500) for the relief of Elon A. Marsh and Minard Lafever be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 4688) granting a pension to Josephine Da Costa Thomas; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT-STATIONS.

Mr. GEORGE. I call for the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment-stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks for the reading of the bill. It will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill to section 9.

Mr. HAWLEY. What is that section just read—an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment already agreed to by the Senate in Committee of the Whole, as the Chair is informed by the Secretary.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the amendment?

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted as a new section:

SEC. 9. The provisions and benefits of this act shall apply to the agricultural colleges which have been or may hereafter be established in any of the Territories of the United States under the laws thereof: Provided, That the average attendance of pupils upon the instruction of such college for the year preceding its application for the benefits of this act shall not have been less than fifty.

Mr. GEORGE. That amendment was offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON.] Has it been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Secretary informs the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. GEORGE. In order to perfect the bill I have one or two amendments to offer. On page 5, section 6, line 11, I propose to strike out "five" and insert "seven," so as to provide for the first payment of salaries to be made on the 1st day of July, 1887.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the clause has been already amended by striking out "five" and inserting "six."

Mr. GEORGE. Then I propose to strike out "six" and insert "seven."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentary method would be to reconsider the vote adopting the amendment heretofore agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. The time has passed when "six" would be an appropriate figure there. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It can be done by unanimous consent. It is merely a date.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent now to strike out "five" and insert "seven."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to strike out "five" and insert "seven." Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CHACE. I move to amend, in section 4, line 14, by striking out "of valuation" after "standard;" so as to read:

But nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize said commissioner to control or direct the work or management of any such station except as to the standard of commercial fertilizers.

Mr. GEORGE. In line 14 of section 4?

Mr. CHACE. Yes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The words occur also in line 4 of section 4.

Mr. CHACE. Yes, in line 4; but they are only of importance in line 14.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the motion to strike out the words "of valuation?"

Mr. CHACE. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no objection to their being stricken out in line 4 and in line 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi modify the amendment proposed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is moved by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. GEORGE. I merely said that I saw no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island if it is carried through the bill.

Mr. CHACE. If is it accepted, I have nothing to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] in section 4, line 4, after the word "standard," to strike out "of valuation," and in line 14, after the word "standard," to strike out "of valuation."

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Mississippi explain to the Senate what the difference is which is caused by this amendment?

Mr. GEORGE. I suppose the objection which the Senator from Rhode Island had to the words "of valuation" standing in the bill was that they meant some commercial value.

Mr. CHACE. Undoubtedly; they can not mean anything else than the money value of this article of merchandise.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me to ask him a question, I should like to ask what the object of this proviso is, beginning with the words "but nothing herein contained," and from there to the end of the sentence? It seems to me that it is entirely superfluous.

Mr. GEORGE. The proviso to section 4?

Mr. PALMER. That part of the section beginning "but nothing herein contained."

Mr. CHACE. The Senator alludes to the words at the end of line 11 and what follows.

Mr. HOAR. My question has not yet been answered. I asked what was the difference in meaning with the words "of valuation" out. What is the standard to be now—"standard of commercial fertilizers" in what respect?

Mr. INGALLS. Does it mean their price in the market, or their value as elements of production when used in the field?

Mr. GEORGE. It means the latter.

Mr. INGALLS. It does not say so.

Mr. HOAR. I do not quite understand yet. I wish the Senator from Mississippi would explain to the Senate fully what is the quality of the commercial fertilizers which is to be proportioned to one another by this "standard." Is it price?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know that I can give a very lucid explanation to that. I presume that the meaning is this, that it is intended to fix a standard of value by which the relative value for use of the various commercial fertilizers is to be tested.

Mr. HOAR. That is to say, whether guano is better than barn-yard manure, and if so how much better as a general thing, relating to all sorts of cases.

Mr. GEORGE. The intention was that the fertilizing standard, the comparative qualities of each kind of commercial manure as a standard, should be tested.

Mr. HOAR. Comparison in reference to what qualities, is the question. What is the quality which this standard is to enable us to compare so that the one is 90 and the other 95?

Mr. GEORGE. Its productive quality, its capacity to facilitate production.

Mr. HOAR. Must that not depend on the soils in which it is to be used and thousands of things as to which it is utterly impossible to have one standard?

Mr. PLUMB. I venture to suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that that section is liable to such a construction that I think it had better be stricken out altogether.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. DAWES. Is it possible to have any standard, whatever it may be, that will in the end fix the price of commercial fertilizers in the market, and therefore is not the Agricultural Department here called upon to fix the price in the market of different fertilizers?

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out, in line 14, the words "except as to the standard of valuation of commercial fertilizers." I think that would relieve the proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The gentlemen who have devoted special attention to this subject, including and chief among whom is Mr. Atherton, who has charge of interests of this character in the State College of Pennsylvania, have, as I understand, on consideration, thought that the whole of section 4, if that is the one we are now on, ought to go out; and that the substitute for it, which I think my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has in charge, and I have a copy of it, should be inserted. I suggest, therefore, in order to save time, that the substitute proposed by these gentlemen, sincerely and patriotically interested in this business——

Mr. GEORGE. There is so much noise that I can not hear the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont will suspend until the Chair asks Senators to resume their seats and cease conversation, so that the business of the Senate may proceed intelligently.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am sorry that the Chair has felt it to be his parliamentary duty to do that, because I have no doubt that a dozen agricultural experiment-stations were going on in the Senate at this present time, and if they had only been allowed to take root and grow, we should have had a large crop. [Laughter.]

Now, I will repeat what I was saying, that I am informed by my friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. Atherton, as I have no doubt my friend from Connecticut is still more fully informed from them all, who has been devoted to those interests under the authority of Pennsylvania for some time, that the people really interested, and not for profit or advantage, but for the public good in this business, have thought that the whole of section 4 should go out and that another statement should be inserted in its place, which I will ask the Secretary to read now for information. My friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has charge of all these amendments, but as we were going on to fix these things I thought it right, as he did not, to state this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment suggested by the Senator from Vermont will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That in order to secure, as far as practicable, uniformity of methods and results in the work of said stations, it shall be the duty of the United States Commissioner of Agriculture, by the advice and with the consent of a commission composed of the directors, or a majority thereof, of the stations receiving the appropriations hereinafter made, to lay out certain lines of work and methods which each of said stations shall prosecute and adopt to the extent of at least 15 per cent. of said appropriations; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize said Commissioner of Agriculture to control or direct the work or management of any such station, except in the manner annually provided and approved by the said commission, and to the extent of the income above set forth. It shall be the duty of each of the said stations, annually, on or before the 1st day of February, to make to the governor of the State or Territory in which it is located a full and detailed report of its operations, including a statement of receipts and expenditures, a copy of which report shall be sent to each of said stations, to the said Commissioner of Agriculture, and to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and, for the purpose of securing further co-operation among such colleges or stations and of co-ordinating the results of their work, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture to collate and publish, at least monthly, the results of such work in the United States and in foreign countries, and to provide a suitable place for holding annual meetings or conventions of the directors or other representatives from such colleges or stations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, this distinguished gentleman, Professor Atherton, of the State College of Pennsylvania, on this topic in a letter to me, inclosing that with sundry other suggestions, which, after consultation with the agriculturists of the country, they have thought it advisable to ask Congress to do, says on this precise point this:

Strike out section 4, and insert the accompanying substitute—

Which has just been read—

This does not affect the structure of the purposes of the bill, but defines more precisely some of the duties to be done under it. The provision requiring the United States Commissioner of Agriculture to collate and publish frequently the results of the work of stations we all regard as of great importance, as this constant sense of working under the public eye will be the surest guaranty of the quality of the work done all over the country.

This substitute steers clear of the suggestions made about standards of value and the suggestion made by the Senator from Kansas, and so far as I can see, having been born a farmer, it is a great improvement on the fourth section.

Mr. GEORGE. The bill as reported by the Committee on Agriculture was introduced in the lower House at the last Congress by Mr. Cullen, of Illinois. I believe no action was then taken on it, however. At the convention of the presidents of the agricultural colleges of the United States, held, I believe, in this city some time last year, they considered that bill, agreed to it, and the president of the Agricultural College of Mississippi inclosed to me the bill as it now stands, and as I introduced it and as it was reported by the committee, stating that it had received the examination and the approval of the presidents of the agricultural colleges in convention assembled, and asking me to introduce it. Accordingly I did introduce it. The very same bill was introduced in the House of Representatives, as I understand, in pursuance of a similar request made by the presidents of the agricultural colleges. It is commonly known as the Hatch bill, being identically the same bill as the one introduced here and the one previously introduced by Mr. Cullen in the last Congress, and approved, as I have just stated, by the convention of the presidents of the agricultural colleges of the Union. It has received their sanction, and has been carefully examined by them. As such, I have introduced it in the Senate, and it has been approved and indorsed by the Committee on Agriculture.

Of course, I have no technical knowledge as to what ought to be the peculiar phase of the bill in its various sections, and I have relied exclusively upon the judgment, upon the information, and upon the technical skill of the presidents of the agricultural colleges for that. In fact I have merely introduced the bill which they approved and sent to me for introduction, and it was approved by the Committee on Agriculture as the proper bill to pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4 of section 4, after the word "standard," it is proposed to strike out the words "of valuation;" and in line 14, after the word "standard," to strike out the words "of valuation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In order to make the section in harmony with the amendment already adopted, I move, in lines 14 and 15 of section 4, to strike out the words "except as to the standard of valuation of commercial fertilizers."

Mr. CHACE. The Senator will notice that the words "of valuation" are stricken out in line 14.

Mr. PLUMB. Now my motion is to strike out all that relates to fertilizers.

Mr. CHACE. That strikes out the whole section.

Mr. INGALLS. It would be better, it seems to me, to strike out all after the word "act," in line 11, down to the word "fertilizers," in line 15. After what has been done in line 4, that whole clause is superfluous.

Mr. PLUMB. The motion I make now is to make the section harmonious with the amendment already adopted. A further motion can be made later. It seems to me that that provision in regard to agricultural fertilizers ought to go out. Though I was instrumental in reporting the bill, I think the bill ought to be amended in that particular.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like, to save inconvenience and to save time, to take the sense of the Senate on the amendment that I had read for information in lieu of section 4. That, of course, at this moment requires unanimous consent. If the Senate is willing to do what these gentlemen, on consideration, write me that they desire to do, and which seems to me to be a much safer provision than section 4 as it now stands, and which gets rid of all the difficulties we are now discussing, I shall be glad, and I think we shall save time. I therefore ask unanimous consent to take the question on agreeing to the substitute for section 4, that I have had read from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the amendment proposed by himself, to strike out all of section 4 and insert the substitute that was read for information a few moments since, be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to add to that unanimous consent the understanding that that substitute shall be open to amendment just the same as the original; so that if there seems to be any imperfection in it it may be corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With that understanding is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. I will object simply because I think we had better perfect the section as we have begun to do. Then we can determine whether this or that is the best.

Mr. CHACE. I think that is best.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 4, after the word "agriculture," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "based," in line 7, as follows:

To determine annually a standard of the ingredients of commercial fertilizers, upon which the analysis of such fertilizers, as far as made by said stations, shall be based.

Mr. CHACE. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas what object he expects to attain by that? As I understand it, the purpose of this section was to establish, not a standard of value in money, but to establish a standard of quality—chemical quality, if I may use that phrase—so that there may be one universal standard all over the country that shall be accepted by buyers and sellers, by the users of the fertilizers, and upon which they may be able readily to inform themselves, and so judge more readily and more perfectly of the value as a fertilizer.

I do not speak of the value now in a money sense, but of the quality of the fertilizer. There seems to be a very apparent value in some such provision. It is like a standard measure, a measure of weight or quality in handling any of the ordinary substances that we use in the arts.

The object of this section was to have some standard that should be recognized as the Government standard. It would be found that purchasers of fertilizers would be comparing fertilizers all the time with the standard, and they would become familiar with it. It seems to me that if the amendment of the Senator from Kansas is adopted that object will be entirely frustrated so far as this section goes; and that is really about all the value there is in the section.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not prepared to speak now about the value of the remainder of the section, but it it seems to me that this power would be liable to be badly used. In the first place, it would limit the work of the agricultural stations to the plan laid out by the Commissioner of Agriculture. They would simply analyze according to the formula which he prescribed. It would naturally, therefore, limit their work.

Ammonia is the principal ingredient of value, I think, in a fertilizer, and there should not be any limitation on the power of these stations to determine other ingredients of value as well as that; in fact, to take them all into account. That would give him power to determine the commercial value of all the fertilizers in the markets of the United States. It would be akin to giving him the power to determine what was an adulteration of an article of food.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The practical effect of it would be just the same.

Mr. PLUMB. In many of the Southern States where these fertilizers are used as they are not in my State, boards are created possessing certain police power for the purpose of analyzing articles offered for sale and exposing to the public these analyses, so that if a man buys an article that possesses a certain amount of ammonia he knows it; if it possesses less, he knows it, and so on; and he can buy it securely and freely. But in this case the Commissioner of Agriculture would have practically the determination of the market value and the right to sell every commercial fertilizer offered in the market.

It seems to me that while I have no idea he would use it in a bad way, at the same time he might by misunderstanding, by misconception make such use of his power as to seriously interrupt the ordinary course of trade in this very important article and give the benefit of the Government indorsement to one article as against another.

Mr. CHACE. I do not know that I apprehend fully the remarks of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I suppose, however, that he does not mean to say that ammonia is the only or the chief ingredient of value in ordinary fertilizing compounds. Hydrogen in its various forms is an important element; potash, phosphoric acid, the traces of iron, magnesia, and sundry other substances are of great importance also, and, in many cases, of more importance even than ammonia. So, too, the question of how much of the phosphoric acid is soluble and how much is insoluble becomes a very important matter. It is in order that there may be some method of analysis and of marking, so that the purchasers and venders, dealers and users of these articles may know what they are buying that I apprehend this section has been introduced into the bill.

I am neither the author of the bill nor the defender of it. I think with the Senator from Kansas we should be very careful not to clothe the Commissioner of Agriculture with too much power over this matter, and I have already prepared and offered an amendment to this section looking to that very matter. But if the views of the Senator from Kansas are to prevail, I think the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] if introduced would answer the purpose much better than his, because he really emasculates this. We might as well strike out the whole section.

Mr. HAWLEY. I object to the whole of section 4 as in the bill and to much of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, for they have one common vice. The bill of the committee says:

That in order to secure, as far as practicable, uniformity of methods and results in the work of said stations, it shall be the duty of the United States Commissioner of Agriculture to determine annually a standard—

We have stricken out the words "of valuation"— of the ingredients of commercial fertilizers, upon which the analysis of such fertilizers, as far as made by said station, shall be based.

I fail to comprehend the sense of that. The Senator from Kansas made an objection to that of some force. What shall be the standard? What is meant by "a standard of valuation" or "a standard of the ingredients of commercial fertilizers?"

Mr. CHACE. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me——

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator will kindly wait until I get through. He can talk to much better advantage then.

No two of these fertilizers—and they are known by the hundred and perhaps by the thousand in the market—are exactly alike. The agricultural-experiment station of Connecticut is the oldest in the country. When we want anything done in Connecticut we go and do it; we do not come to Congress and beg for it. Ours is twelve years old at least. The agricultural-experiment station there is every day or two receiving specimens of fertilizers said to be of extraordinary value. The chemist goes to work and makes a thorough analysis. He finds that the specimen submitted has so many hundred grains of phosphoric acid, so much of potash, so much of ammonia. I am not chemist enough to go over all the ingredients, but the elements are large in number; and he says at the end that at the market value of these elements this preparation is worth so much a ton. It is impossible for the Commissioner of Agriculture to establish a standard of ammonia, of phosphoric acid, and of nitrogen. Or does it mean a standard article? There is no more a standard article of fertilizers than there is a standard article of cathartic pills, of which there are millions of varieties. What would be the use of instructing the Medical Department of the Army to establish a standard article of pills of any description? There is not any standard. These elements should be there in certain quantities in purity, and all the chemist can do is to examine a given article and say what it is exactly, and then people know what the market value of its constituent elements is, and then the market value of the compound is so much per ton, and people can buy as they please.

Analysis shows the most remarkable differences. Some of the most desirable fertilizers are shown on analysis to be worth, for example, $40 a ton, and another is worth $80 a ton, determined by the absolute test of the chemist.

I do not wish to have the Commissioner of Agriculture of the United States doing what other people understand better than he does. That is one objection. I am a State rights man in some of these things, and very earnestly so. I think our chemists in Connecticut, in the station which we have established, for which we have given a tract of land, which is provided with a handsome building, which we have fitted up in all respects as such a station ought to be, are doing all that is necessary for the farmers of that State; but I have no objection, if it be thought wise, for the benefit of this great interest, to give $15,000 a year to that institution, or to a similar institution in my State; but we are getting along so happily, so sagaciously, with such thoroughness, that I am very much afraid to have Congress send any money there to meddle with us. And my judgment is that the Congress of the United States has no more business with establishing the standard for a fertilizer made by a firm in my town than it has to appoint a constable in the town. Any manufacturer can go on and make anything he pleases and call it Smith and Jones' standard fertilizer, entirely independent of the Commissioner of Agriculture's fertilizer. Why not establish a standard hoe, a standard pill, or a standard anything else? We have all a right to make these articles exactly as we please in spite of your law and in spite of your Commissioner of Agriculture. What is the use of establishing a standard? I do not understand the thing at all.

Some of these amendments are wise. There is a multitude of them from professors of agricultural colleges, members of State boards, &c. Some I approve, some I do not. I studied this matter carefully in consultation with a number of gentlemen from different States, and in correspondence with them, who are interested in this matter, and I have drawn a substitute for the whole bill. I do not pretend to say that it is perfect, but I do believe it is a great deal better than the bill. This substitute is printed and credit given to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. It should be the Hawley amendment. I am not particular about the credit to be given; I am perfectly willing to assume the discredit, if any there be, but my name should be there instead of that of the Senator from Massachusetts. I propose to change essentially the form of the bill but not the purpose.

I will not go into a discussion, because somebody I believe is to make a motion to recommit this bill in order to readjust these conflicting amendments. They can not well be adjusted in this random debate.

The bill I have drawn gives this money to the States in precise harmony with the plan of the act of 1862, which established agricultural colleges. It is merely a bill amendatory of, or ancillary to, that act. It would give the money to the States, and ask of the States that they shall accept it under certain conditions accepted by the Legislatures, and expended "under the following conditions," and then we have done with the schools.

Now, the pending bill requires an annual or a continual meddling of the Federal Government with the State institutions, and what to me is an absurdity, the money is not given under any different theory, but it begins, as they now have it, on the 1st of July, 1887:

But no such payment shall be made to any station—

They are going to pay it directly from the Treasury to the experiment station—until the trustees or other governing body of the college at which such station is located shall have executed, under their corporate seal, and filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, an agreement to expend all moneys received under this act for the sole and exclusive purpose and in the manner herein directed, and to maintain a farm of at least 25 acres in connection with such college, and shall also have executed and filed with said Secretary their bond, in the penal sum of $15,000, with two sufficient sureties, approved by the clerk of a court of record in such State, conditioned on the faithful expenditure of and accounting for all moneys so received.

State rights are not so altogether out of fashion that it would seem proper for me to comment on the Federal Government making an appropriation direct to State officers constituted under State laws, acting under State authority, giving money directly to them, disregarding what we call the sovereign States, and asking those officers of the State government to give bond to the Federal Government, and assuming, therefore, a control over them and an annual inspection of those bonds. It does not assume to bind the trustees, but it may as well do it. They are changing every year; most of these boards are renewable, a portion of them every year, so as to maintain some sort of uniformity. Then the Secretary of the Treasury must follow our State action in appointing new trustees and require new bonds of our State officers every year. I do not think that is the way at all.

The bill known as the Morrill act of 1862, which established agricultural colleges, was drawn with deliberation and care and sagacity, and that said—not to read all of it—

That there be granted to the several States, for the purposes hereinafter mentioned. * * *

That was the wise provision—all moneys derived from the sale of the lands aforesaid by the States to which the lands are apportioned, and from the sales of land scrip hereinbefore provided for, shall be invested in stocks of the United States. * * * * * * * *

The grant of land and land scrip hereby authorized shall be made on the following conditions, to which, as well as to the provisions hereinbefore contained, the previous assent of the several States shall be signified by legislative acts.

Then the Morrill act goes on to make seven specifications of the manner in which this money shall be applied to agricultural education, and says that "no State shall be entitled to the benefits of this act unless it shall express its acceptance thereof by the Legislature within two years," &c., so that when this is once done and the States accept it, the States are then responsible for the manner of executing the trust and expending the money in detail; the Federal Government is done with it.

I have drawn a substitute in precise accordance with the principles of the Morrill act. I am aware that some will say we cannot trust the States to properly expend this money. I doubt whether it would be wisely expended in all cases. We are liable to that always; but if we are to proceed upon that as the fundamental theory in our legislation, we may as well take charge of every imaginable subject and say that in our judgment a State can not be trusted at all, and we think we can do everything more wisely.

I say that the Legislature of the State I have the honor to belong to can take care of this business better than any Congress. It knows what its soils are, what the best fertilizers are, what its farmers desire. It has already as good a chemist as anybody has, and as good a station; and if we are to have any money there I want to have it in the form we already have without the dictation or intermeddling of any Federal authority. I do not want him who is trusted with an important work to dictate a standard of value to manufacturers which he is not obliged to look at; he can throw them in the waste-basket

Give, if need be, this money, under as strong conditions as you please, to the States requiring it, and let the States accept the money with those conditions. It is easy to provide for the exercise of a faithful discharge of the trust in that way. I think the majority of the States now have agricultural colleges of some description. Quite a large number of them have valuable experimental stations. The first one of which I have record was established by Connecticut in 1875. Another followed in 1877, and they have been gradually spreading throughout the States. That is the natural and proper way for the thing to grow anyhow. If the States do not understand the value of them sufficiently to start them now, I have some question as to whether they will after we give the money, for that which costs nothing is too apt to be considered as worth nothing. But undoubtedly the progress of agricultural education is such that all the States will in due time be ready of their own accord to establish experimental stations.

I have no objection, if it is thought wise, to hurrying the matter through the medium of such a bill as this, but I think it altogether wiser that it should follow the general plan of the original act on the subject.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I consider some bill of this kind as an exceedingly important adjunct to the agricultural colleges and stations already established. I do not regard this section as of any particular importance. Take it in my own State, where we have had chemical analyses of the various kinds of compounds sold for manures and their chemical value certified for more than a dozen years, so that the farmer can know exactly what is the real cost of the article he is buying, and then he can judge for himself as to its agricultural value by testing it.

I should be quite willing myself to see this section stricken out and something that will be proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] taken as a substitute. I do not regard the section as one that is likely to be in harmony with these institutions. I believe it far better that the agricultural stations and colleges now in existence should be permitted to conduct their affairs so as to satisfy the farmers of their respective States. Undoubtedly there will be differences between one State and another as to what should be done in the agricultural stations. I hope that we shall not fetter the bill so as to prevent its being useful to all of the States, as I believe it will be.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, from such casual inspection as I have been able to give this bill it appears to me exceedingly crude and imperfect. While I sympathize fully with the object that it has in view, and shall cordially support any measure that looks toward enlarging the boundaries of human knowledge or increasing the sum total of human happiness on this earth, I am disposed to think that a critical analysis of the measure, such as we would apply to the fertilizers that are named in it, would disclose the fact that it is inapplicable to the purposes for which it is designed.

We have in Kansas at this time a well equipped and exceedingly active institution, organized under the act of Congress of 1862, where all these various experiments are continually conducted under the control of a corps of skilled and intelligent instructors, who are devoted to the objects and purposes of the institution. There is nothing that I know of that is named here in the way of experiment or analysis which is not at this time conducted in the Kansas State Agricultural College at Manhattan, which is attended by a large number of youths of that State of both sexes.

I am disposed to think that this bill in its present form is not, in any sense whatever, responsive to any great popular demand. It is one of that great category of measures which have been presented to us in times past in obedience rather to the clamor of a certain select class of self-constituted reformers of all the institutions of the earth, and it is based upon an entirely mistaken apprehension of the theory of this Government. It illustrates the tendency of this class of agitators to demand the continual interposition of the National Government in State and local and domestic affairs, with the result, as I believe, of absolutely destroying the independence and freedom of individual conduct, and subverting the theory on which the Government is based and in the conduct of which hitherto it has reached such great results.

If the General Government desires to contribute $15,000 a year to the State Agricultural College of Kansas, at Manhattan, I have no objection, but I am opposed to any stipulation as to the methods in which it shall be employed outside of its application to the general object of the trust. We do not desire to have our system hampered or interfered with, or its usefulness destroyed by any interposition of national authority. We are competent to manage these affairs in our own way. We have achieved great and beneficent results; we know what we want; and I should be opposed to the recognition of the authority of the Commissioner of Agriculture to come to that institution and say yea or nay as to any of the methods that we shall adopt, the purposes that we shall pursue, or the manner in which we shall dispose of these funds in case they are appropriated, so long as we apply them within the limits of the legitimate objects and purposes of the appropriation.

Take this fourth section and look at the declaration of principle that it contains:

> That in order to secure, as far as practicable, uniformity of methods and results in the work of said stations, it shall be the duty of the United States Commissioner of Agriculture, &c.

It is not desirable that uniformity of methods or results should be obtained. That is exactly what we wish to prevent. We do not want any bed of Procrustes erected on which all these institutions shall be laid, and if they are too long have them abbreviated, and if they are too short, so far as the view of the Commissioner is concerned, have them stretched out or lengthened to meet his views of the results and methods which ought to obtain. Sir, it is the conflict of the contrariety of opinions in this country upon these subjects that results in the greatest good to the greatest number. It is the collision and contest between opposing ideas or views of contending localities that enable us to reach the highest results in the departments of activity and government. But here is the adoption of a principle as a legislative declaration that we will concede to the General Government the right to establish uniformity in all these methods, and uniformity of results; that we will surrender our independence, relinquish all that we have hitherto been able to accomplish in this direction by individual effort, and consent to a general national supervision of this great subject.

Sir, I am opposed to it. I can not understand what conceivable good is proposed by this section. What is to be gained by ascertaining the commercial value of fertilizers? One fertilizer differeth from another fertilizer in glory. There is one fertilizer for corn, one fertilizer for wheat, another for tobacco, and another for cotton. How is the Commissioner of Agriculture to appear at one place or another and proclaim that for all these purposes the United States Government shall declare that there shall be a unit of commercial valuation of fertilizers to be used in Kansas, or Alabama, or Rhode Island, or elsewhere?

Fortunately, we do not need in the State in which I live much, if anything, to do with fertilizers. Our soil is rich and exuberant, abounding in fecundity. It is a matter entirely unimportant to us whether there is any commercial unit of value of fertilizers established or not. But the whole section is repugnant; it is opposed to the idea on which these institutions were established, and in my judgment will be destructive of the objects and purposes for which they have hitherto been maintained, and which have resulted in such magnificent attainment in agriculture.

Look again at the sixth section. The terms upon which this money is to be received are ignominious and degrading. Here are these institutions established through a long period of years, accomplishing great and beneficent results. You propose after subjecting them to this rule of uniformity and governmental control, to provide how they shall receive this paltry pittance which you propose to give to them as a donation, and you provide that before this money shall be paid to the treasurer of the State there shall be a written stipulation or guarantee that it will not be stolen, that it will not be misappropriated, that it shall not be applied to the maintenance of the militia, or the care of the insane, or the protection of society from depredation. A written stipulation is to be filed by the proper officers that it shall be devoted to the purposes for which it is appropriated.

That is not all, Mr. President. As if to add the crowning insolence to the proposition, the officers of the State are assumed to be so evilly disposed toward this proposition, they are assumed to be so incapable of discharging their duties which the State has reposed in them, so unworthy of confidence, that you require them to give to the General Government a bond, which the State does not exact, and they are required, if this bill becomes a law, not only to file their stipulation that the money shall not be stolen or misappropriated, but to give a bond to the United States Government with satisfactory security in the penal sum of $15,000, with two bondsmen, "approved by the clerk of a court of record in such State, conditioned on the faithful expenditure of and accounting for all moneys so received."

There are many other particulars in which I think the bill is open to criticism. It is tautological. It is inartificial. It is such a statute as ought not to be enacted in its terms. Look at section 2, in the declaration of the objects and purposes of these experimental stations, in line 8. Among other things that they are to inquire into is "the capacity of new plants or trees for acclimation." That is well enough, but they are to inquire into "the capacity of new plants or trees for acclimation within the isothermal limits represented by the climate of the several stations and their vicinity." It would look to the ordinary reader of language as if it were sufficient to provide that this experiment should be limited to "the capacity of new plants or trees for acclimation." That is definite; that is tangible; there can not be any difficulty about the meaning; but the framers of the bill are not content with that, they must have some rhetoric about it, and therefore this capacity for acclimation is to be "within the isothermal limits represented by the climate of the several stations and their vicinity." We are called upon to enact language like that into a statute, together with many other particulars in which the same redundancy is apparent.

If the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry think best to appropriate $15,000 per annum for the purpose of assisting experimental agricultural stations in the different States, I have no objection; well and good. But let us so provide that it shall be in assistance of, and in co-operation with, the existing authorities in those States, with annual report, if necessary, to the Commissioner of Agriculture, but not under the control of the United States Government, with the avowed purpose of reducing all of these institutions to absolute uniformity of work and of results.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I think that my colleague has made a mistake in assuming that the Agricultural College of Kansas, which justifies all his encomium, shares the feeling he has expressed about the object and terms of this bill. I have had direct communication from the official staff of that college to the effect that the passage of this bill in the form in which it was introduced and reported is desired. While I admit that it is subject to some verbal criticism, and that there is an exuberance of language in one of the sections, I trust that all of us are not to be confined to narrow limits in that respect because some people excel in that direction.

Nor do I feel that there is anything which is derogatory to the importance of the Agricultural College of Kansas, or any other college, in imposing terms upon new appropriations to be made, and to be expended under their direction. It may be true that according to the terms of the original trust the Government of the United States would not now have a right to prescribe a curriculum for all those colleges, and to dictate the manner in which they should expend even the revenues which they had derived from the bounty of the General Government, but it is certainly entirely competent for the Government, if it makes appropriations of money to be spent at those colleges, that it shall direct exactly how and under what circumstances and conditions it is to be expended.

While I have no doubt of the pecuniary responsibility of the trustees of all these colleges, and of their entire good faith, I happen to know that the treasurer of the Agricultural College of Kansas is required to give a bond with at least two good and sufficient sureties to respond in damages in case he should be false to his trust. So I do not believe that or any of the other officers of that college will object to giving bond to do as faithfully by the money to be appropriated under this bill, if it shall pass, as he stipulates that he will do in regard to the money which comes into his hands from other sources.

There may be a great many valid doubts about the propriety of the the passage of this bill, but I do not think it can be said that the conditions which are imposed upon the colleges in regard to the expenditure are at all onerous. It may be true, as my colleague has said, that the college to which he alluded is doing exactly this work, but even if it is doing this work it will enlarge its usefulness, its capacity, to give it this money, because the money which it is now using for this purpose it can then devote to something else. I have never heard of any of these institutions, or in fact of any other institution except the Treasury of the United States, that had as much money as it wanted.

This will enlarge the facility, the capacity, the opportunity of these colleges for the performance of the duties for which they were created. It will give in a large measure a direction, and, I think, a useful direction, to the exercise of their great functions.

I do not believe there is any more unconstitutionality, any more lack of Government power, nor any more impropriety in giving $15,000 a year to each one of the agricultural colleges of the country upon condition proposed on which the money shall be spent than it is to give it to them in a lump sum without conditions. I would not vote to give to any agricultural college anywhere of money without condition as to its expenditure.

It is not unusual to surround the appropriation of money with conditions as to its expenditure. The Legislature of the State of Kansas appropriates money each year for the support of the Agricultural College of Kansas and attaches a condition to every single dollar of it, as it ought to do. It is a proper exercise of legislative authority. The tendency and direction of it is good. We know out of abundant experience here that we can not attach too many conditions usually to the expenditure of public money which we appropriate out of the Treasury.

I shall be glad, so far as I am concerned, to vote for this bill, having some little interest in the measure, an interest which has been excited not by anything evolved out of my own inner consciousness, but excited by reason of applications which have been made to me by gentlemen connected with the Agricultural College of Kansas, by intelligent, public-spirited farmers of that State, men whose judgments I would take against that of my own in regard to matters of this kind, and who have said to me that they believed the bill ought to pass. For that reason chiefly and because on a critical examination of it I am satisfied that the main object is good, I have given to it my support in committee as I give it on the floor of the Senate.

If it can be amended so as to do more good than in its present shape I hope it will be so amended. I am not prejudiced against it in the slightest degree because it commits these experiments to the general supervision of the Commissioner of Agriculture. He is to-day a Commissioner at the head of a Department. I hope and believe that before this Congress adjourns he will be the Secretary of the Department, possessing a dignity by reason of the provisions of positive law, which will, I hope, require the President to take him into his Cabinet. I think, perhaps, that some portion of the distrust of the Agricultural Department, which finds vent here and elsewhere, will disappear when this Department, at sea heretofore very largely, denounced as outside the Constitution, starved in the matter of appropriations, shall be endowed with functions vital to the great agricultural interests of this country, and put on a footing with the other Departments of the Government.

It may be true that when we come to take into consideration what these free stations shall do, the enumeration of their powers and duties may be enlarged; it may be possible that we ought to decide in addition to somewhat circumscribe the language in which that enumeration is contained; but I will venture to say that anything like a close scrutiny of the statutes of the United States enacted during the last ten years will disclose many a law much more inartificially framed, and yet losing none of its effects because so framed, than this will be if enacted in precisely the terms in which it came from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

I think that we can err, if we are to err at all, somewhat on the side of an effort in this direction, in an effort to make our agriculture more productive, in an effort, through the medium of agricultural colleges, reinforced by stations of this kind, established by the General Government, and paid by it, to give a wider scope and direction to agricultural labor and in aid of profit.

Certainly, looking at the results which have attended this industry during the last few years, it is worthy a trial at least, to see if, with all that we have done for manufactures, we can not do something for that great industry in which are engaged seven-twelfths of the people of the United States.

In our zeal to look after the manufacturing interests of the country we have overlooked in a very large measure the men who are without power to combine, who are without the power of association and the consequent power to influence public opinion. They have been overlooked during the time when, lavishly, expensively, and even extravagantly, we have promoted, out of the revenues of the Government, out of the Treasury, taken from the tax-payers of the United States, other industries less vital to this Government and the great interests of this people than that of the agriculturists.

So, in the place of a denunciation of this bill, or anything akin to it, there ought to be an effort to make it what it ought to be. If it is inartificial, let it be corrected. If it is lacking in scope, let the scope be widened. If there is anything in it that ought to come out, let it be put out; but something of this nature is demanded. When I say "demanded," I do not mean to say that it comes in the shape of a command that we shall do this thing, as something which will put us under penalty if we do not do it, but I do mean to say that the intelligent organs of opinion, reflecting the interests as they reflect the wishes of the agriculturists of the United States, have asked Congress to pass this bill. They believe that it will be of use; and unless somebody with more experience or observation than they shall intelligently show to the contrary, I am in favor of passing it just as it is if necessary, or by making it better, if better we can make it.

Mr. HAWLEY. If, in anything I said when I was occupying the floor a short time ago, I seemed to depreciate the value of the Department of Agriculture, I am sorry for it. I would have said the same of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of State, the Adjutant-General, or any other member of a department of the Government, as to the undesirability of its having a joint control over State officers and State institutions. Everything of the description, everything analagous to this, should belong to either one or the other of the governments, the State or the National. If the National Government desires to assist and build up, as in the case of the original act, agricultural colleges, let it do so in accordance with what I think was the perfect plan of that bill, by a conditional grant to the States, to be accepted by them, the colleges to be chartered and governed in accordance with State laws.

I indicated that it was also in my judgment extremely undesirable that any officer of the Federal Government—I will make it broader than I did then, not making it invidious—should be establishing standards for work of private individuals or private corporations established under State laws.

I beg leave to ask that the amendment which I propose in the nature of a substitute for the bill may be read by the Secretary. It will then appear in the RECORD, where any one can find it, if that is desirable. I think it provides for every essential object sought by the pending measure, and it is framed upon the idea I indicated a few moments ago, that if it is desirable to do something it should be done by a direct gift to the States, subject to certain conditions. If there be no objection, I hope the substitute will be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read the substitute presented by the Senator from Connecticut.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert——

Mr. BUTLER. Before the Secretary proceeds with the reading, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether the language of his amendment is the language of the amendment lying upon our tables in print?

Mr. HAWLEY. The one entitled "Mr. HOAR'S amendment?"

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is, with the exception of a single phrase introduced:

To be specially provided for by Congress in the appropriations from year to year.

That is the only change of consequence. There is a minor amendment in line 6 of section 1, inserting the words "as so appropriated." There is another minor amendment on line 3 of section 3, inserting the words "relating to;" and another in line 11 of section 4, inserting the words:

Said bulletins and reports shall be transmitted through the mails as third-class matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed to read the proposed substitute.

The Secretary read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the sum of $15,000 per annum be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be specially provided for by Congress in the appropriations from year to year, to each State and Territory, for the purposes and under the conditions hereinafter described, to be paid quarterly, as so appropriated, beginning with the first of ——.

"SEC. 2. That said sum shall be inviolably applied, by each State and Territory which may accept and claim the benefit of this act, to the establishment and maintenance, in connection with the colleges established, or that may hereafter be established, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved July 2, 1862, entitled 'An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts,' or any of the supplements of said act, a department to be known as an 'agricultural experiment-station:' Provided, That in any State or Territory in which two such colleges may have been or may be so established the appropriation made by this act shall be equally divided between such colleges, unless the Legislature of such State or Territory shall otherwise direct.

"SEC. 3. That it shall be the object and duty of said experiment stations to conduct original researches or verify experiments relating to the physiology of plants and animals; the diseases to which they are severally subject, with the remedies for the same; the chemical composition of useful plants at their different stages of growth; the comparative advantages of rotative cropping as pursued under a varying series of crops; the capacity of new plants or trees for acclimation within the isothermal limits represented by the climate of the several stations and their vicinity; the analysis of soils and water; the chemical composition of manures, natural or artificial, with experiments designed to test their comparative effects on crops of different kinds; the adaptation and value of grasses and forage plants; the composition and digestibility of the different kinds of food for domestic animals; the scientific and economic questions involved in the production of butter and cheese; and such other researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States as may in each case be deemed advisable, having due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States.

"SEC. 4. That the grants of moneys herein authorized are made on the following conditions, to which, as well as to the provisions herein before contained, the previous assent of the several States and Territories shall be signified by legislative acts.

"First. It shall be the duty of the chief officer of each station to publish, at least once every three months, in cheap and popular form, a bulletin or report of progress, which shall be sent to the Department of Agriculture and to each other experiment-station established under this act, and furnished at cost, singly or by the year to subscribers. Said bulletins and reports shall be transmitted through the mails as third-class matter.

"Second. A full report of the operations of each station, including a statement of receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, shall be made annually and sent to each other station, and to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Agriculture of the United States.

"Third. Out of the first annual appropriation under this act a sum not exceeding one-fifth of the sum received for each station may be expended in the erection, enlargement, or repair of a building or buildings necessary for the work of such station, and thereafter a sum not exceeding 5 per cent. of such appropriation may be so expended.

"Fourth. No State or Territory shall be entitled to the benefits of this act unless it express its acceptance thereof by its Legislature within two years after the date of the approval of the act by the President.

"Fifth. Whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of the Treasury, from the annual statement of receipts and expenditures of any of said stations, that a part of the preceding annual appropriation remains unexpended by such station, such sum shall be deducted from the next succeeding annual appropriation to such station."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I believe that in Massachusetts the agriculturists and all those who have devoted attention to that subject are in accord with the general purposes of the bill and are desirous of seeing them carried out in some measure that shall be practicable and efficient to the ends that are sought.

I have had some trouble with the construction of the bill, and especially with its application to the organization in some of the States, particularly Massachusetts. Massachusetts has an agricultural college which is in successful operation and would be entitled under the provisions of the last section to the benefits of this appropriation, but she has also a separate experimental station established by law under an entirely separate organization. I have the act here. It is established with great distinctness, designed for some purpose (I am not familiar with the purpose which originated it) to be separate from the college. Its officers are specified in the law. The governor of the commonwealth is at the head of it, and in all respects it is a distinct organization as much as the college itself. It is carrying on experiments precisely as is contemplated by the bill.

Under the phraseology of the last section the college would have the benefit of the provisions of the bill and there would be two separate experimental stations in Massachusetts which would greatly cripple both of them. It would greatly benefit Massachusetts if they could be combined. For that purpose I ask that if the bill shall be adopted, or if the substitute shall prevail, that a proviso may be added to the last section. The object of it is to enable the State to obtain these benefits and combine the two together either at the college or at the station as the State shall deem best. The latter has its laboratory, it has its organization, it has its officers, it has the governor of the commonwealth and persons selected from the different agricultural associations to give direction to it, and in all respects it may be carried on precisely with all the benefits and safeguards, if the State should deem that the wisest way. If, on the other hand, the State should think it best to turn over its station to the college by an enactment, then the whole thing could be consolidated at the college. That is the object of the proviso, which I ask may be read.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he does not think it would be better that all of these——

Mr. BECK. I ask that the proviso may be read, so that we can understand what it is before the Senator from Vermont speaks to it.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proviso proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts. The amendment is not now in order. It will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

And provided further, That in States having colleges entitled under this section to the benefits of this act, and having also agricultural experiment-stations established by law separate from said colleges, such States shall be authorized to apply such benefits to experiments at stations so established by such States.

Mr. BECK. That is all right.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he does not think it would be far better if all these agricultural stations should be connected with the agricultural colleges, which have a staff of professers, all of them a professor of agricultural chemistry, and a laboratory, so that there would be some uniformity. Would it not be better that Massachusetts should change her State appropriation so that the college in that State could have the benefit of it rather than to make a miscellaneous kind of a bill of this sort which would allow such a divergence as I think would not work any good to the whole country?

Mr. DAWES. I will answer the Senator that my first impression would be that it would be better, but Massachusetts has had a pretty intelligent legislation upon the subject of the promotion of agriculture for a great many years. She established her agricultural college, under the auspices and under the lead of the distinguished Senator from Vermont, a good many years ago, but in 1883 (I think it was; I have before me the report for 1885), for considerations which seemed to the State to be wisest and best, she separated this experimental station from the college and established it as an independent institution under a separate control. It has the governor of the Commonwealth at the head of it. It has a corps of officers appointed separately, and assistants.

I do not set myself up as a teacher of agriculture, but there are reasons which have controlled the State. I understand the same thing is true in other States. To get the best results, the Senator will see it would be better to combine all these efforts, either at the college or at the separate stations. All the proviso requires is to leave the State to determine for itself which of the two courses it will pursue.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator seems to give dignity to this separate agricultural station because the governor is at the head of it. I desire to ask him if the governor of the State of Massachusetts is not ex officio a member of the board of trustees of the Agricultural College?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly. It is not because the governor is at the head of it, but it is because the State of Massachusetts established a separate station. I spoke of the organization to show how clearly and distinctly they had created a separate organization and government, with a corps of officers and professors and all to carry it on.

Mr. HOAR. This measure would break it up.

Mr. DAWES. Yes, this measure compels them to give the money to the college, but they may think it wise to consolidate these two, or they may think, for reasons which controlled them in creating the experimental station, that it is best to keep up the separate station. No ill can come from it if they are authorized to apply the benefits to this station. The object of my proviso is to keep up the State control in the manner in which the State chooses to carry it on, so far as it can be consistent with the general purposes of the law.

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is quite right in saying that if the bill is to pass (and I am in favor of the general principles of the bill) it ought to be left to the States to decide what they will do with the money in case there are two institutions or more than one institution where it might be applied. But the case of Massachusetts does not resemble the case in Connecticut, as my colleague has stated. No separate agricultural college was established in Connecticut, but the income of the bonds derived from the sale of the scrip was by statute to be paid over to Yale College to be applied to the Sheffield Agricultural School, which established an agricultural course, and to which pupils could be admitted free and have the benefit of the fund; and certainly it was within the purposes of the original act, and in connection with that an experimental station has been established in Connecticut. But since that time the State has established an entirely independent agricultural school, where, without knowing the exact facts, I suppose ten, perhaps fifteen, boys get an agricultural education to where one does in the Sheffield scientific school.

A good many of the farmers of Connecticut think that if this money is coming to Connecticut it ought to be applied in some way to an experimental station in connection with the agricultural school. There might be a division of opinion about that. I should not be prepared to say to-day what would be the best disposition of it, but I do think that that matter should be left to the States themselves in some way. The Senator's proposed amendment would not quite hit the case in Connecticut, but the principle which he tries to incorporate in the bill is manifestly right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Connecticut what they mean by the language "a department to be known as an 'agricultural experiment-station?'" and by requiring these stations to report to the Commissioner of Agriculture. The Department of Agriculture is now struggling to become independent; it is already a Department; and here seems to be a department within a Department. I would prefer some other word, if it would answer as well, to show that it is only a bureau.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator address his question to me?

Mr. BECK. Either to you or to the Senator from Mississippi. You both employ the same language.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hardly think the suggestion is applicable to anything in the amendment I propose. Does the Senator refer to the language of the second section?

Mr. BECK. Line 10.

Mr. HAWLEY. That provides simply for a department of a college—a branch, so to speak, of the old agricultural colleges.

Mr. BECK. I believe that is right.

Mr. VEST. I must confess my inability to understand the difference in principle between this measure and what is known as the Blair educational bill, to which I was certainly opposed and against which I voted. The objections that were made to that bill apply with equal force to this. The only difference between the two bills is as to the subject-matter for which the appropriations are made. There were some of us who then thought, and for one I still think, that Congress did not have the power to thrust its hand into the Treasury of the people and take out the money of the people and appropriate it for the purpose of education in the States. I believed then, and I believe now, that the subject of education is under control of the States and the States alone. Now it is proposed to take the money of the people out of the Treasury and apply it to the purpose of agricultural education in the States.

The only difference between the two bills is that the Blair bill provided for general education and this bill provides for agricultural education. Those of us who then opposed the Blair bill were well aware of the distinction which some of us undertook to establish, and in which I believe, between land belonging to the Government of the United States and money raised by taxation in its Treasury. We were then told that there was no difference between the lands and the money which is the result of taxation of the people. I think the Constitution of the United States gives to Congress the power to dispose of the public domain, but there is no power to grant money in the Treasury for the purposes of education in the States, whether it be agricultural education or education in its general features.

There is one single feature of this bill which shows that in the popular branch of Congress this very question was considered by the Committee; and in order to meet the views of those members who have some scruples in regard to the power of Congress to make such an expenditure it was concluded to put in this saving clause, and it is the last in the bill:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to impair or modify the legal relation existing between any of the said colleges and the government of the States in which they are respectively located.

Mr. GEORGE. That is not in this bill.

Mr. VEST. This is identical with the House bill.

Mr. DAWES. That is in the Senate bill.

Mr. VEST. I say it is in the Senate bill, and I am reading it from the Senate bill, which is identical with the bill reported in the House of Representatives.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be construed to impair or modify the legal relation existing between any of the said colleges and the government of the States in which they are respectively located.

What is the meaning of that provision? What is "the legal relation existing between" these colleges and the respective States? In the first section of the bill it is provided:

That in order to aid the Department of Agriculture in acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on subjects connected with agriculture, and to promote scientific investigation and experiment respecting the principles and applications of agricultural science, there shall be established, in connection with the college or colleges in each State established, or which may hereafter be established, in accordance with the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges," &c.—

That is, the States which may provide colleges—

"for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," or any of the supplements of said act.

Turning to that particular act of which this is an amendment, and which established the legal relation between the States and these colleges, what do we find to be the case? We find that Congress assumed no control whatever over these colleges, that there was a donation of public lands to the respective States for these colleges with exclusive control on the part of the States over these institutions, and no reservation of power as to what should be taught, as to what should be done. The only provision is that it should be for general agricultural purposes. Section 4 of that act provides:

That all moneys derived from the sale of the lands aforesaid by the States to which the lands are apportioned, and from the sales of land scrip hereinbefore provided for, shall be invested in stocks of the United States, or of the States, or some other safe stocks, yielding not less than 5 per cent. upon the par value of said stocks; and that the moneys so invested shall constitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall remain forever undiminished, (except so far as may be provided in section 5 of this act), and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated by each State, which may take and claim the benefit of this act, to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the Legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.

And subsequent sections provide, in order to put this matter beyond any question, that not one dollar shall be appropriated even for the repairing of a building. All this is under the control of the States. Congress throughout this whole act especially denies to itself the right to say what shall be done with this money, as to the branches which may be established in the various colleges, and the different objects of education therein.

But now what does this bill provide? Instead of recognizing this distinction, it goes on and prescribes eo nomine what shall be done with this money:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the object and duty of said experiment stations to conduct original researches or verify experiments on the physiology of plants and animals; the diseases to which they are severally subject, with the remedies for the same; the chemical composition of useful plants at their different stages of growth, &c.

And, more than that, the Commissioner of Agriculture has the power under this act to put his valuation upon the ingredients of commercial fertilizers, whatever that may mean, and that estimate of his is binding upon these experiment stations.

Mr. PLUMB. That I am proposing to strike out. If the Senator had been observant of the proceedings of the Senate, he would have known that.

Mr. HAWLEY. And that is wholly omitted in the substitute I propose.

Mr. VEST. Very good. Then that portion of my objection goes for nothing; but still the fact remains that throughout this bill the distinction made in the original act of which it claims to be amendatory between Federal and State control is absolutely ignored, and every Senator who votes for it as it stands now before the Senate, when the Blair educational bill is brought back here for our consideration at the next session will be estopped from making one single argument against that bill which was heretofore made in the discussion. Every Senator who casts his vote for this bill casts it in favor of the principles of the Blair educational bill and must close his mouth against the objections which I have quoted here to-day.

It is certainly not necessary for me to say that I am not here opposing agriculture. The State which I partly represent is one of the largest agricultural States in the Union. But there is something in this country besides any particular pursuit. Even if this was for the benefit of agriculture, I could not vote for a bill which I believe in its principles is directly opposed to the theory of this Government. I agree with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], who first spoke in regard to this measure. He declared his opposition to this perpetually recurring legislation in both branches of Congress that went to strike down all distinction between Federal and State powers until the people of this country are now being educated from day to day that the States are mere forms without power; that for everything which they seek they must come to Washington city and to the Congress of the United States.

There are distinctions between Federal and State powers still existing. I believe that one of them is this, and a fundamental distinction, that the States have the exclusive control over education. I know that we have established here a bureau of agriculture. It is very questionable whether the power to do that exists or not. Some of the best lawyers in the United States doubted it when it was established and doubt it to-day, but it was done, and that bureau is now in existence.

Mr. BECK. A Department.

Mr. VEST. It is called a "Department," but it is really a bureau, constituting one of the five bureaus in the Interior Department.

Mr. PLUMB. I beg pardon; it is an independent Department.

Mr. VEST. I know what the law is as well as any of the gentlemen, I think. It is called a Department, by that name, but it is simply a bureau.

Mr. PLUMB. Do you mean to say it is under the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. VEST. I mean to say it is one of the five bureaus really in the practical operation of that Department.

Mr. PLUMB. Under the Secretary of the Interior? Then I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. VEST. It may not be under the Secretary of the Interior. I do not mean to say that it is in that sense; but it is not a Department of this Government.

Mr. GEORGE. It has no connection with the Interior Department.

Mr. VEST. It is not a separate Department like the War Department, the Navy Department, or the Department of State. That is what I mean to say. I know a bill has been sent us from the House of Representatives making a minister of agriculture.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will allow me to say that the Secretary of the Interior has no more control over the Commissioner of Agriculture and his disbursements than he has over the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. VEST. I understand that, and yet I repeat what I said, that it is not a Department of this Government as the other great Departments are.

Mr. TELLER. The head of it is not a Cabinet officer.

Mr. VEST. That is what I mean; and so it is nothing else in the world but a bureau, called a Department, no matter under whose control it is.

I can not vote for this bill, Mr. President. I know I shall subject myself to some sort of ridicule as being bound by these old doctrines of State rights that are held to be obsolete, but my vote must be according to my judgment.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, it is quite well understood that the Senator from Missouri and I agreed when the Blair bill was under consideration, and that both of us voted against it and did what we could to prevent its passage; but I do not concur with him in saying that this bill is on all fours with the Blair educational bill. I regard it as entirely different.

This bill, as I understand, simply proposes to appropriate $15,000 a year in aid of each State agricultural college established under the act of 1862. The language of the Senator from Connecticut is ancillary or auxiliary to or co-operative with those colleges established at that time. While I might have doubted the constitutional power of Congress to make the appropriation for the establishment of those colleges, it has been acquiesced in so long as to have become an acknowledged and accepted fact. Therefore I do not understand that this bill is at all like what was known as the Blair educational bill. To that I saw very serious objections, and still entertain the opinion about that bill which I expressed at the time it was pending in the Senate.

I have read cursorily the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] in connection with the bill of the committee, and I must say that, with the exception of the provision which is proposed to be amended by the proposition of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], I can see very little difference in substance between them.

The bill of the committee simply proposes an appropriation of $15,000 for the establishment in each State of an experimental station in connection with the agricultural college established under the act of 1862, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] in discussing that bill lost sight of a very important section, section 3, which provides:

That the said experiment stations shall be under the direction and control of the trustees or other governing body of such colleges, who shall have power to appoint a director and such assistants as may in each case be necessary.

The Senator from Connecticut omits that provision from his substitute entirely, and I must say that I am surprised at that, in view of what fell from that Senator on the question of the rights of the States to control their own domestic affairs in their own way. To my mind that is a most valuable provision in this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. The substitute I draughted renders it impossible for the money to be under any other control, and so the proviso is not necessary.

Mr. BUTLER. I should be very glad if the Senator from Connecticut would point out in the original bill as it came from the committee that this money is under the control of anybody except the State. If there is anything in the bill to that effect I can not see it. It is distinctly stated in the bill that the money shall be used in connection with the colleges established under what was known as the land-scrip act of 1862. In my State there are two colleges getting the benefit of that money, one known as the South Carolina University, a State institution, and the other the Claflin University, endowed by some benevolent gentlemen of the State of Massachusetts. The fund is divided equally between them. There is an experimental farm in connection with each, one at Orangeburg and the other at Columbia. We also have what is known as a department of agriculture, controlled by a commissioner of agriculture with certain powers under the statute of the State.

I should be very glad to have the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] adopted. If it be inserted, I shall vote for the bill with the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] prevailing, because that gives to the States the right to put this matter under the control of the colleges, where they now exist, or under their department of agriculture, if they should see fit to establish one.

Mr. President, it was very refreshing to me this morning to hear sentiments such as those that fell from the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], after the action of this body in using the taxing power of the Government for the purpose of destroying one of the industries of the country at the dictation of another. It was refreshing to hear those Senators utter the sentiments we have heard them express, after the action of this body upon what is known as the interstate-commerce bill, and the bill known as the pleuro-pneumonia bill, and the Blair educational bill, and the oleomargarine bill, by which the taxing power of this Government was used for other purposes than that of raising revenue. But I confess that I have derived great comfort from the sentiments of those Senators who, I believe, voted for those measures.

To me those were the most alarming of all the signs of the times. The Congress of the United States, a separate and distinct branch of this Government, with its powers as separately and distinctly regulated by the Constitution as either of the others, stepping in and usurping (I use the word advisedly) the powers and the rights left to the States, attempting by what is known as an interstate-commerce bill to say what shall be the price of freight on a barrel of flour from the State of Maryland to the State of Georgia, or of a pound of bacon, and putting its hands in the Treasury of the United States and taking $70,000,000 out for the purpose of taking control of the common schools of the States, passing what has been styled an oleomargarine bill to suppress a legitimate industry at the dictation and upon the clamor of another! I say therefore, sir, that the sentiments of those two Senators and others fill me with pleasure and encouragement as to the future.

Now, sir, I confess that legislation of this kind does comport with my ideas of the powers of Congress. But we have the same right, the same constitutional power, it seems to me, to make this appropriation of $15,000 per annum to each State for the establishment of an experimental station in each State as we have to appropriate $100,000 to buy seeds to be distributed in the respective States.

If I remember aright, this department or bureau of agriculture—and I am not particular about what you call it—was established on an appropriation bill about 1843 or 1844, in which appropriation bill the sum of about three or four thousand dollars was appropriated. From that small beginning it has grown until now I find that we appropriate about half a million dollars a year for this bureau, or Department of Agriculture. We spend $100,000 of it for seeds, and I think I shall be able to demonstrate when that bill comes up that we might as well take that $100,000 and dump it into the Potomac River; and for one I very much prefer, if we are going upon questionable ground, to go in a direction where there will be some practical benefit to the farmers of this country.

We all remember, if I may be pardoned for making a personal reference—and I trust I may, for I have nothing but the kindest feelings for the present incumbent or those who preceded him—that when General Le Duc was Commissioner of Agriculture he was ridiculed and laughed at because he suggested the establishment of an experimental tea farm. I undertake to say that so far as practical results to the farmers of this country were concerned, General Le Duc's administration of that department or bureau was of more service to the farmers of this country than that of any other man who has had charge of it. It was said he was visionary, that he made experiments upon sorghum cane to see whether sugar could be made, and that he established a tea farm or wanted to establish a tea farm. He did establish one in my State, and I shall always believe that his successor made a great mistake in not continuing it. He did a great many things that were laughed at as visionary and unwise, but he is the only man who has been in charge of that bureau since I have known it who has given anything like practical benefit to the farmers of the country.

It was said he was visionary. Well, sir, I am rather inclined to think that visionary people are of great benefit to us. They put practical men to thinking. We are now appropriating $100,000 a year to buy seeds, and I sent some of the seeds assigned to me to one of my constituents, I believe purporting to be cabbage seed, and the result was that tobacco came up. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLATT. And flower seeds came up radishes. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. My friend from Connecticut says flower seeds came up radishes, and morning-glories are supplied to the South, as my friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] suggests. I remember sending a package of seeds with some outlandish name, which I shall not attempt to repeat, and they turned out to be nothing but China-berry seed.

So, Mr. President, I submit that, if we are going to keep up this Department, or bureau, of Agriculture, we had better begin to inject into it some little practical common sense and divest it of all this hullabaloo, if I may use the expression, that it is put there for the benefit of the farmers, and that you must buy $100,000 worth of seeds in order to enable the Senators and Representatives to electioneer with their constituents, for that is about all it amounts to. They are used as electioneering measures and my experience has been that in that aspect of the question, it cuts both ways, for if you send a package of seeds to John Smith and leave out Bill Jones at the same post-office, Bill Jones will be certain to get mad.

Then, sir, upon the whole, I shall vote for this bill appropriating $15,000 for the establishment of experimental stations and I would gladly double the amount. I would rather make it $30,000 than $15,000 to each State.

I submit to my friend from Missouri that this is not obnoxious to the objections which he submits, that it has no analogy whatever to the Blair educational bill. If there was such an analogy I would certainly vote against this bill and use my best endeavors to prevent its passage; but I repeat that with the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas in regard to the establishment of the standard fertilizers I shall support it and vote for it. I do not understand, however, that that provision undertakes to establish anything like the value of fertilizers.

Mr. PLUMB. Does not the Senator think it is liable to abuse?

Mr. BUTLER. I am very frank to say that I do; but I have no idea that the proper construction of the language would sustain the idea that it intends to establish the standard of value of fertilizers. It simply proposes, as do all of the boards of the respective States where they are established, to say that a standard fertilizer shall have such a percentage of ammonia, it shall have a certain percentage of phosphate of lime, and it shall have such a percentage of potash, and such a percentage of some other ingredients. As I now remember, the standard in my State is that each fertilizer shall have 2 per cent. of ammonia, perhaps 3, and it shall have 56 per cent. of phosphate of lime, &c. The object of this provision is that the standard shall be uniform all over the United States; that what is the standard in South Carolina shall be the standard in Georgia, in Kansas, in Rhode Island, in Minnesota, or wherever these fertilizers may be used.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator permit me a moment just there?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to know by what right, if my friend is so strict a constructionist, the Congress of the United States can tell a manufacturer in my country how much ammonia he shall put in a fertilizer that he has been in the habit of selling as the Jones fertilizer for many years, or how much of phosphoric acid, or anything of the sort, and to what extent that citizen would be obliged to pay attention to a Federal statute of that kind? You might as well direct the manner of constructing his fences, or the style in which he cures his tobacco, or anything of that sort.

Mr. BUTLER. I agree with the Senator entirely. I do not think the United States Government has anything to do with it at all, and therefore, as I said, I shall vote for the amendment to strike it out. I was only criticising the construction which had been put on the language of the act itself. I do not think the Congress of the United States has anything whatever to do with it.

In my State the standard is regulated by law, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and every sample of these commercial fertilizers offered for sale is subjected to an analysis and is tagged by the State chemist, and for that the State gets a fee of 25 cents, and from the whole business derives a revenue of fifteen or twenty thousand dollars a year. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that the United States Government has nothing whatever to do with it, but I have no idea that the framers of this bill intended to put a standard of valuation upon it, but simply intended to establish a standard up to which all of the fertilizers offered for sale should come in regard to the ingredients of which they were composed.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina did me the honor to include me with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] in observing that we had given him comfort. I am very glad of it. He made a mistake, however, in including me among those who had voted for the Blair educational bill, or among those who had voted for any pleuro-pneumonia bill in such form that it gave any Federal officer a right to go into a State and quarantine or destroy diseased cattle. No pleuro-pneumonia act of Congress has any proper force in the United States unless it confines itself to interstate or international commerce or quarantine, and I have voted for nothing to the contrary.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire simply to interrupt the Senator to say that I feel bound to admit that upon most of those questions, the Senator has, in my judgment, been very sound in regard to his constitutional views.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then I shall admit that the Senator from South Carolina is also very sound upon these questions. I point out to him that by supporting this bill even after he shall have stricken out the first fifteen lines of section 4, he will be in section 6 giving some money to the trustees of a State corporation without asking the leave of the State government in any form, and calling upon those State officials or officials of a State corporation to give bonds to the Federal Government for certain uses of money not contemplated in the instructions given those trustees by State laws.

Under the Morrill act the State created, as it had a right to do, certain agricultural colleges, defined the duties of trustees, professors, &c. They accepted the money subject to the conditions imposed. Now, the Senator would come in, if he approves this bill, and, nominally pursuing the path of the Morrill bill, would omit its wise precaution of giving the money to the State and asking the State to accept it under condition. He goes around that directly to the trustees of a State corporation and seeks to put them under bond to the Treasury of the United States. That is one of the criticisms I make on the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. All of these agricultural colleges, as far as I know, are State corporations. Their powers, franchises, and capacities were conferred by act of the Legislatures of the several States in which they are located and to which they belong.

Mr. HAWLEY. So I said.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, without knowing, for I have not examined all of them, what are the various powers and franchises granted to each one of these colleges, we may at least presume, I think, that they have the capacity to receive donations for the purpose of carrying out the objects for which they were created. I believe there has been no university, no college chartered, that has not among its capacities and franchises the power to receive donations in aid of the purposes of the institution. If that be true in reference to any agricultural college established in the Union, the corporation, the college has in advance the permission of the State to which it belongs to receive these donations, and therefore that objection is obviated. If it has not that power by the charter, then it can not take any appropriation made by this act unless the Legislature shall afterward give its permission for it to take it.

It is a mere question of power on the part of the corporation. We assume, the Committee on Agriculture assumed, the presidents of the agricultural colleges in convention assembled who recommended this bill all assumed that their various charters granted by the several States authorize them to receive this money. If they have that capacity by State law, then we have not invaded State sovereignty by making this offer.

Mr. HAWLEY. Nevertheless you have departed entirely from the theory of the original act to which this is an amendment, an addition, and I submit that there is a material and very great difference between a subscription made to a college in the ordinary way, whether dedicated to any particular trust or not, and a gift by the Federal Government which requires bonds from the trustees and imposes upon them a great enlargement of the duties they have under the State charter, changes radically the constitution of the college, requires labor that has never been done there, and asks them to give bonds to a Federal Department. It is substantially the reconstruction of a State college without permission of the State. It is asking these men to undertake a large additional work and to give bonds for doing it, while the State has imposed upon them a different labor.

The Senator says the State will consent. I have no doubt of it. Why not therefore give it to the State on certain conditions as we made the original grant, and let the State impose additional duties on its own officers?

Mr. GEORGE. Right here I would like to make an explanation of this bill on a point that seems to be greatly misunderstood. These experimental stations are really but an extension of the Agricultural Department of the General Government; that is all; and they rest and the provisions of this bill and the power to pass it rest upon the same identical power which enabled Congress to establish the Agricultural Department.

To illustrate—I want to make this plain, because the Senator from Missouri, I thought, misunderstood it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator let me finish my remarks? Then he can go on with that matter.

He says it is but an extension of the Morrill act. Must I repeat the provisions of that act again and again, that the money under conditions and trust was given to the State, and it was required that the State Legislature should accept that money for that distinct purpose? Now if the work of these colleges is to be reconstructed and greatly extended in the way proposed, is there any imaginable reason why the additional grant should not be given precisely in the same way to the State Legislatures and subject to certain conditions? It certainly will make a confusion in the management of these colleges to have two funds, one of them a fund held by the State, which it received from the Federal Government, to be disbursed by the State to the college in the usual way, and the other a fund for which the officers of the college go to the Treasury of the United States, making their reports and giving their bonds there and performing work that they are not required to do by their State charters. Suppose a State in any way materially reorganizes its college under the Morrill act and takes away from these officers certain duties, they still remain standing out as officers of the Federal Government for a certain purpose, receiving a distinct fund from the Federal Government for which they have neither gratitude nor obligation unto the State government. Section 8 of the committee bill says:

> That nothing in this act shall be construed to impair or modify the legal relation existing between any of the said colleges and the government of the States in which they are respectively located.

I doubt if the bill could do so, because the original grant was made without condition as to revocation of the money, and it has been accepted with its conditions. Nevertheless it does attempt to modify the duties of the officers created by the original act.

I want to call attention, if I did not do so sufficiently in my previous remarks, to a certain clause in section 6:

> And to maintain a farm of at least 25 acres in connection with such college.

If the amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be rejected, I trust the friends of the original measure will at least modify that in some important degree. In the amendment I propose that is left to the State as one of the natural things a State might do; keep a tract of land; five acres may be ample for experimental purposes. I know that less than that quantity answers in Connecticut for a valuable series of experiments in planting and in cultivation. Some of these stations are established, and to buy 25 acres would involve a very large sum, indeed, unless the land should be purchased at a very considerable distance from the station.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, proceeding in the train of thought upon which I was speaking when the Senator from Connecticut cut me off in my remarks, I desire to explain the legal relations of these agricultural experimental stations to the Government of the United States and to the agricultural colleges.

There is no attempt to reorganize the agricultural colleges by this bill. They stand upon the organization made by the act of 1862, granting the land which constitutes their endowment. This bill is but an extension, as I remarked when I was interrupted in my statement before, of the powers which were exercised by the Government in the establishment of the Agricultural Department. To make that perfectly plain, so that there can be no dispute about it, I have but to call the attention of the Senate to what is being done and has been done every year from the organization of that Department up to the present time.

The object of that Department being to aid in developing agriculture, what do we do first? We send out seeds. We are supposed to send seeds to the various States of the Union with the view of enabling the people in the States receiving them to make experiments by planting them and determine whether they are valuable for that purpose in particular localities or not. We are making an experiment when we send seeds. That is the object of sending the seeds, and we employ, in the making of that experiment, the persons to whom the seeds are sent and require them to report.

What is the next thing we do? We collect every year, or at least the Commissioner does, what is supposed to be valuable agricultural information, and we distribute that by the publication of a large number of his report. We go another step, and we find that the Agricultural Department has been charged directly by acts of Congress with the duty of making experiments on agriculture under its own supervision. Why, there was a sorghum farm here under the control of the Agricultural Department; there was a tea farm under the control of the Agricultural Department, as was mentioned by the Senator from South Carolina. These were purely experiments. Then we went further than that. We gave money and directed the Agricultural Department to make experiments to find out whether sugar could be made out of sorghum. We have been constantly making experiments in agriculture through the Agricultural Department.

This bill differs from those bills in this and in nothing else, that instead of requiring the Agricultural Commissioner to superintend directly in person these experiments, he is simply authorized (and I call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut especially to that point) to employ as the agents of the Government the various agricultural colleges in the United States for the purpose of making experiments. It seems to me that the only question is, not a question of power, as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Missouri, but whether the agencies which we propose to employ in the making of these experiments are proper agencies. I think they are. I think no better agency can be employed by the Government in making experiments in agriculture than the agricultural colleges themselves. It is their business; they are already engaged in it; and it seems to me, with due deference to Senators, that they are the proper parties to be employed.

Mr. President, it is objected, I believe, by the Senator from Kansas and also by the Senator from Connecticut that we undertake to invade State authority to the extent that we provide that State officials shall give bond to this Government. Let us see what that means when it is analyzed. As I said when I was first up, no agricultural college can receive this money unless in its charter it has capacity to receive it. If it has that capacity it has got it from the State which granted the charter. Having the capacity to receive, having the capacity to be employed as the agent of the Government, and being only employed by the Government as an agent in making these experiments, and it being settled, as I think I have shown, that they are the proper, the most proper, agencies to be intrusted with this duty, then the question is when the Government has employed an agent or a person, whether artificial or natural, in the performance of a duty which requires a disbursement of money advanced by the Government to that person whether it is a proper safeguard and precaution on the part of the Government advancing the money to this agency to take a bond requiring the money to be faithfully expended and accounted for; and that is all there is in it.

Mr. HOAR. When it is convenient to the Senator I wish to ask him a question on that point.

Mr. GEORGE. I am ready now.

Mr. HOAR. I see that this proposition is that "the trustees or other governing body of the college" shall execute this bond "under their corporate seal." Now, is it not true that such a bond as that would be binding upon the trustees and their successors, not upon the individual members of the board but upon the trustees as a corporation?

Mr. GEORGE. What part of the section?

Mr. HOAR. On the fifth page, sixth section, thirteenth and fourteenth lines. If there is anything in my point it can easily be avoided by an amendment. It is not important to the substance. This is a State corporation, a political corporation, a public corporation, having only such properties in its control as the State has furnished it with, except a certain gift from the United States which it received in the past under the old bill.

Now, this bill requires this board to execute under its corporate seal an obligation of pecuniary responsibility, to wit, that it will appropriate properly, according to the bill, the "moneys received." That obligation will be binding upon the successors of the corporation and will be enforcible against any trust funds in their hands. You are asking, then, without consent of the State, that a State corporation clothed with a public duty, intrusted with the State public funds, shall execute an obligation binding upon those funds in the hands of the successors of the particular trustees who execute the bond. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] says to me in private that that point had already met his attention, and that there is an amendment in existence which will remedy it. If that is so it is not necessary to trouble the Senate with it now.

Mr. GEORGE. No such amendment has been adopted.

Mr. HOAR. No, it has not been adopted. My point was to ask the Senator if the bill should not be amended in that respect.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, Mr. President, the answer to the Senator from Massachusetts is a very plain one, and I think I shall make it so plain that there will be no controversy or confusion about it.

Mr. HOAR. My proposition would lead to this result: that would be an illegal bond. You cannot say to the Treasurer of the State of Massachusetts or Mississippi, "You shall execute a bond binding on your successors, and on the State funds which come to their hands, to perform a certain function entrusted to you by the United States, or any other authority," any more than the State could require the Treasurer of the United States to bind money in the Treasury by some obligation he should take.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course they could not do that. Now, the answer to that is very plain. If the Senator from Massachusetts will give me his attention I think I can convert him. In the first place, this bill does not mean that the bond shall be executed by the trustees in their corporate capacity.

Mr. HOAR. Read the fourteenth line.

Mr. GEORGE. I will read it and I will show that it does not:

But no such payment shall be made to any station until the trustees or other governing body of the college at which such station is located shall have executed under their corporate seal, and filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, an agreement to expend all moneys received under this act for the sole and exclusive purpose and in the manner herein directed.

That is the agreement they are to execute, which is nothing more than an assent on the part of the corporate authorities to receive the money on the terms and conditions specified in the act. That clause is for that entirely. Of course the money is not to be paid to the trustees until they first agree—that is, execute an agreement under their corporate seal, manifesting, approving the agreement or assent of the trustees to receive the money and to expend it according to the terms of the act. That is nothing more than that assent on their part as a condition-precedent to their receiving the money, no bond, no obligation required. Now I read again:

But no such payment shall be made to any station until the trustees or other governing body of the college at which such station is located shall have executed, under their corporate seal, and filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, an agreement to expend all moneys received under this act for the sale and exclusive purpose and in the manner herein directed.

Mr. HOAR. Read on.

Mr. GEORGE—

and to maintain a farm of at least 25 acres in connection with such college.

Now that ends all that is embraced in the agreement, the assent of the trustees, and it is manifestly proper that they should execute an agreement of that sort. You can not convey to anybody anything unless that body is willing to receive it.

Mr. HOAR. Now read on.

Mr. GEORGE. I read on:

and shall also—

In addition to this agreement, which is a mere assent of the trustees to receive the money and to pledge their honor to appropriate it according to law—in addition to that, says the bill—and shall also have executed and filed with said Secretary their bond—

No corporate seal there; "their bond," their individual bond—in the penal sum of $15,000, with two sufficient sureties, approved by the clerk of a court of record in such State, conditioned on the faithful expenditure of and accounting for all moneys so received.

This is very plain. If it had been intended that the bond should be executed by the trustees in their corporate capacity on behalf of the college, there was no necessity whatever for any agreement to be made about it, because the bond itself was the agreement. The two provisions are inconsistent with the idea that both mean the same thing, and the language used is also inconsistent with the idea. Now, let us see what the agreement is. The agreement is to be under the corporate seal of the corporation. That is a pledge of honor; that is the assent of the corporation to receive; that is a statement on their part that they are willing to receive this fund and apply it properly; and now what do they promise to do? They promise—

To expend all moneys received under this act * * * in the manner herein directed, and to maintain a farm of at least 25 acres in connection with such college.

That is what they agree in the agreement. Now, let us see what they agree in the bond to do:

And shall also have executed and filed with said Secretary their bond, in the penal sum of $15,000, with two sufficient sureties, approved by the clerk of a court of record in such State, conditioned on the faithful expenditure of and accounting for all moneys so received.

That is their obligation. The other is the mere assent. The obligation is personal and also supplemented with the personal responsibility of two additional securities. That is not required to be executed under the corporate seal of the corporation. That is omitted ex industriâ. The fact that it was mentioned in the first place in reference to the agreement, which embraces things not embraced in the bond, is conclusive evidence, when it is omitted in the next clause, which relates wholly to the bond, that the corporate seal was not to be annexed, that it was to be the private, personal obligation of the trustees and their sureties.

Mr. HOAR. May I not ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator's interpretation of this section does not meet my assent, though he thinks it is very plain. I think it would be very easy to show that he is mistaken; but assuming for the moment the Senator's proposition to be true, take the case, for instance, of South Carolina. I am informed that the trustees of the Agricultural College of South Carolina are the governor and the judges of the supreme court. Now, does the Senator think it reasonable that the governor of a State and the judges of its supreme court should be called upon to give their individual bonds with sureties for the expenditure of a sum of money which may fall into the hands of their successors at any remote period?

The money may be received the day before the governor goes out of office, the day before the judge dies or resigns. Would you require official persons in every State and commonwealth, especially an official of the dignity and character of the State officers, who fill this office of trustee of these State colleges, to give personal bond, conditioned for the faithful application by their successors in office of sums of money? They might be made liable, as it is said a late Commissioner of Agriculture is, for an incorrect interpretation of the law. It seems to me a result so monstrous that the court never would put that construction upon it, and they would say that both these things are acts binding upon the trust fund in the hands of the trustees and importing no personal obligation whatever. Does the Senator think that a reasonable thing to do?

Mr. GEORGE. The criticism of the Senator from Massachusetts expends its whole force upon the supposed or alleged impropriety of the legislation, and does not touch the question of the meaning of the legislation.

It might be an onerous charge placed upon the governor of South Carolina and the judges of the supreme court of that State to execute the bond; it may be too onerous; but the fact that the law requires them to execute the bond is very plain. You can not argue that the plain words of the statute, as I have read and expounded them, do not mean what they say, because it is imposing an obligation upon these men which they would not likely be willing to assume.

But, Mr. President, even on that point the Senator fails. The argument will not stand even on the attempt to show the impropriety of the legislation, because we require outside sureties to sign the bond. Would it not be as unreasonable to expect the officers of the college themselves to be unwilling to sign the bond for an obligation which might have to be performed by their successors as it would be that sureties would sign the bond over which they had no control whatever?

But then the statute must receive a reasonable construction, and if the Senator's objection was good, as I think I have shown that it is not, it does not weigh a feather in my opinion against the propriety of the provision, unless Senators are willing to donate this money and to employ these agencies without any security whatever as to the faithful application of the money.

For this reason, if his construction of the bill be correct and we require the official corporate obligation of these trustees so that it binds the funds of the college, then they have no power to execute such obligation by reason of the requirement here. It can only be by virtue of a power conferred upon them by the State Legislature, and if the State Legislature is willing to endow them with the power of executing such a bond I do not see why we can complain.

So at last it comes to this: If they have no such power by the charter or by the laws of the State under which they act, this proposed statute does not confer the power upon them. If they have such power, then if it be right in appropriating this large sum of money for us to require an obligation for its faithful application and accounting, it is but a proper exercise of the power on the part of these authorities conferred on them by the Legislature of the State.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, when this bill was brought in I supposed it was a bill to apply or appropriate money to the States to be disbursed by the States in the establishment of agricultural experimental stations. On carefully reading the bill I see that that is not the case. It is a bill appropriating money to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture by the trustees of the agricultural colleges, with a responsibility secured by bonds and securities directed to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States in accounting for the money, and the only mention that is made of the State in this bill is as follows:

> That for the purpose of paying the salaries and wages of the director and other employés of said stations * * * the sum of $15,000 per annum is hereby appropriated to each State.

That is all; the money is to be appropriated to each State in this Union by act of Congress. The State would be the party, naturally, that under any ordinary bill would be entitled to draw the money, and would be required and entitled also to dispose of it; but after saying that the money is appropriated to the State, what is the next step in the bill?

> To be paid in equal quarterly payments, on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year, to the treasurer or other officer duly appointed by the aforesaid boards of trustees to receive the same.

The money is appropriated to the State. The board of trustees, or the officer appointed by them, must receive the same; the first payment to be made on the 1st of July, &c.

> But no such payment shall be made to any station until the trustees or other governing body of the college at which such station is located shall have executed, under their corporate seal, and filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, an agreement to expend all moneys received under this act for the sole and exclusive purpose and in the manner herein directed.

That is the first agreement.

> And to maintain a farm of at least 25 acres in connection with such college.

That is the second branch of this honorable undertaking.

Now, we have it that the money is being paid to the trustees or their agent. It is being expended under the direction of the board of trustees upon an agreement that they will do two things: that they will expend it in accordance with the act, and that they will maintain a farm of at least 25 acres in connection with the agricultural college.

Further, in order to make it perfectly plain that the relationship is direct and unbroken between the Government of the United States and the management of these stations and the board of trustees and all of their agents, a further guarantee is put into the bill:

> And shall also have executed and filed with said Secretary their bond, in the penal sum of $15,000, with two sufficient sureties, approved by the clerk of a court of record in such State—

Not approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, but approved by the clerk of a court of record in the State—> conditioned on the faithful expenditure of and accounting for all moneys so received.

Can anything be more palpable than that the State has nothing to do with this except the mere mention of the name of the State as a party to whom the appropriation is made, and that a State officer, a clerk of a court, is required and authorized to approve a bond executed by these trustees or sureties in the sum of $15,000 conditioned on the faithful expenditure of the money?

I confess that is rather a queer mixture of the authorities of the two governments in connection with this business. When we come to analyze the subject the State is left out, except simply that there is a complimentary mention made of it by reference to the clerk of one of its courts, a court of record. It has no more authority over this money after we appropriate it than I have. An act of the State Legislature would not touch it. A direction of the State Legislature to its own corporation as to how it shall expend this money and how it shall account for it would never touch the subject at all.

The board of trustees of this State corporation would say: "Your acts go for nothing, because we are not obliged to account to you in any way whatever. You have made no appropriation of this money; you can not make any. It was not given to you to appropriate. Your assent is not required in any part of this bill to anything that we do. We are entirely independent of you in the expenditure of this $15,000, unaccountable to you for the manner of its expenditure, and therefore we have nothing to do with you in respect of the disposal to be made of this fund."

That is the bill. If there is anything else in it in which the State has the slightest interest or power, I fail to perceive it.

Now the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut comes in, and it proposes to bestow this money upon the State and to allow and require the State to appropriate and to apply it to the specific purposes named in this act. That is something which we can understand. There is not a commingling of authority and a division of responsibility and accountability but that is clear and clean. We understand that when this money goes to the State it goes for a specific purpose; that the State must take it and appropriate it to that purpose, and can not appropriate it to any other; and that is the end of it.

Could it have been the purpose under the guise, yes, the deceptive guise, of paying this little compliment to the States, to draw this money into the hands of these boards of trustees of these State corporations, to be expended entirely by the Government of the United States through its agents, and to be accounted for to the Secretary of the Treasury, with a view of convincing the people of the United States that the money we are bestowing upon these agricultural colleges is money handed over to the States for these purposes? If so, sir, it is entirely illusory. There is not a lawyer, I think, in the world who can work out the proposition that the State has the slightest interest in this money or the slightest control over it under the terms of the bill.

If we intend to give it to the colleges directly, let us do so. What is the use of mentioning the State when it has no power in connection with the subject? Let us give it directly to the colleges, if we intend to do it. If we intend to give it to the States for the purpose of enabling each of them, according to its best judgment, its experience, and the wisdom of its policy, to bestow the money in the nurture and expansion of these agricultural experimental stations, let us do it. Let us do one thing or the other.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Pending that motion I move that the Senate adjourn. It is so late that we can not do anything in executive session.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to offer an amendment to the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. I propose an amendment to the bill, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and ordered to be printed. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 18, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 17, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SNYDER, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. FORNEY, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. DOCKERY, for this day, on account of sickness.

HENRY A. PAUS.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1261) for the relief of Henry A. Paus, and put it upon its passage. The objection which was heretofore made to the bill has been withdrawn provided an amendment striking out certain words in the bill is adopted. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion resting upon the military record of Henry A. Paus, late a private in Company K, Nineteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and to issue to the said Henry A. Paus an honorable discharge from said organization as of the 20th day of April, 1862; and the said Henry A. Paus shall be entitled to the same pay, bounties, and benefits as if he, on said 20th day of April, 1862, had been lawfully discharged or mustered out of Company K, Nineteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

Mr. O'DONNELL. The Clerk will please read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to strike out all the remainder of the bill after the words "sixty-two," in line 9; as follows:

"And the said Henry A. Paus shall be entitled to the same pay, bounties, and benefits as if he, on said 20th day of April, 1862, had been lawfully discharged or mustered out of Company K, Nineteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers."

Mr. OATES. With that amendment, I withdraw the objection I made to the bill before.

Mr. TAULBEE. Has this been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs favorably?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir; they make a very strong report in its favor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'DONNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

O. F. ADAMS.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9868) for the relief of O. F. Adams, and put it upon its passage. The objection which was made to the bill a few days ago is withdrawn provided the amendment which I shall offer is adopted, to strike out of the bill the last three words, "between the States," and insert the words "of the rebellion."

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the sum of $1,450 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay O. F. Adams, of Washington, N. C., for services rendered the Government during the war between the States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SKINNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, WORCESTER, MASS.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (S. 230) for the erection of a public building at Worcester, Mass., and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices, at the city of Worcester, Mass. The plans, specifications, and full estimates of said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and building complete, the sum of $250,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Massachusetts shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report in that case read.

The report (by Mr. WILKINS) is as follows:

The city of Worcester is situated in the center of Worcester County, the great central county of Massachusetts. It is 44 miles west from Boston. It is familiarly known as "The Heart of the Commonwealth." More than any other city in the State, excepting Boston, is it a railroad center. The Boston and Albany Railroad passes through it from east to west. The Worcester and Norwich runs southwesterly into Connecticut and to the Sound; the Worcester and Providence southeasterly through the Blackstone Valley to Providence; the Worcester and Nashua northeasterly into New Hampshire and Maine; and the Worcester division of the Fitchburg northwesterly into Vermont and through the Hoosac Tunnel. More than one hundred trains arrive and depart daily. Its central position and especial railroad facilities have caused it to be recognized as the fittest place in the State for conventions of all kinds. It is the shire town of Worcester County, and its courts are in session almost without intermission. Its population is over 70,000. It is the second city in the State in population, wealth, and business. Its population is largely engaged in mechanical pursuits, and it owes its peculiar growth and prosperity largely to the fact that its business establishments are owned by individuals rather than by corporations, and by residents rather than by non-residents.

The following statistics show the business of the Worcester post-office as compared with that of the other cities of Massachusetts:

Worcester is a depositing office for one hundred and seventy fourth-class offices in Worcester County and Eastern Connecticut.

The number of post-offices now occupying Government buildings in the United States is eighty-seven, and of this number Worcester is excelled in gross receipts by only twenty-five, and in net receipts by twenty-two.

The fact that her post-office business yields a net revenue of $53,000 should be taken into account in this connection. It surely seems incongruous, if not unjust, that the Government should construct costly buildings in cities, the income of whose public business does not nearly pay the expense, and refuse them to cities which, like Worcester, show a large surplus.

The amount of the appropriation asked for is based somewhat upon the estimated cost of a suitable site. It assumed that to comply with the requisitions of the Government, an area of not less than 15,000 square feet would be required. The price of any land suitable for the purpose would vary between the extremes of $5 and $10 a square foot. Calling it $7.50 would make the expense of the site $112,500. To this should be added a sum large enough to construct a building fit for the purpose and calculated to afford permanent postal, revenue, and court accommodations for a city whose future promises equal growth with its past.

In view of the foregoing facts, your committee respectfully recommend the passage of Senate bill 230.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, OPELOUSAS, LA.

Mr. IRION. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (S. 324) for the erection of a public building at Opelousas, La., and put it upon its passage with the amendments recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
